up tank and to re-excavate the tank, but no rent was reserved for the tank. The tenants acting upon that sanad spent money in re-excavating the tank,

Held—That in the circumstances and having regard to a long course of conduct implying the rent-free character of the tank the Raja was estopped from revoking the license granted and from asserting that the subject-matter of the grant should come under a new liability.

RAMSDEN v. DYSON (2), AHMAD YAR KHAN v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE (3), PLIMMER v. THE MAYOR, ETC., OF WELLINGTON (4) referred to.

Per CASPERSZ, J.—The Plaintiff had every opportunity to have the tanks assessed with fair rent but having deliberately abstained from so doing, he must be taken to have confirmed the niskar grant and could not afterwards avoid it.

As the right of assessing rent on the land had not yet accrued, and as the tenants in this case had not asserted a title adverse to the proprietary right of the Raja, the suit was not barred by limitation under Art. 130, Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

BENI PERSHAD v. DUDHNATH (7), ISHAN CHANDRA v. RAM RANJAN (8), BIR CHANDRA v. RAJ MOHAN (9) considered.

Per CHATTERJEE, J.—In construing the sanad regard must be had to the fact that it was given by a Hindu Raja and it must be construed in accordance with the views of Hindus with regard to the sacred duty of digging tanks for water supply. In such view the sanad could not be understood as implying that the Raja intended anything other than the grant of land for the re-excavation of ancient tanks or that he intended that rent should be assessed thereon

It was not a license in the sense in which the word is used by English lawyers.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of April 1910, against the decree of Mr. A. H. Cuming, District Judge of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 3rd of January 1910, affirming that of Babu Krishna Kumar Sen, Munsif at Comilla, dated the 1st of December 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

CASPERSZ, J.—The Plaintiff is the Maharaja of Hill Tipperah. He also owns what the plaint describes as “a vast zemindari,” that is, Chakla Roshanabad in the British district of Tipperah. The suit giving rise to this second appeal was brought by the Maharaja to have his zemindari title declared in respect of a tank and its banks and for khas possession and mesne profits. In the alternative, Plaintiff claimed to have the lands assessed with fair rent. The defence was that the tank had been niskar (rent-free) since the time of the Defendant's ancestor in virtue of a sanad chiti, dated the 14th Magh 1259 (26th January 1850), granted by the predecessor of the Plaintiff.

The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation; and, on appeal, the District Judge has arrived at the same conclusion.

RAJAH BIRENDRA KISHORE MANIKYA BAHADUR v. AKRAM ALI.

The Plaintiff appeals. This is one of many appeals involving the same question—the right to assess the niskar tanks in the Chakla. We have heard the arguments in this appeal and in Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1963, 2515 and 2523 of 1910 which may be regarded as test cases the result of which, it is said, will govern both the other connected appeals pending in this Court as also the thousands of suits and appeals that are awaiting disposal in the lower Courts in the districts of Tipperah and Noakhali.

It is argued for the Plaintiff-Appellant that the sanad chiti amounted to a mere license to re-excavate the silted up tank and it was revocable by the grantor, or, at all events, by his successor in interest: that the tenant never set up any hostile title to, or adversely possessed, the land of the tank, and that the suit was instituted within 12 years from the 25th May 1896 the date of the final publication of the record-of-rights prepared under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The duty of zemindars to maintain the tanks on their zemindaries was plainly pronounced by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Madras Ry. Co. v. The Zemindar of Carvatenagarum (1):—"The tanks are ancient, and formed part of what may be termed a national system of irrigation recognised by Hindu and Mahomedan Law, by regulations of the East India Company, and by experience older than history, as essential to the welfare, and indeed, to the existence of a large portion of the population of India. The public duty of maintaining existing tanks, and of constructing new ones in many places, was originally undertaken by the Government of India, and upon the settlement of the country has, in many instances, devolved on zemindars, of whom the Defendant is one. The zemindars have no power to do away with these tanks, in the maintenance of which large numbers of people are interested, but are charged under Indian Law, by reason of their tenure, with the duty of preserving and repairing them."

The facts of the case from which these remarks are quoted are different from those now under consideration, but the relative rights and obligations of the present parties are similar. The Plaintiff, a Hindu Raja, should be slow to depart from the ancient laws and customs regulating the supply of water for the necessary purposes of his tenants. The Maharaja did not maintain the tanks in the Chakla: Consequently, they silted up, and were re-excavated by the tenants concerned under sanad chitis one of which has been produced by the Defendant-Respondent. This sanad provides that tenant having applied for re-excavating the ancient and unclaimed tank called Na ir Mahomed, an Amin was appointed to ascertain the area and boundaries thereof; that the area was ascertained (2 kanis, 2 gundas, 2 karas, 2 krants) of the four banks; that this chiti was granted in order that the tenant should construct embankments on the former sites of embankments of the tank lying within the boundaries so ascertained and specified: and that the tenant should re-excavate the tanks by means of matials (earth-cutters). Nothing was said in the sanad about rent being payable either for the watery portions or the area of the four banks of the tank.

The case is clearly not one within the ancient prohibition which, we are told, was in force in the early days of last century, that a rent-free grant was not valid against the heir or purchaser of the grantor. The sanad did not confer any rent-free title; admittedly, it was valid to allow a tenant to spend money and re-excavate an old tank: no contrary view is possible. It is likewise clear that a license to do a thing, to effect improvements, cannot be revoked after the improvements have been carried out, for, in such a case the parties cannot be relegated to their former positions. The sanad is merely a piece of evidence showing the intentions of the parties and the nature of the subject-matter. If it had been intended to assess the tank at some future date, some apt and necessary provision would have been made among the terms of the document. If any rent had been previously paid for the tank, or any part of it, that fact also would have been mentioned. The grantor is, in the circumstances, estopped from asserting that the subject-matter of his grant should come under a new liability of which there is no indication whatever in the previous history of the tank. I take it as beyond controversy that the word tank includes the banks which are necessary for the enjoyment of the water.

(1) L. R. 1 I. A. 364 (885) (1874).

RAJAH BIRENDRA KISHORE MANIKYA BAHADUR v. AKRAM ALI.

The rule of estoppel stated in Ramsden v. Dyson (2) was applied by the Judicial Committee in Ahmad Yar Khan v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (3), where the persons undertaking to construct a canal were deemed to have "acquired a proprietary interest in so much of the Government lands taken for the purpose of the canal as was required for its construction and maintenance and also a right to have the waters of the Sutlej admitted into the canal so long as the canal was used for the purpose for which it was originally designed." The case of Ramsden v. Dyson (2) was also approved in Plimmer v. The Mayor, etc., of Wellington (4), where a wharfinger who had spent money on land on which he had entered under a license was deemed to have acquired a perpetual right to the same. The Privy Council held that such a license could not, in view of subsequent events, be revoked.

It is also well-settled that if a person having a right to avoid a transaction on any legal ground and being aware of and reasonably capable of enforcing such right manifests an intention to confirm the transaction, he cannot afterwards avoid it [Wright v. Vandeplank (5), Jurrott v. Aldam (6)]. The Plaintiff had every opportunity, both before and particularly in the settlement proceedings, to have the niskar tanks assessed with fair rent: he deliberately abstained from so doing. He now comes but not within a reasonable time.

Again, it is a matter of common knowledge that private owners in this country have, in times past, granted lands for various public purposes—such lands are liable to resumption when the particular purpose has been exhausted. There is, in such cases, a reversion in the grantor. On the finding, that these niskar properties are still used as tanks, and not for the purpose of cultivation, or otherwise, in opposition to the intentions of the grantor, the time has not arrived for the Plaintiff to re-enter or to insist upon the payment of rent.

The Plaintiff's suit is, therefore, not maintainable. But it remains to consider and decide the plea of limitation upon which we have heard the arguments of the learned Vakils engaged. In my opinion, the District Judge has fallen into error in dismissing the suit on this ground. Art. 130 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, 1908, provides a period of 12 years within which a suit must be brought for the resumption or assessment of rent-free land, and the period begins to run when the right to resume or assess the land first accrues. In the views already expressed, the Plaintiff's right has not yet accrued. He will have his remedy when, if ever, the tank again becomes silted up and is no longer used for the purposes contemplated in the year 1850. Apart from this, when the settlement proceedings were being conducted on the 21st November 1894, the tenant never asserted any right to hold rent-free forever either the tank or its banks. He merely set up his sanad chiti and the Revenue Officer caused a formal entry to be made that, as a fact, the tank with its banks was held rent-free "as not paying rent." There was in my opinion no clear and unequivocal assertion of adverse possession by the tenant in this case. And as the obligation to pay rent is a recurring obligation the landlord cannot be barred by Art. 130.

In Beni Pershad v. Dudhnath (7), it was observed by Lord Davey, that a mere notice by a person holding for his life, that he claimed to be holding on a perpetual or hereditary tenure, would not make his possession adverse within the meaning of the Limitation Act, so as to bar a suit for possession on the expiration of his life tenancy. No such claim was ever advanced by the niskar holders in the present litigation. Their contention merely extended to the enjoyment of the tanks, rent-free, for so long as they were required for the legitimate purposes which the parties had in view when the tanks were re-excavated. It is also impossible to conceive of a claim to hold adversely being made in respect of a right to receive rent. That right is not a limited interest; it is in fact the entire interest of the landlord. Therefore, the rule adopted in Ishan Chandra v. Ram Ranjan (8), with regard to the dispossession of a landlord, in a limited sense, is not applicable to the present facts; the Plaintiff's tenants have not encroached on any lands not covered by the niskar tanks.

The case of Bir Chandra v. Raj Mohan (9) to which our attention has been called originated in the same part of the district (Chakla Roshanabad) but the facts were widely different from those of the present litigation. It is, however, some authority for the Plaintiff's contention that Art. 130 really covers cases of resumption under the old Regulations and does not apply to suits such as those under appeal. It is manifest that the tanks with which we are now concerned were never dissociated from being a part of the revenue-paying properties of the zemindar: and no question of limitation can arise in such a case as this.

The result of this appeal coincides with the decision of Chitty and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ., in an unreported case, S. A. No. 2551 of 1908, dated the 3rd February 1911. The decision on the question of a belagân entry in the record-of rights in S. A. No. 1327 of 1909 (dated the 6th December 1910) is also consistent with that now arrived at. As I decided that case, I may observe that the facts are distinguishable, but that the word belagán (not assessed with rent) which has a special significance in Behar has its counterpart here in the expression kar dharīya nai and means that rent was not imposed in the settlement proceedings.

The decree of the lower Appella'e Court is affirmed but not for the reasons given in the judgment of the District Judge. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

CHATTERJEE, J.—The facts shortly are that in the year 1850 the ancestor of the Defendant applied to the then Maharaja of Tipperah for being allowed to re-excavate an unclaimed silted up tank in the Maharaja's Zemindari, Chakla Roshanabad. This permission was given by a chiti bearing the Maharaja's seal and the grantee was required to re-excavate the tank by employing earth-cutters and the only restriction imposed was that the limits of the ancient tank were not to be exceeded: there was no provision for the payment of any rent presently or in future and nothing was said as to the duration of the grant. The ancestor of the Defendant re-excavated the tank at a considerable expense and it has been in the exclusive possession of the family of the Defendants from father to son and still supplies good drinking water.

There was a survey and settlement of the Chakla in 1894 and the tank with its banks was numbered as 253 and 252 and included within the nij jama of the Defendant. The Defendant objected that he held both these numbers under a niskar title granted by the chiti of 1850 which he produced. The Maharaja's agent asserted that the banks of the tank were included in the jama of the Defendant but did not say anything as to the tank. The Settlement Officer recorded both numbers as separate from the jama and 'not paying rent.' The order of the Settlement Officer is dated the 21st November 1894. The exclusive possession of the Defendant continued as before and no action was taken by the Maharaja until the 25th of February 1908 when he filed the suit giving rise to the present appeal on the allegation that the tank and its banks were his khas property and the Defendant had no right to retain possession of the same without his consent. He prayed for recovery of possession and in the alternative for assessment of fair rent.

The Defendant pleaded niskar title under his sanad, estoppel and limitation.

The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation and the learned District Judge not only upheld the decision on the question of limitation but held that the sanad intended to grant a rent-free title.

The Maharaja has appealed mainly on two grounds, 1st, that the sanad does not confer a rent-free title and is at best a license which can be revoked at any time and, 2ndly, that the suit is not barred by limitation.

I will deal with the sanad first. In construing this document it must be borne in mind that it was granted by a Hindu Raja for the re-excavation of an old tank. According to Hindu Shastras the grant of land for digging tanks, the digging of new tanks and wells and the re-excavation of old ones is supremely meritorious.

This is when such works are done without permission.

Vishnu Dharmottar, quoted in Raghunandan's Jalasayotsargatatwa.

As a Hindu Raja presumably possessing all the instincts and traditions of a Hindu Raja it is impossible to conceive that the ancestor of the Plaintiff intended anything other than the grant of the land for the purpose of the re-excavation of the ancient tank. He could never have meant to grant a mere license as understood by English lawyers and a consistent course of conduct makes it quite clear that that was so. It is admitted that it was an ancient tank previously possessed by some one or other of the tenants, for the sanad calls it a bewaris tank, i.e., one in respect of which there were no claimant as heirs : there is no suggestion that it was ever assessed to rent : there are no zemindari paper showing that it was ever considered as a part of the rent-paying lands of the mehal : it has come down from father to son for at least sixty years without any claim having ever been made for rent or resumption : even in 1894 during the settlement operations the Raja's agent did not even assert that the tank was assessable and in respect of the banks of the tank merely said that they were parts of the separate holding of the Defendant : even after that for over 12 years, i.e., until February 1908 we see no attempt to assess or resume the land. It may be noted that there are hundreds of such tanks in Chakla Roshnabad, possessed by the tenants of the Maharaja in the same manner some with sanads and some without and in respect of none of them any claim for assessment or resumption has ever been made and I have no doubt that neither the Maharaja nor the tenants ever understood that these would be ever resumed or assessed to rent and I am of opinion that the Defendant is entitled to hold the tank with its banks without payment of rent so long as the tank serves the purpose for which the grant was made.

The matter may also be considered in another light. When the former Maharaja granted possession to the ancestors of the Defendant to spend an indefinite amount of money for the reconstruction of the tank, he encouraged and created an expectation in the grantee that he would be allowed to enjoy the improved property without any let or hindrance, and his heir the present Maharaja is equitably bound to give effect to such expectation. If that were not so the Maharaja might evict him at any time after the money had been spent or demand an impossible rate of rent. This principle was followed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ahmad Yar Khan v. The Secretary of State (3) and is eminently applicable to the facts of this case.

In this view of the rights created under the sanad as interpreted by the surrounding facts the question of limitation does not arise. For so long as the tank continues to be a tank no assertion of adverse title by the Defendant can give the Maharaja a cause of action for resumption or assessment of rent. See Beni Pershad v. Dudhnath (7). Besides as the Defendant relied upon his sanad as the root of his title and claimed niskar title under the sanad and not by adverse possession as an alterative source of title, his possession cannot be used for any purpose other than that of explaining the grant on which he relies. See Labrador Company v. The Queen (10).

In this view of the case I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

—Orissa—Sale under Act VIII of 1865, B. C.
—Extension of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Repeal of inconsistent provisions of Act VIII of 1865, B. C.

In Orissa, since the extension of Ch XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a sale under Act VIII of 1865 is liable to be set aside on an application under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the extension to Orissa of the provisions of the former Act having had the effect of repealing the inconsistent provisions of Act VIII of 1865.

This was a Rule against an order of Mr. Syed Wasit Ali, Deputy Collector of Kendrapara, dated the 18th of February 1911.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Chandra Mujumder for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to cancel an order of refusal to vacate a sale held on the 16th January 1911, under Act VIII of 1865 read with sec. 105 of Act X of 1859.

(7) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 156 (1899).

BARKAL PARIDA v. JOGENDRA NATH SEN.

The Court below has held that as the sale took place under the provisions of the Acts mentioned, it was not liable to be set aside under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, notwithstanding that Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act which includes sec. 174 was extended to the district where the sale took place, on the 3rd January 1907. The sole question in controversy between the parties therefore is as to the precise effect of the extension of sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to that district. It has been contended on the behalf of the Opposite Party that as sec. 174 is inconsistent with the provisions of sec. 11 of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) the provisions of the latter section ought to prevail. In support of this argument reliance has been placed upon sec. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides in sub-sec. (2) that where a portion only of the Act has been extended to the Division of Orissa or any part thereof, so much of the provisions of the enactments in force there as is inconsistent with the portion extended shall be repealed in that division or part. We have been invited to read this provision with Sch. I to the Bengal Tenancy Act which makes mention of Act X of 1859 but not of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.). It has been argued that if the intention of the Legislature was that the extension of any portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act would by implication operate as a repeal of the provisions of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) mention would have been made of the latter Act in the first schedule. In our opinion there is no force in this contention. The provisions of sec. 2, sub-sec. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act were no doubt introduced by way of excessive caution, West-Derby v. Metropolitan Life Assurance (1). Even if such a provision had not been incorporated in the Bengal Tenancy Act, the effect would have been that as soon as any portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act was extended it would by implication repeal the inconsistent provisions of the pre-existing statutes. [Dean of Ely v. Bliss (2), West Ham v. Fourth City (3)]. In such a case the maxim applies leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. This is also sufficiently indicated by the provisions of cl. (f) of sec. 195 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It would be meaningless to hold that sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been extended to the Division of Orissa but that it has no application to sales held there under Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.). No doubt there is an inconsistency between the two sections to this extent that whereas sec. 11 of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) renders it obligatory upon the Court to confirm the sale and thereby to create a valid title in the purchaser upon the happening of specified contingencies, sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act entitles the judgment debtor to have the sale vacated upon the payment of a prescribed sum. But the provisions of the latter statute must clearly prevail over the inconsistent provisions of the earlier statute.

We may add that sec. 4 of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) plainly indicates that in cases of sales had under the provisions of sec. 105 of Act of 1859, the provisions of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) ought to be treated as supplementary to those of Act X of 1859. But it has not been admitted by the learned Vakil for the Petitioner that the sale in this case did take place under the provisions of Act X of 1859 and it is unnecessary for us to

MR. JUSTICE STEPHEN WILL PRESIDE OVER THE Criminal Sessions which commences its sittings from this day.

WE HAVE RECEIVED THE REPORT OF THE INCORPORATED Law Society of Calcutta and we are glad to find that the Society has done much useful work during the year ending with the 31st December 1911. Amongst the record of work the following deserve special mention. They have conjointly with a committee of the Bar considered and submitted their suggestions with regard to the new Taxing Rules. They have also considered the High Court Rules which are to replace the old Rules and the new Rules relating to Admiralty suits. The thanks of their branch of the profession are due to the Society for securing the attorneys the privilege of being appointed Partition Commissioners both within and outside the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the High Court and Commissioners for the recording of evidence outside such limits. In the absence of any reference to professional conduct in this report we may presume that there was no occasion for the Society's vigilance in this direction and, if this be so, it is surely a matter for congratulation. The new Committee constituted as it is of the following gentlemen would command public confidence.

Committee of the Incorporated Law Society of Calcutta.

IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT A BILL IS TO BE SHORTLY introduced in Parliament for the creation of a Governorship, and a Council for the Presidency of Bengal. It would be interesting to review in this connection the provisions in the Parliamentary Statutes relating to the Governorship of Bengal. The Government of India Act of 1833 (3 & 4 Williams IV, c 85), sec. 56 provides that the executive government of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal shall be administered by a Governor and three Councillors, the Governor to be styled "the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal." The East India Companies Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict., c. 95), sec. 16 provides that the Governor-General of India shall not be the Governor of the Presidency of Bengal but a separate Governor shall be appointed for the Presidency in the same manner as for the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay and until such Governorship is constituted for Bengal, the Governor-General in Council is authorised to appoint a Lieutenant-Governor. So the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal is to this day a sort of provisional form of Government for Bengal. Had not the partition of Eastern Bengal taken place and had Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa remained with Bengal, the Governorship with an Executive Council could have been created for the Presidency of Bengal by giving effect to the provisions of the Statute above referred to and providing that the number of the members of the Executive Council shall not be more than four as has been done by the Indian Councils Act of 1909.

BUT HAVING REGARD TO PAST AND PROSPECTIVE changes in the Provinces comprised in the old Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, it is necessary that the Governorship of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, as it is to be newly constituted, should be created by a Parliamentary Statute. It will be remembered that at the time Eastern Bengal was partitioned we raised the objection that although under sec. 46 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861 (24 & 25, Vict. c. 67), the Governor-General in Council is empowered to create new Provinces and appoint Lieutenant-Governors, still the proviso to sec. 22 thereof precluded him from making any laws affecting the Statutes of 1833 and 1853 and thus from creating another Lieutenant-Governorship within the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. The procedure followed at the partitioning of Eastern Bengal was to raise Assam into a Lieutenant-Governorship and then to transfer Eastern Bengal to Assam under sec. 4 of the Government of India Act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict., c. 77). This was evidently done to obviate the above difficulty.

THE SAME OBJECTIONS WOULD ARISE IN CONSTITUTING a Lieutenant-Governorship for Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa. But we are sure that the Bill that is to be introduced in Parliament for creating a Governorship and Executive Council for the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal will either specifically provide for the new Lieutenant-Governorship or will amend or repeal sec. 56 of Government of India Act of 1833 and sec. 16 of the Government of India Act of 1853. In that case it will be quite competent for the Governor-General in Council to create a Lieutenant-Governorship for Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa by proclamation under sec. 46 of the India Councils Act of 1861. But all the same under sec. 3, sub-sec. (2) of the India Councils Act of 1909 the draft of the proclamation for creating an Executive Council for the new Lieutenant-Governor will have to be laid before each House of Parliament for at least sixty days during the Session of Parliament.

ALTHOUGH THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL FOR BEHAR cannot be created until two months after the draft proclamation is laid before both Houses, there is no bar to the Executive Council for the Governor of Bengal being formed immediately after the Statute creating Governorship for the Presidency of Bengal is passed in Parliament. We have already noticed that the Statutes of 1833 and 1853 provide that the Executive Council of the Presidencies of Madras, Bombay and Bengal are to consist of three members. The Statute of 1909 has, however, raised this number to four, two of whom as before should be Government servants. We may observe here in passing that it seems to be an omission not to state in the schedule appended to the Statute of 1909 that the provisions in the Statutes of 1833 and 1853 have in this respect been amended or rather repealed by the Statute of 1909. The Statute creating Governorship for Bengal will have to repeal also sec. 3 (1) of the last-mentioned Statute which empowers the Governor-General in Council to create an Executive Council for the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and provide for an Executive Council for the Governor. It will therefore follow that on the passing of the new Statute the present members of the Executive Council for Bengal will be functus officio and new members will be appointed for the Governor's Council.

IT IS STATED IN THE PUBLIC PRESS THAT A non-official member for the Governor's Council has already been selected and it has been decided that he is to be a Mahomedan. We have always maintained that in making appointments to such responsible offices the best qualified men by reference to education, character, credit and claim to command public confidence, should always be selected. Such appointments should not be conferred as a matter of favour on any particular community. Racial, communal or religious bias should be considered more as a disqualification than a recommendation for such offices. If, however, the selection is to be made on a communal basis it is but right that each of the two most important communities in Bengal should have a member in the Executive Council of the Governor. As the statutory number of members for Bengal is sure to be four, of whom two may be non-officials, there can be no difficulty in making another appointment which would meet with general approval.

TRANSFER WITHOUT ABANDONMENT OF RAIYATI HOLDING.

The transfer of a raiya holding not transferable by custom does not by itself entail a forfeiture of the tenancy. It is settled law in these Provinces that if the original tenant continues on the land and does not repudiate his obligation to pay rent to his landlord, the latter in the absence of a clause in the lease providing for forfeiture and re-entry in the event of an unauthorised transfer, cannot treat the tenant as a trespasser and sue him in ejectment, Nadhu Mandal v. Kartick Mandal, 9 C. W. N. 56. It is only when the transfer is followed by an abandonment of his holding by the tenant, that the landlord, as in any other case of abandonment, may enter into possession, and he may then disregard the transferee who ex hypothesi has acquired no title by his purchase and who if he resists may also be ejected, Narendra Narain v. Johan Chandra, 22 W. R. 22. When the tenant after sale of the holding continues in possession as a sub-tenant of the purchaser, wholly repudiating his relationship with his former landlord, the act of the tenant has been construed, not unreasonably, as an abandonment, and the consequences above noted have been held to follow: Rajani Kanta v. Akhari, 11 C. W. N. 811; s. c. I. L. R. 34 689. There would obviously be no ground for concluding that the tenant has abandoned his holding when he has sold only a part of it and continued in joint possession of it with the transferee, the rent continuing to be paid in its entirety in the name of the transferor. Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 590. (See also Sheikh Gosaffur v. E. Dalgleish, 1 C. W. N. 162); nor also where as in Srishtedhur v. Mudan Sirdar, I. L. R. 9 Cal.

648, the tenants, notwithstanding that they had sold the holding and taken a sub-lease from the transferee, insisted, when the landlord sued them in ejectment, on being treated as tenants, the transfer being in law, and according to the landlord's own case, inoperative. [See also Nadhu Mandal v. Kartick Mandal, 9 C. W. N. 56, and Mathur Mandal v. Ganga Charan, 10 C. W. N. 1033]. On the same principle there would seem to be even less justification for holding that a tenant who has merely executed a mortgage, whether with or without possession, has abandoned the holding, and this, [though a contrary view was put forward in Krishna Chandra v. Khiran Bajania, 10 C. W. N. 499] has been rightly reaffirmed in Chowdhury Mohadeo v. Sheikh Pachkari reported at p. 322 of this issue.

The question still remains what is the position of the transferee without title (be he a purchaser of the whole or a portion of the holding or a mortgagee) when the original tenant continues, even after the transfer, to maintain his former relationship with his landlord? Can the landlord sue him in ejectment over the head of the tenant who in the conditions supposed has not abandoned his holding? The right to possession being in the tenant, a suit in ejectment can lie in such cases only at the instance of the tenant, and he, it may be noted, may be precluded by estoppel or by the terms of the transfer from exercising that right. However that may be, it seems to us to be impossible on principle to hold that the landlord can sue the transferee in ejectment, when abandonment by the transferor has not been made out. The observations of Banerjee, J., in Kalinath v. Kumar Upendra Chandra, 1 C. W. N. 163 at p. 165, col. 1 and in Nadhu Mandal v. Kartick Mandal, 9 C. W. N. 56 at p. 60, col. 1, so far as they go, support this view, though the question did not arise in those cases and was not decided in them. In Mathur Mandal v. Ganga Charan Gope Ghose, 10 C. W. N. 1033, this view was taken for granted. The point actually arose in Dina Nath v. Krishna Bejoy, 9 C. W. N. 379, but the conclusion that the landlord though bound to recognise the subsisting tenancy of the transferors could yet treat the transferee as a trespasser and recover a decree for possession as against him appears to be self-contradictory. Further, this view of the law would enable the tenant to collude with the landlord to defraud the transferee. This decision was followed in Madan Mandal v. Mahima Chandra, 1 L. R. 33 Cal. 551. The question apparently also arose in the lower Appellate Court in the case reported at p. 322 of this issue, and the Subordinate Judge decided it against the transfer on the principle laid down in Dina Nath's case. But the appeal to the High Court was preferred by the landlord and not by the mortgagee who appears to have acquiesced in the Subordinate Judge's decision and the question did not, as it might well have, come up for reconsideration before the High Court. We may however observe in passing that a decree in favour of the landlord for ejectment against the transferee only, when the transferor is maintained in possession, is practically useless and there is nothing to prevent the transferor from putting the transferee back into possession as often as the transferee is ejected at the instance of the landlord. If the landlord has any cause of action at all against the transferee it must, it appears to us, be at most for a declaration that the transfer was not binding on him. See Sheikh Gozuffur v. E. Dalgleish, 1 C. W. N. 162, already referred to, for a somewhat similar relief granted in the case of a transfer of a portion of the holding without the consent of the landlord.

These admirable collections of Forms and Precedents in general use amongst solicitors have so long formed a part of the ordinary and indispensable equipments of a lawyer's office, that the appearance of a new edition would ordinarily need little more than a bare mention from the reviewer. The present edition however calls for special notice by reason of the thoroughgoing revision and rearrangement of the subject-matter to which the two volumes have been subjected. The first of these volumes shows that a number of forms which have become obsolete and others for which the practitioner would naturally prefer to consult more pretentious works have been omitted. Saving of space has been further effected by striking out redundancies with the result that about 650 forms (i.e., 30 more than could be accommodated in the previous edition of 551 pages) have been compressed within 545 pages. The other volume has been re-written rather than revised. Repetition and verbiage have been rigorously kept down and in this way space has been found in it for nearly 80 more precedents than could be accommodated in the previous edition.

Although the subject-matter of both volumes has been sought to be rearranged upon a more-scientific basis, the editors have nevertheless felt the necessity of furnishing exhaustive subject indices which are indispensable keys to the proper handling of books of reference. The tables of cases and statutes would by themselves go to show the character of the notes which the editors have thought fit to append for the elucidation of the forms.

Compact and brought up to date, Moore's Practical Forms may be assumed now to have started on a career of renewed usefulness.

A PRIMER OF ROMAN LAW. By W. H. Hastings Kelke, M. A. Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell, 3, Chancery Lane, London W. C. Price 6s. 1911.

This book is an elementary work planned as an introduction to the study of Roman Law, or more particularly of Justinian's Institutes. Justinian's Institutes is a work which every student of Roman law should read at the commencement of his studies on the subject. But that work has its own difficulties for a student unacquainted with the previous history or the exact constitution of Courts of law and of the evolution of the law to the stage at which we find it in Justinian. The author in this work sets out within the briefest compass the most salient facts in the history of the particular legal conceptions of Justinian as well as a brief statement of all circumstances which it is absolutely essential to know in order to understand Justinian. All this comes in the course of an exposition of the most salient facts in Roman law in the order in which the subjects are dealt with in the Institutes. The introductory chapters giving the briefest history of Roman law, law Courts and procedure and the constitution of the family, the gens and the curia are of the greatest assistance in forming a correct idea of the historical position and the true significance of much of what Justinian says. As an introduction to the study of Justinian and other more ambitious works on Roman law this book is likely to be very useful to students.

THE ELEMENTS OF CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE. By A. M. Wilshire, M. A., LL. B., Barr-at-Law. Second Edition by Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, 3, Chancery Lane, London W. C. 1911.

This is a handy book which, though intended for students, would give to members of the legal profession in India a clear idea of the English Criminal Law and Procedure. There is also a chapter on evidence which does not aim at giving hard and fast rules as regards the law of evidence but explains within a very small compass the general principles of the law of evidence by reference to practice and case law. For instance it gives very useful guidance to students regarding examination, cross-examination of witnesses, hearsay and other difficult questions relating to evidence from which even practitioners would derive assistance in their every day work.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE, J. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 1287 AND 1304 OF 1909. LALA MEHDI LALL, Plaintiff, Appellant v. MR. W. M. GRANT AND ANOTHER, Respondents. 15th January 1912.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 22—Ijaradar purchasing occupancy holding.

The appeal arose out of a suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case for the Plaintiff was as follows: The disputed lands originally belonged to four tenants. Suits for rent were brought against them by the ijaradar in possession of the village. He obtained decrees and sold the holdings in execution. Three of these holdings he purchased himself. The fourth, that of Jitu Manji was purchased by the Plaintiff. Thereafter the ijaradar sold the jote right in the three holdings that he had purchased to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff contended with respect to these four holdings that he was a raiyat and the Defendants were his under-raiyats. In the record-of-rights he was recorded as a tenure-holder and the Defendant as raiyats under him. He disputed the correctness of this entry. Hence this suit.

The Defendants supported the case of the Plaintiff in the Courts below. But notwithstanding this the Assistant Settlement Officer in the first instance and the District Judge in appeal held that the entry in the record-of-rights was correct and dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Held—Sec. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not lay down that when an ijaradar purchased a holding in execution of a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stood before it was amended the tenancy ceased to exist. The Plaintiff was a raiyat and was entitled to relief under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

NO. 42 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J.	ABDUL HOSSEIN,
WOODROFFE, J.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
	v.
1911,	RAM CHURN LAW,
10, May.	Defendant, Respondent.

Footings or spreading course of a wall—Presumption that wall built on owner's land—Cornice, lateral extension of, inference from—Trespass—Mandatory injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 55.

Where the footing or the spreading course of the wall of a house has been in existence for a great length of time :

Held—That there was a fair presumption in the circumstances of the case that the footing was not placed there wrongfully and the inference that the land covered by the footing belonged to the owner of the wall received corroboration from the fact that the lateral extension of the cornices of the house corresponded with such spreading course.

Where a wall has been built by the Defendant encroaching on the Plaintiff's land, the proper remedy in such a case of continuing trespass (in the absence of delay or acquiescence on the part of the Plaintiff) is to grant a mandatory injunction to pull down so much of the wall as is an encroachment.

The Plaintiff-Appellant was the owner of certain premises No. 17, Ezra Street. He acquired these premises on the 24th of March 1904, from one Gubboy.

The Plaintiff brought this suit for the purpose of obtaining a mandatory injunction directing the Defendant who was the owner of premises No. 16, Ezra Street, to pull down a small wall about 12 ft. 8 in. in length, 1 ft. 1 in. in breadth and 11 or 12 ft. in height which the Plaintiff alleged had encroached on Plaintiff's land and had in fact been built thereon.

On the 4th of April 1910, His Lordship, Mr. Justice Fletcher, dismissed the suit. Against this order the Plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Mr. Braunfield (with him Mr. Morison) for the Appellant urged that it was ridiculous to say that a man builds on what is not admittedly his land. Every one builds on his own land and there is always irrebuttable presumption in favour of the owner of the main wall of a building that the land in which it is built is his. The wall belongs to him to whom the land on which it is built belongs. The footings of a wall are not apart from the wall but a part of it and therefore the land on which the footings are laid, belongs to the owner and the land above the footings must a fortiori belong to the owner. The Plaintiff and his predecessors had long and uninterrupted possession of the land in dispute and that is sufficient proof of his title in it. The onus of disproof is on the Defendant. He has not discharged it. The question of footings and foundations is discussed in Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnstone (1).

Mr. B. C. Mitter (with him Mr. Mehta) for the Respondent.—The survey map of 1887 is an official publication and as such ought to be accepted as an authority. It does not show any opening between the Plaintiff's wall and the Defendant's wall. This is conclusive against the Plaintiff and even if it is not so, the Defendant has had his wall flush with the Plaintiff's wall for over 30 years, and therefore limitation bars the Plaintiff's suit. It is true there are some cases decided against the Defendant's view, but the survey map ought to be accepted for by it the boundary was settled.

Mr. Braunfield was stopped in the course of his reply.

JENKINS, C. J.—The litigants in this suit are two neighbouring house owners, the Plaintiff being the owner of No. 17, Ezra Street and the Defendant of No. 16, Ezra Street, in the town of Calcutta, and the point in dispute is whether a wall which in December 1908 or February 1909 was erected by the Defendant in the immediate proximity of the Plaintiff's premises was or was not a wrongful encroachment entitling the Plaintiff to relief in this Court.

The Plaintiff alleges that the wall was built on his land, and that it therefore constituted a trespass. The Defendant on the other hand denies this, and he goes on to plead that even if it was built on the Plaintiff's land, still it occupied the site of an old wall of his on that land which had stood there for more than thirty years; and so, he says, any claim by way of trespass now fails.

The case came in the first instance before Mr. Justice Fletcher who decided in the Defendant's favour, his view being that the Plaintiff had failed to establish that the site of the wall on which it stands was the property of the Plaintiff. On the second point he expressed no definite opinion.

We first then have to see how far the Plaintiff has succeeded in establishing his title to this piece of land apart from any possible subsequent encroachment. The southern wall of No. 17, Ezra Street, faces in part on a public lane and in part on a portion of the premises No. 16, Ezra Street. At the basis of this wall there now exists, and there can be no doubt that there has existed ever since the wall was constructed—and that admittedly dates to a very early period,—a spreading course or footing of the width of 13 inches on the south side of the wall of No. 17. It is on this footing that the Plaintiff's wall stands. Now, is this footing within the limits of the Plaintiff's land? It is not suggested that the title-deeds in this case contain anything that is opposed to that view. The description of the parcels in the deed brought to our notice certainly does not negative the idea that these footings were built within the limits of the Plaintiff's land. On the other hand, we have it that these footings have been there for a great length of time, and I think it is a fair presumption in the circumstances of the case to hold that they were not placed there wrongfully. I see no ground for presuming a trespass on the part of the Plaintiff's predecessor when he constructed that wall. The inference that I would.

rather draw would be that when these footings were placed in the position that they now occupy, they were placed within the limits of the land belonging to the Plaintiff's predecessors and now belonging to the Plaintiff. This view I think receives some corroboration from the fact that the lateral extension of the cornices of this house towards the south corresponds precisely with the southern extension of these footings.

Before us, indeed, no serious attempt has been made to support this finding of the learned Judge, and I do not hesitate to come to the conclusion that the Plaintiff has established that this footing is within the limit of his property. While the Defendant has not sought to sustain his case on the ground which found favour with the learned Judge he has urged before us and has made it his principal point that the new wall of which complaint is now made in fact occupies the site of an old wall that stood there for more than thirty years. If that be so, obviously he would have a very good answer to the Plaintiff's claim.

Now how does the case stand as to that? The onus clearly rests on the Defendant. Has he discharged that onus? He has adduced evidence;—in particular, there is the evidence of his mistry to the effect that the new wall occupies the site of the old wall. This evidence has invited the comment from Mr. Braunfield that in a certain sense it is not only incorrect but lacking in candour, because the wall in part occupies the site of the old wall but not in whole. In addition to this oral evidence, reliance has been placed—and indeed, has been principally placed—on the survey map of these premises.

Now, this survey map is one drawn on the scale of 50 feet to an inch, and it is obvious that any small matters are incapable of indication in a map drawn on this scale. But what is urged is—and it is the strongest point made on behalf of the Defendant—that while the Plaintiff contends that there was between the wall of No. 17 and the old wall of No. 16 an open drain, no such drain is shown in the map. It is perfectly true that there is no such drain shown on that spot in the map, but that is by no means conclusive in the matter. To that it may be equally retaliated that there is nothing in the map which shows the wall of No. 16 as being in immediate contact with the wall of No. 17, so that giving every weight to the argument advanced—and very clearly advanced—by Mr. Mehta on the basis of this map, I am unable to regard it as in any way conclusive. As against this we have the evidence on the part of the Plaintiff, the cogency of which cannot be gainsaid. To begin with, we have the evidence of the old foundation to which I have already made a passing reference. It is indicated in the plan which has been put in on behalf of the Plaintiff, and there we find distinctly shown the position of the old foundations as they stood, and we have the evidence of the engineer to that effect. Beyond that, we have oral evidence and in particular I am impressed by the evidence of Mr. Gubboy, the former owner of the property. There is no suggestion that Mr. Gubboy has any interest and I can see no reason why he should think fit to come forward now and depose falsely. He deposes to two facts which appear to me to give very distinct support to his general statement that there was an intervening space of 13 inches or thereabouts between the old wall of No. 16 and the wall of No. 17—I refer particularly to his evidence as to the demand made by his tenant Khetter Mohan Mukerjee for the closing of the window in the room which looked out on the old wall, and the reason why that application was made to him. He has said, "on the south of that room"—(that is the room which was directly opposite to the old wall) "was the porch. The south portion of that room had an opening window—barred at least—not a window, an opening with iron bars. That window was blocked up by me under my orders. Tenants complained on account of the drain being there that a foul odour was coming. They preferred the drain to be blocked up. That drain I have seen from my childhood. It has always been there." He there speaks to a distinct fact, and is not merely giving a general impression, and it seems to me impossible not to consider that as being of considerable importance. Not only that: In another part of his evidence he speaks of the gap between the south wall of No. 17 and the porch of No. 16, and he says, "To go from the top storey of 17 to the porch you have to jump over it." I do not place any very great reliance on the deposition of Laljee Premjee—it may or may not be correct for he had not the occasion for intimate observation that Mr. Gubboy or Khetter Mohan Mukerjee had. Khetter Mohan Mukerjee is the tenant to whom I have already referred, and he gives distinct evidence pointing to the fact that the old wall of No. 16 was not flush against the wall of No. 17, but was distant from it some 13 inches or so, and it is with Khetter Mohan Mukerjee that Mr. Gubboy had the arrangement that led to the blocking up of the window.

These circumstances appear to me not merely to throw considerable doubt on the evidence of the Defendant but in my opinion it outweighs that evidence and convinces me that the old wall of the porch was, as the Plaintiff maintains, not flush with the wall of No. 17. Therefore the Defendant's plea that his new wall occupies the site of the old wall fails. The just conclusion from this is that there has been an unlawful encroachment. Now, if that be so, there is a wrong; in respect of which the Plaintiff is entitled to a remedy. In the prayer of his claim he seeks a declaration, a mandatory injunction and damages. In the view I take, it is unnecessary to enter into the question of damages, but I think the Plaintiff is entitled to a mandatory injunction, and in the circumstances it appears to me that that is his proper remedy. To begin with, I do not think that there has been any delay or acquiescence on the Plaintiff's part:—There is a conflict of evidence on this point as between Abdul Ali and Ram Churn Law, and of the two versions I prefer that of Abdul Ali. It is true that the wall has been completed, or was completed before the suit was brought, still we are here concerned with trespass on the land of the Plaintiff,—a trespass not carried out as the result of long and continuous work but of work completed quickly and promptly. Not only has a trespass been committed, but the trespass is one which still continues and will hereafter continue to be committed as long as the wall remains in its present site. That being so, I think the proper remedy is by way of mandatory injunction. The case appears to me to come clearly within the law as established in Chap. X of the Specific Relief Act, and I think that in accordance with what is provided in sec. 55 it would be right for us to compel the Defendant to pull down so much of the wall as is an encroachment on the land of the Plaintiff, that is to say, so much of the wall as stands over the 13 inches, to which the Plaintiff has established his title in this suit. As I have said, there is no case for damages, but the Plaintiff will get his costs both of the suit and the appeal from the Defendant.

A month's time is allowed to pull down the wall, with liberty to apply if necessary.

 TRUNON, J. Plaintiff, Appellant,

 17, February.)

Thakbust maps, value of, as evidence—Condition of land how far affects value of thak maps—Map prepared by Government on behalf of private proprietor, how proved—What circumstances must be established before using such map against a party—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 74, 83, 90—Applicability to private maps made at the instance of Collector—Secs. 12, 13—Admissibility to prove assertion of title.

Sec. 90 of the Indian Evidence Act only shows that a document was prepared at the time at which it purports to have been made by the officer whose signature it bears, but it does not establish the accuracy of the document.

The question whether a map is a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Evidence Act is primâ facie a question of fact, and the fact that a map was treated as a public document in a previous suit to which the Plaintiff was not a party would not make it binding as such on the Plaintiff.

A map prepared at the instance of the Collector when in charge of a private estate is a private document and sec. 83 of the Evidence Act has no application to such map.

So before such a map can be used against a party not only must its accuracy be strictly proved, but other circumstances which may affect its evidentiary value such as the purpose for which the map was prepared, must be duly considered; for a map prepared for one purpose cannot be used for a totally different purpose, and in considering the value of such maps the Courts must consider how far the boundaries now in dispute had been in contemplation when the map was prepared.

Such a map unless proved to have been prepared with the assent or at any rate the knowledge of a party is of very little value as evidence against such party; and in the absence of signature of the parties on the map the mere recital on the map that other persons had notice of the proceedings would not be conclusive.

Although the evidentiary value of a thak map would be affected by the condition of the lands at the time of the survey, the map cannot be ignored merely on a general allegation that the lands were jungle at the time without considering whether it was still capable of being surveyed.

Possession of jungle lands is primâ facie with the person whose title is established.

This was an appeal preferred on the 9th of November 1908, against the decree of S. B. Chaudhuri, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 18th of July 1908, affirming the decree of Babu Satya Chandra Ganguly, Additional Subordinate Judge at Khulna, dated the 10th of December 1906.

PRYA NATH MAZUMDAR v. MAHENDRA KUMAR MITRA.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitter and Sachindra Prosad Ghose for the Appellant.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen, Dwarka Nath Mitter, Sailendra Nath Palit and Baranoshibashi Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The subject-matter of the litigation which has given rise to this appeal consists of a tract of land described in the plaint as covering about 120 bighas but found subsequently on measurement to cover about 200 bighas. The case for the Plaintiff is that the disputed land is comprised in Mouzah Alilaipur whereas the case for the Defendants is that it is part of their property Bul Pabla. The Courts below have concurrently dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff has failed to establish his title as well as possession within 12 years of the commencement of the suit.

The decision of the District Judge has been assailed before us on behalf of the Plaintiff substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the question of title has been erroneously decided by reason of the reception of evidence which is inadmissible in law, and, secondly, that the question of limitation has been erroneously decided because the evidence has not been examined from the point of view of the nature of the land.

In so far as the first branch of the contention of the Appellant is concerned, it may be stated at the outset that the Plaintiff relied mainly on the thak map of 1856 whereas the Defendants relied upon the map prepared in 1865 under the supervision of the Deputy Collector, Babu Brahmo Nath Sen. The Plaintiff contended before the District Judge that the map of 1865 was not admissible in evidence against him ; but this objection was overruled on the ground that the map on the face of it showed that it was prepared in 1865 and was consequently admissible under sec. 90 of the Indian Evidence Act. In our opinion this position cannot possibly be maintained. Sec. 90 of the Indian Evidence Act only shows that the map was prepared at the time at which it purports to have been made by the officer whose signature it bears, but it does not establish the accuracy of the map. But in the Court below as also in this Court it has been contended that the map is a public map, as was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (1) and by this Court in the case of Sital Chandra Ghatak v. Mohendra Kumar Mitra (2). In answer to this contention it has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that these judgments cannot be used against him for the purpose of establishing that the map is a public map the accuracy of which may be presumed under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. In our opinion this position is incontestable. The question whether the map is a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act is prima facie a question of fact and the mere circumstance that the map in question was treated as a public map in some earlier litigation to which the Plaintiff was not a party does not bind the Plaintiff. It turns out, however, upon an examination of the proceedings in the case of Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (1) that the map in question was not treated as a public map. It appears that at the time of that litigation the surveyor, Mahim Chandra Bose, was dead and consequently two persons of the names of Sital Chandra Mitra and Munshi Mazhruddin Mahomed who had been present at the time the map was prepared were examined to explain the circumstances of its preparation. It further appears from a passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that the map was not treated as a public map and it was expressly stated that the evidence of conduct of the parties made it clear that it was entitled to no less than the degree of authority which attaches to Government surveys generally. It has been explained to us that in the earlier litigation, the conduct of the parties to which reference is made in the judgment of the Judicial Committee consisted in the circumstance that the map was mentioned in a certain lease which was apparently binding upon the parties. In the case before us, the map is not mentioned in the lease. It is therefore impossible to hold that the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (1) and of this Court in Sital Chandra Ghatak v. Mohendra Kumar Mitra (2) proves conclusively against the Plaintiff that the map is a public map. On the other hand, it is fairly clear that the map is a private document. It appears to have been prepared at the instance of the Collector who was in charge of the Syedpur Trust Estate because he was dissatisfied with thak map of 1856. We have not been informed whether any steps were taken for the correction of the thak map, in the manner provided for that purpose, by an appeal to the superior revenue authorities. If such proceedings had been taken the result would undoubtedly have been indicated on the thak map itself. Consequently the true position appears to be that we have on the one hand the thak map and on the other the map of 1865 which was prepared at the instance of the Collector in his capacity as the holder of the Syedpur Trust Estate. Consequently the map must be treated as a private document; and if it is treated as a private document there can be no question that its accuracy has to be established, because, it has been laid down by a series of decisions of this Court that sec. 83 of the Indian Evidence Act has no application to maps prepared by an officer of Government while he is in charge of properties as a private proprietor. In support of this position reference may be made to the decisions of this Court in the cases of Junmajoy Mallik v. Dwarka Nath Mytee (3), Ram Chunder Sao v. Bunseedhar Naik (4), Kanla Prosad v. Jagat Chandra Dutt (5) and the observation in the case of Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (6). The contrary view adopted in the case of Taruck Nath Mookerjee v. Mohendra Nath Ghose (7) which was decided in 1870 before the Indian Evidence Act was passed cannot in view of the later decisions be treated as good law. Consequently before the Defendants can be allowed to use the map against the Plaintiff, they must be called upon to establish its accuracy. But even if its accuracy is established other circumstances have to be taken into consideration which may affect its evidentiary value. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has contended upon the authority of the case of Kerr v. Nuzzer Mahomed (8) and Kanta Prosad v. Jagat Chandra Dutt (5) that a map prepared for one purpose cannot be used for a totally different purpose, a purpose wholly irrelevant to the subject of dispute in the earlier litigation. The Courts below do not appear to have considered the evidentiary value of the map from this point of view. It cannot be disputed as pointed out by this Court in the cases of Moni Roy v. Rajhunsee Koer (9) and Ranajit Sinha v. Basanta Kumar Ghose (10) that even though the boundaries between two villages may have been demarcated as between two contesting parties with regard to one portion of estate, if an attempt is made in a subsequent litigation between the same parties to use the map with regard to another portion of the boundaries, the matter requires careful scrutiny. If therefore this map is duly proved and is ultimately used as evidence against the Plaintiff, the Court must consider how far the boundaries in so far as the lands now in dispute are concerned, were in view when the map was prepared. If it is established that the portion of the boundary now in dispute was also directly in dispute at the time when the map was prepared, the map would be of considerable value; otherwise its evidentiary value would be diminished. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has further contended that the map is not signed either by the owners or the tenants of the adjoining lands and that unless it is established that the map was prepared, if not with the assent, at least with the knowledge of the proprietors of the neighbouring lands affected by the demarcation, its evidentiary value would be very little. This contention is supported by the cases of Omrila Lal Chowdhry v. Kalee Pershad Shaha (11), The Collector of Rajshahye v. Doorga Soondaree Debia (12) and Nobo Coomar v. Gobind Chunder (13). The mere recital on the face of the map that other persons had notice of the proceedings would not by any means be conclusive specially in the absence of the signature, such as is usual on the maps, by the holders of the neighbouring land. Consequently if the map is used in evidence this circumstance also must be borne in mind. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has further contended that the map of 1865 appears to be based on the chitta of 1234 and as that chitta itself was prepared by guess, the evidentiary value of the map cannot exceed that of the chitta. The Courts below do not appear to have considered the matter from this point of view, which has obviously to be taken into consideration if the map is to be used in evidence against the Plaintiff. In answer to this contention of the Appellant, it has been argued by the learned Vakils for the Respondents that no objection ought to be allowed to be taken to the admissibility of the map as such objection was not taken in the Courts below. We are unable to hold that objection was not raised to the reception of the map in evidence, although it is quite possible that the objection was not formulated with the precision with which it has been taken in this Court. No doubt, if objection has not been taken to the admissibility of a map which would be admissible if certain requiremen's were fulfilled, the objection cannot be allowed to be taken at a subsequent stage, as laid down in the cases of Girindra Chandra Ganguly v. Rajendra Nath Chatterjee (14), Gunga Narain Choudhry v. Radhika Mohun Roy (15) and Madhabi Sundari v. Gaganendra Nath Tagore (16). These cases, however, are clearly distinguishable ; and the substantial objection which has been raised in this Court was taken undoubtedly before the District Judge, if not also before the Court of first instance. It has further been contended by the learned Vakils for the Respondent that even if the map is not admissible under sec. 83 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is admissible under secs. 13 and 14 of the Act, as laid down by this Court in the case of Junmajoy Mullik v. Dwarka Nath Mytee (3). This argument, however, even if it is assumed to be correct, is of no assistance to the Respondent. If the map is used in evidence under secs. 13 and 14 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is evidence merely of an assertion of the title which is now put forward by the Defendants so far back as 1865 ; but the map has been used by the learned District Judge as showing clearly that the thak map is incorrect ; and for that purpose it is essential to establish that the map itself is correct.

It has finally been suggested by the learned Vakils for the Respondents that the learned District Judge has given an independent reason for the rejection of the thak map and that consequently apart from the map of 1865 the Plaintiff cannot possibly succeed. Our attention has been invited to a solitary passage in the judgment of the learned District Judge in which he observes that thak maps go upon possession, but here the land was all jungle and there was no visible physical possession. Now it may be conceded that, as was pointed in the case of Joytara Dassi v. Mahomed Mobarruk (17), the evidentiary value of thak maps would be affected by the condition of the land at the time the survey was made. But obviously the thak map cannot be ignored upon a general allegation that the land at the time was jungle. It is conceivable that the land in dispute was not jungle at the time and was quite capable of survey at the time. Consequently if the learned District Judge based his judgment merely upon the observation upon which reliance is placed, it would be necessary to direct a further enquiry into the matter. It has been suggested as a last resort by the learned Vakils for the Respondent that the map was prepared at the instance of the common superior landlord of both the parties and that consequently it may be used in evidence by either party against the other. This contention does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below and we have no evidence on the record to show that the title under which the Plaintiff claims was created subsequent to the survey of 1865. It is obvious that if his title is antecedent to 1865, the map could not be used against him on the ground suggested. We must therefore hold upon the first branch of the case for the Appellant that the decision of the District Judge upon the question of title cannot be supported.

In so far as the second branch of the case for the Appellant is concerned, reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Mirsa Sham- sher Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal (18). In our opinion the decision of the District Judge upon the question of limitation also cannot be supported. In the first place his decision upon the question of possession is inextricably mixed up with the decision of title which as we have said cannot be supported. In the second place, the learned District Judge does not appear to have considered the nature of the land. It is clear upon the evidence that up to at least 1874, the land was covered with jungle. It has been stated to us that according to the evidence, even on the side of the Defendants themselves, portions of the land were brought under cultivation within 12 years of the commencement of the suit. Consequently the claim of the Plaintiff cannot be treated as barred by limitation in respect of such lands. It is further clear that if the thak map goes on possession, the evidence of possession must be considered from an entirely different point of view and in the case of jungle lands possession prima facie is with the person whose title is established. We are of opinion that the case must go back not merely for the decision of the question of title but also for re-consideration of the question of limitation.

The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed, the decision of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for re-consideration. The Defendants will have opportunity to prove the map of 1865 and the District Judge will for that purpose give necessary direction for the reception of evidence by the Court of first instance. The Plaintiff will have opportunity to rebut any new evidence that may be adduced by the Defendants. New evidence will not be admissible in so far as the question of possession is concerned. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Case remanded.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Uma Kali Mukherjee and Jogesh Chandra Dey for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The subject-matter of the litigation is an occupancy holding in respect of which the second Defendant was the tenant under the Plaintiff. On the 13th May 1905, the second Defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the first Defendant under the terms whereof the mortgagor was entitled, if he so chose, to remain in possession of the homestead upon payment of a nominal rent. The case for the Plaintiff is that upon the execution of the usufructuary mortgage, the second Defendant abandoned the holding and the first Defendant came into occupation as mortgagee. The Plaintiff therefore contends that he is entitled to a decree for ejectment against both; against the first Defendant, because he is a trespasser in possession; and against the second, because he has severed his connection with the holding. The Court of first instance accepted this contention as well-founded and made a decree for ejectment against both the Defendants. The two Defendants jointly preferred an appeal against this decree. The Subordinate Judge has held that in so far as the first Defendant is concerned, the decree for ejectment must be maintained; but in so far as the second Defendant is concerned he is not liable to be ejected.

On the present appeal it has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that this view is erroneous in law and that the Plaintiff is entitled to a decree for ejectment against the transferer as well as the transferee. In our opinion this contention cannot be supported.

On behalf of the Appellant reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the cases of Krishna Chandra Dutta v. Miran Bajania (1) and Rasik Lall Dutt v. Bidhumukhi Dasi (2). Neither of these cases, when analysed, is found to be of any assistance to the Appellant. In the first of these cases, after a usufructuary mortgage had been executed by the tenant in respect of a non-transferable holding he abandoned it. The landlord found the transferee in possession and forcibly ejected him. The original tenant thereupon commenced an action for ejectment against the landlord and contended that if the usufructuary mortgage was invalid in law, his tenancy had not been terminated and he was consequently entitled to be restored to possession. This contention was negatived on the ground that the tenant by abandonment had terminated his interest in the land. This decision possibly goes too far and the view may perhaps be supported that a temporary abandonment does not necessarily imply an extinction of the rights of the tenant. It is not necessary, however, for the purposes of the present case to consider this aspect of the matter. In the second case it was found that the tenant after he had created a usufructuary mortgage and placed the mortgagee in possession of the holding not only completely severed his connection therewith but as a matter of fact disappeared from the village. Under these circumstances, it was ruled that the landlord was entitled to possession of the holding not merely as against the transferee but also as against the transferer. In the case before us, although the mortgagee was placed in possession by the mortgagor, yet the latter continued in occupation of a part of the land of the holding. It is well settled that a usufructuary mortgage of a part of a holding is not equivalent to abandonment [Mahomed Tuqi v. Choa Lal (3)]. It has been argued by the learned Vakil for the Appellant that he was in possession as a sub-lessee of the transferee, which involved a repudiation of his character as tenant of the landlord. In our opinion, this view cannot be maintained. There is a fundamental distinction between a sale and a mortgage of a holding. A tenant who executes a deed of sale may perhaps be deemed to have severed his connection with the holding, although it would be difficult to maintain this view in the light of the decision of this Court in the case of Dina Nath Roy v. Krishna Bijoy Saha (4). The case of a mortgage, however, is reasonably free from difficulty. The mortgage is executed on the assumption that the tenant has a transferable interest in the land. The execution of a mortgage by itself does not imply a severance of connection of the tenant with the holding, because it is only on the assumption that the tenancy continues in operation that the mortgagee can have any subsisting interest in the land. Consequently when a tenant executes a usufructuary mortgage in favour of a third party and places him in possession, there is no repudiation of the relationship of landlord and tenant as between himself and the person under whom he holds the land. The decision of the Full Bench in Narendra v. Ishan (5) is thus of no avail to the Appellant. In the case before us, it has further been found that the second Defendant, after the execution of the usufructuary mortgage, has paid rent to the superior landlord and has throughout expressed his willingness to hold himself responsible for due payment of rent. It cannot consequently be suggested that there has been any severance of his connection with the land. In so far as the right itself is concerned, he has not abandoned it; in so far as the physical enjoyment of the right is concerned, he is still in occupation of a part of the land of the holding. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to appreciate how the view can be seriously maintained that the tenant has abandoned the holding and that the landlord has become entitled to re-enter. The learned Vakil for the Appellant invited our attention to the provisions of sec. 25, cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section provides that an occupancy raiyat shall not be ejected by his landlord from his holding except in execution of a decree for ejectment passed on the ground that he has broken a condition consistent with the provisions of the Act and on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between himself and his landlord, liable to be ejected. Apart from the question whether the Legislature intended to apply this section to cases of transfers of holdings, it is necessary to observe that the obvious intention of the section is that the term of the contract should be an express term. It has not been suggested that in the case before us, there was any term in the agreement between the second Defendant and his landlord that the former would be liable to be ejected in the event of an attempt at a transfer of the holding. We must further bear in mind that if reliance is placed upon sec. 25 the provisions of sec. 155 have also to be complied with. There is no suggestion that the landlord has made any attempt to bring his case within the provisions of the latter section. We are therefore of opinion that in the case before us there was no abandonment of the tenancy by the original tenant and that consequently the landlord is not entitled to a decree for ejectment against him.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed but without any costs as the Respondent has not entered appearance.

Appeal dismissed.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 20—
Contract between firms at Ranchi and Cawnpore —Goods to be delivered at Ranchi—Suit for damages

Where the Plaintiffs who owned a shop at Ranchi signed an order form supplied to them at Ranchi by the Defendant Company which had its place of business at Cawn-pur, requesting the Company to forward certain specified articles by goods train to their address at Ranchi (packing and freight free) and to be despatched on a specified date, and the Defendant Company agreed to do so :

Held—That the contract was to be performed by the delivery of the goods at Ranchi and the Court at Ranchi had jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the Plaintiffs for damages for breach of the contract by the Defendant.

This was a Rule granted on the 15th of May 1911, against the judgment of Mr. M. Mullik, Small Cause Court Judge, Ranchi, dated the 17th of March 1911, dismissing the Petitioners' suit on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it.

The Plaintiffs who owned a shop at Ranchi instituted this suit in the Court of the Small Causes at Ranchi against the Defendant Company who had their place of business at Cawnpore for damages for breach of a contract by which the Defendant Company had agreed to supply a certain quantity of serges, flannel, etc., to the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs alleged that the contract was made with them at Ranchi by a representative of the Defendant Company of the name of Green who offered to the Plaintiffs "special discounts for forward orders, i.e., orders of Rs. 200 or over placed prior to 31st May for delivery September—October 1910, railway freight by goods train and packing free" and which offer the Plaintiffs accepted by placing orders with the said representative upon forms supplied by him. The order form signed by the Plaintiffs and dated the 18th April 1910 was in these terms :

"Dear Sirs,

Please forward the following by goods train to the undernoted address for delivery as stated. Packing and freight free. Payment against pro forma invoice.

Delivery—To be despatched on the 20th october."

At the foot of the form as signed were the following words: "Address—A. T. Bhattacharya & Co., Ranchi, B. N. Ry." The Defendant Company objected inter alia that Green was not the Company's agent but merely a traveller who took round samples and showed them to intending purchasers, that the order form signed by the Plaintiffs constituted the latter's offer which was accepted at Cawnpore by the Company acknowledging by their letter of 20th April 1910 the receipt of "your forward order dated 18th instant through our representative." This letter contained the further communication that "the order had been registered and the goods will be despatched by the time indicated."

The Small Cause Court Judge held that the contract was made not by the Company's representative at Ranchi, but that it was completed at Cawnpore when the proposal was accepted. He accordingly held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit which he dismissed with costs.

The Plaintiffs moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh for the Petitioners submitted that the contract was made at Ranchi by the company's representative and that in any case it was to be performed by the delivery of the goods at Ranchi so that part of the cause of action if not the whole of it arose at Ranchi. The Court had therefore jurisdiction to try the suit. Sec. 20, C. P. C.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh) for the Opposite Party submitted that the contract was completed by acceptance at Cawnpore and Cawnpore was the proper place to sue.

In this case a firm at Ranchi was suing a firm at Cawnpore for failure to deliver certain goods on contract. The Munsif held that he had no jurisdiction to try the case. The Rule was granted on the Opposite Party to show cause why the judgment of the Court below should not be set aside and the case tried on the merits.

It seems to be quite clear on the facts before us that the contract was to be performed by the Defendants sending the goods to Ranchi, where they were to be accepted by the Plaintiffs. The contract, therefore, as it stands, was to be carried out at Ranchi. This gives the Munsif jurisdiction which he should have exercised. There is also a question in this case which can only be determined by the evidence, namely, whether a man named Green had or had not the power to make contracts on behalf of the Defendant. But on this point we need not say anything. We think that the contract was to be performed by the delivery of the goods at Ranchi and therefore in part carried out there.

The Rule is therefore made absolute and the case sent back to the Munsif to be tried on the merits.

Costs one gold mohur.

This Rule arises out of certain proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act.

The Petitioner alleged that he is the owner of a salt godown, for the efficient working of which the land in front is required, and that the Deputy Collector has acquired that frontal land without making a reference, as prayed, to the Civil Court under sec. 49 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894.

We are invited in this Rule to set aside the order of the Deputy Collector, dated the 22nd September 1910, and his proceedings up to, and including, an order of the 24th May 1911, wherein he refused to make a reference under sec. 18 of the Act on the ground that the case had been completed and the award confirmed.

It appears that the 19th September 1910 was the date fixed by the Deputy Collector for claims to be put in. On that day, no claim was preferred nor was any petition for time filed. The order-sheet of the Deputy Collector is exceedingly brief and does not embody the details mentioned in his letter of explanation, No. 1977 L.a., dated the 23rd August 1911, upon which the learned senior Government pleader showing cause relies. However that may be, orders were reserved on the 19th September 1910, and the award in this connection was not made until the 21st November 1910. The application of the Petitioner, praying for a reference under sec. 49 of the Act, bears date the 21st September 1910, and apparently reached the Deputy Collector through the post. There are two orders on this petition, the first order is 'file with the record,' the second order which is over a date 22nd September 1910, which has been altered or inked over, is to the following effect: "I have seen the land and the godown. The godown is now closed and no business is being done there now. The land which is now under acquisition is not in the front of the building and its acquisition will not interfere with the business, if the Petitioner intends to start business at any future date. The petition is therefore rejected. Besides the time for filing such petition has expired." In this view of the matter, the Deputy Collector proceeded to complete the proceedings and possession was duly given of the land in question to the Eastern Bengal State Railway.

The first question that arises upon this Rule is whether the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector is subject to the Extraordinary Jurisdiction of this Court.

We have been referred to the cases of The Administrator-General of Bengal v. The Land Acquisition Deputy Collector, 24-Pergunnahs (1) and British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (2). In the present state of the law, we cannot do otherwise than follow the decision of Henderson and Mitra, JJ., in The Administrator-General of Bengal v. The Land Acquisition Deputy Collector, 24-Pergunnahs (1). It would, obviously, be unjust that the Deputy Collector should refuse to obey the provisions of the Act, and to provide no remedy for the correction of his mistaken action. Where the law gives a right to a party to a certain procedure, it must also be deemed to give a remedy for the rectification of any irregularities committed in that connection. Sec. 49 of the Act clearly leaves no option to the Collector. It says

"he shall refer the determination of such question (whether any land proposed to be taken under this Act does or does not form part of a house, manufactory or building) to the Civil Court." He appears to have recognised the applicability of sec. 49 by framing the second order, of the 22nd September 1910, which we have already reproduced. We entertain, no doubt, therefore, that we have jurisdiction to set right the error committed by the Deputy Collector in not making a reference under sec. 49.

The second question involved in this Rule is whether the Petitioner is an owner of any house, manufactory, or building, a part of which house, manufactory, or building is being acquired.

The word owner "is not defined in the Act, but an owner must be deemed to be one of the persons interested in the land being acquired [see sec. 3 (b) of Act I of 1894]. Reading sec. 10 of the Act we think that the proprietor sub-proprietor, mortgagee, tenant or sub-tenant are all owners for the purposes of sec. 49. The Petitioner is an under-tenant of some kind. He is therefore, admittedly, interested in the acquisition of the land, which for the purposes of sec. 49, until the Civil Court finds otherwise, may be presumed to be part of his salt godown.

The question for enquiry will be whether the piece of land in front of the godown form the only means of approach to that godown or is reasonably necessary for the proper working of the salt business.

We, therefore, think that the Petitioner was competent to apply under sec. 49 for a reference to the Civil Court.

The third contention of the learned senior Government pleader is that the application for a reference was not filed in time. The first proviso to sec. 49, however, says that the owner may, at any time before the Collector has made his award, withdraw his application, and it would follow that it was equally open to the Petitioner to make a substantive application for a reference at some time before the award was actually made, that is, before the 21st November 1910. As a matter of fact, he made his application two months earlier, that is, on the 21st September 1910, and the Deputy Collector dealt with it on its merits by recording his second order after a local enquiry.

It is unfortunate that the Deputy Collector overlooked the imperative language of the second proviso to sec. 49. We have no alternative but to set aside his proceedings from and after the 22nd September 1910, and to direct him to proceed in accordance with law under sec. 49 of the Land Acquisition Act. Whether any reference will be necessary under sec. 18 is a matter contingent upon the decision of the Civil Court as to whether the land does or does not form part of the Petitioners' salt godown.

The Rule is made absolute.

There will be no costs in this matter.

RULE NO. 3026 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.

CARNDUFF, J. | THE EAST INDIA RAILWAY
1911, COMPANY, Petitioner,
v.

4, September. | SISPAL LAL, Opposite
Judgment, Party.

5, September.]

Railway Company—Goods sent by rail—Delivery to consignee—Clear receipt, grant of—Suit for damages for loss, if lies.

The grant by the consignee of a clear receipt for goods delivered by a railway company and acceptance of delivery by him do not affect the right to compensation for loss or damage actually proved to have been caused to the goods while in the custody of the company. Such a receipt only raises a presumption that the alleged loss has not taken place, but the presumption may be rebutted by the consignee.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of June 1911, against an order of Mr. S. K. Rahman, Small Cause Court Judge of Buxar, dated the 10th of April 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. G. B. McNair and Babu Jyot Gopal Ghosha for the Petitioner.

Babu Biraj Mohun Majumdar for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This Rule raises an important question of law about the liability of a Railway Company to pay compensation for loss of goods or damage caused to them while in their custody, though the claim is not put forward by the consignee till after he has taken delivery and granted "a clear receipt." The circumstances under which the question requires consideration may be briefly narrated as found by the Small Cause Court Judge. On the 7th October 1910, the Opposite Party tendered to the East India Railway Company at Delhi four bales of cloth for despatch to Buxar. The goods arrived at Buxar on the 14th October; the consignee took delivery of the bales which were apparently in good condition, and granted a simple receipt. On the 5th December 1910, another bale was delivered to the Company at Delhi for carriage to Buxar, and duly carried there in apparent good condition. The consignee took delivery on the 14th December, and granted receipt as before. He subsequently reported to the Company that some pieces of cloths were missing from the bales; the Company refused to entertain the claim, whereupon, on the 7th March 1911, the consignee instituted this suit in the Court of Small Causes at Buxar for recovery of of Rs. 100 as damages for the loss of the pieces of cloth. The Company resisted the claim substantially on two grounds; they denied, in the first place, that the goods had been lost, while the bales were in their custody; they contended, in the second place, that, as the consignee had accepted delivery and granted "a clear receipt" his right to compensation had been extinguished, even if it was proved that the loss had taken place while the goods were in the custody of the Company. The Small Cause Court Judge has found upon the evidence that the articles were taken out of the bales while they were in the custody of the Company, he has negatived the suggestion of the defence that the articles had been abstracted by the Plaintiff himself or his men after delivery of the goods. It may be observed at this stage that the Small Cause Court Judge has recorded the evidence somewhat carelessly, and the notes of the depositions of the witnesses are not always intelligible. The Court is bound, however, to accept his finding upon the question of fact, namely, that a portion of the goods consigned was lost while the bales were in the custody of the Company. Upon this finding, the Small Cause Court Judge has stated that in his view of the law, the Plaintiff is not entitled to succeed, because he has taken delivery and granted a clear receipt; but the Small Cause Court Judge has held that, "in order to safeguard the public interest, the Company is bound to take some step to stop this sort of action" and he has accordingly made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for Rs. 50. On behalf of the Company, we have been invited to set aside this decree on the ground that it is obviously erroneous and that the judgment itself is not self-consistent. In answer to the Rule, it has been argued on the other hand by the learned Vakil for the Plaintiff, that the view of the law accepted by the Small Cause Court Judge is erroneous, and that, if his decree is open to attack, it is liable to be assailed on the ground that the Plaintiff has not been awarded damages in full. The question, therefore, arises, whether the Plaintiff has lost his right of action, because he has taken delivery and granted a clear receipt.

In support of the Rule, it has been argued that the question ought to be answered in the affirmative and reference has been made to Macnamara on Carriers, 1908, sec. 214, where it is stated that, when goods are delivered by a Railway Company at a proper place and at the proper time, the consignee is bound to examine them and ascertain whether they are in good order, and, if he does not intimate objection, it will be presumed that they were delivered in good order. The learned author relies upon the case of Stewart v. North British Ry. Co. (1), as authority for this proposition. The principle in question is perfectly sound, but is of no assistance to the Petitioners. The case of Stewart v. North British Ry. Co. (1) is not an authority for the proposition that if a consignee takes delivery and grants a clear receipt he loses his remedy, even if he is able to establish conclusively that the goods were damaged or partially lost while in transit. In fact, the contrary view was adopted in Johnston & Sons v. Dove (2), where it was ruled that, if a consignee of goods (which as a matter of fact have been damaged in transit though such damage is not visible at first sight) grants a clear receipt, accepts delivery, and breaks bulk without judicious inspection or notice to the carrier, he does not lose his right to compensation; the fact that he has granted a receipt is an element in the proof of damage, but is no bar to the claim. A similar view was taken in Pearcey v. Player (3), where Lord Craighill observed as follows:—"The Counsel for the defender has also argued that the neglect of the pursuer to examine the luggage after delivery, and the delay of 24 hours in reporting the loss to the defender, bars his right to recover. The former may affect the proof of the question, was the portmanteau delivered. But assuming non-delivery to be proved, it cannot operate as a bar, there not having been in the contract between the parties a provision or an implication that should the goods delivered be taken without challenge at the time, right to recover for any undelivered article should be forfeited." This is obviously good sense, and based on sound legal principles. The right to compensation has accrued as the result of the loss; the acceptance of the goods without protest may raise a strong presumption that the alleged loss has not taken place; but, if it is proved by reliable evidence that, as a matter of fact, there was loss or damage to the goods while they were in the custody of the Railway Company, it is difficult to appreciate how on principle the position can be maintained that the acceptance of delivery operates to extinguish the right to compensation. The question has been repeatedly raised in the Courts of the United States, and the view has been uniformly maintained as well-founded on principle that grant of clear receipt and acceptance of delivery do not affect the right to compensation for loss or damage proved to have been caused to the goods while in the custody of the carriers. One of the earliest cases on the subject is Pakey v. Russell (4), where it was ruled that, although acceptance of the goods by the consignee without objection and with knowledge of their defective condition precludes recovery for damages thereto [Munro v. Ship Baltic (5), Mary v. Warner (6)], yet acceptance will not operate as waiver of objection for damage not apparent. Again, in Bowman v. Teall (7), it was held that the receipt of the goods alone, with no stipulation that they are accepted in full performance of the contract does not constitute a waiver of claim for damages for which the carrier may be liable [Alden v. Pearson (8) and Lesinsky v. Great Western Despatch (9)]. The question was elaborately discussed in the case of The Elmira Shepherd (10), where it was ruled that the claim for compensation was not lost though the consignee had granted a clear receipt, accepted delivery, and sold the goods. Woodruff, J., observed that in cases of this description, the conduct of the consignee would be scrutinized carefully and the Court would receive his evidence with caution; but if the evidence proved that the loss or damage occurred while the goods were in transit, compensation could be claimed notwithstanding delivery and acceptance. To put the matter briefly, a receipt acknowledging the delivery of the goods in good condition is only prima facie evidence of the fact [Porter v. Chicago Ry. Co. (11), which must be taken to qualify the somewhat broad statement in Skinner v. Chicago Ry. Co. (12)]. As recent illustration of this principle, reference may be made to the cases of Mears v. New York Ry. Co. (13) and Southern Ry. Co. v. Ashford (14). In the former of these cases, a piano was delivered by the carrier to the consignee who signed a clear receipt. When the package was taken home and opened, it was discovered that the piano had been spoiled by water. It was held that the consignee was entitled to damages, notwithstanding the grant of a clear receipt, and acceptance of delivery. In the second case, the consignee removed his log from the railway van; but when he took it home, he discovered that it had been injured. It was held that he was entitled to claim damages, and that the fact that he had granted a receipt for delivery in good condition was not a conclusive defence against recovery of compensation. The principle, therefore, that a receipt acknowledging a delivery of the goods in good condition is only prima facie evidence of the fact, and raises a presumption in favour of the carrier which may be rebutted by the consignee, is firmly established; and it is manifestly consistent with rules of justice, equity and good conscience. The inference, therefore, follows that the decree made by the Small Cause Court Judge is correct, though his reasons are erroneous.

The result is that the Rule is discharged with costs one gold mohur.

CARNDUFF, J.—I agree. The short point of law raised by this Rule seems to be as to whether a bailor, who, in the absence of any agreement on the subject, has given the bailee a receipt for the goods bailed, is, ipso facto, precluded from proving that the goods were in reality damaged or deficient in quantity when delivered to him. I have myself been unable to find any authority either in England or here for holding that he is, and my learned brother has shown that it has been held elsewhere, for reasons which seem to me to be most cogent and convincing, that he is not.

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under r. 60 of Or. XXI of the Code of 1908. The circumstances under which the order in question has been made are not in controversy. On the 21st July 1910, the Petitioner before us applied for execution of a decree for money which she had obtained on the 19th March 1910. The properties of the judgment-debtor were duly attached on the 1st August 1910. The proclamation subsequently issued was returned unserved, and the Court directed the decree-holder to take necessary steps within five days from the 22nd November. No steps were taken, and on the 30th November the Court dismissed the application for execution for default. On the 12th December 1910, the judgment-debtor transferred the properties which had been previously attached by the decree-holder to one Madhabandaram. On the 23rd January 1911, the decree-holder obtained a review of the order of the 30th November 1910, and the execution proceeding was revived. The decree-holder took steps to have the sale proclaimed for the 20th March 1911. The assignee thereupon preferred a claim under r. 51 of Or. XXV of the Code. He contended that there was no valid attachment in force when he took the assignment, and that the subsequent revival of the execution proceeding could not in law operate as a revival of the attachment to the prejudice of his rights. The Court found on the evidence that the claimant was a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice, and that the contract with him for the sale of the property had been made on the 8th June 1910, long before the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree. In this view the Subordinate Judge allowed the claim under r. 60 of Or. XXI. We are now invited to discharge this order as made without jurisdiction, because it is contended that the properties were under attachment on the date of the assignment. The question raised is one of some novelty and not altogether free from difficulty mainly because the framers of the Code have omitted to provide for the contingency which has happened.

R. 57 of Or. XXI of the Code of 1908—we quote only so much of the rule as is applicable to this case—provides that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall dismiss the application; upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease. In the case before us the Court held on the 30th November 1910 that there had been default on the part of the decree-holder and dismissed the application under r. 57. Thereupon the attachment ceased in terms of the Rule. Consequently when the assignment was made in favour of the claimant on the 12th December 1910, there was no subsisting attachment in force; but it is contended on behalf of the decree-holder that when the order of dismissal for default was set aside on review on the 23rd January 1911, the parties were restored to the position they occupied before the execution proceeding was dismissed; in other words, the contention is that the effect of the revival of the execution proceeding was to revive the attachment automatically. It may be assumed that this would be the result in so far as the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor were concerned. But the question still remains whether the revival of the execution proceeding operates as a revival of the attachment so as to prejudice the right of strangers who have in the interval acquired, as here, a title to the property. In our opinion the question ought to be answered in the negative. At the time when the assignment was made there was no attachment in force. The assignee consequently acquired a good title in no way subject to the claim of the decree-holder. It is difficult to appreciate upon what principle his position may be deemed to be affected by a subsequent reversal of the order by a superior Court or by a cancellation thereof on review by the Court that had made it. The principle recognised by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Zainul-abdin v. Mahomed Ashgar (1) militates against this view. Numerous other instances will be found collected in the judgment of this Court in Janukdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal Bhaiya (2), in which the reversal of a judicial order has been taken to leave unaffected the rights of bonâ fide purchasers who have acquired title on the assumption that such orders were valid in law. Although in the case before us the assignment was by act of parties the same doctrine may well be applied. Here the Court had made an order for the dissolution of attachment: that order was in force at the date of the assignment to the claimant and was cancelled only after his title had been perfected. Reference may be made in this connection to the cases of Chetiattil v. Kumhi (3) and Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (4). In the former of these cases an attachment was issued after an ex parte decree had been set aside on the basis of an application made apparently when the decree was in force. The decree was subsequently restored after trial on the merits. It was ruled that this could not validate the attachment so as to prejudice an assignee of the attached property. In the second case an attachment had been effected before judgment and it was dissolved upon dismissal of the suit by the original Court. Upon appeal the dismissal was set aside and a decree made in favour of the Plaintiff. It was ruled that the reversal of the decree of the primary Court did not operate to revive the attachment to the prejudice of an assignee who had acquired a good title during the pendency of the appeal when no attachment was in operation. The true object of an attachment is to place the property in the custody of the Court so as to make it available for the realization of the fruits of the decree. If by reason of the dismissal of the suit or of the default of the decree-holder the Court dissolves the attachment, the property ceases to be in the custody of the Court. Upon reversal of the decree, or upon cancellation of the order of dismissal for default, the decree-holder may no doubt ask the Court to take the property back into its custody : but in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, we cannot hold that the Court can do so with retrospective effect so as to prejudice a title that may have been acquired in the interval when the property was admittedly not in the custody of the Court. As is pointed out in the case of Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (4), the question has been much debated in the Courts of the United States, and though there has been some divergence of judicial opinion the preponderance of decisions is against the revival of attachments with retrospective operation to the detriment of titles acquired in the interval. (Drake on Attachment, Ch. XVI). In some States the difficulty of the situation has been met by legislation, and conditions have been prescribed upon fulfilment of which an attachment, notwithstanding dismissal of the suit, may remain in suspense, and its uninterrupted operation restored upon reversal of the judgment. But in this country, as we have already stated, there is no legislative provision on the subject, and the plain meaning of r. 57 of Or. XXI is that upon dismissal of the application for execution by reason of default of the decree-holder the attachment ceases. We cannot hold that the attachment remains in suspense pending the result of the possible appeal or application for review. It has been suggested that this view may result in hardship to the decree-holder in cases where an erroneous order of dismissal for default has been made by the Court, but that is obviously a matter for the Legislature to consider. We may add that if the view we take may result in hardship to the decree-holder in some instances, the contrary view put forward by the learned Vakil for the Petitioner may equally lead to injustice to an assignee for value who has in the interval acquired title on the faith that the order of the Court has been properly made. We are, therefore, of opinion that there was no attachment in force when the claimant in this case took an assignment of the property which has been properly released under r. 60.

We may add that it was argued that if there was no attachment in force, a claim or an objection could not be preferred under r. 58. This position is no doubt technically correct, Sasirama v. Meherban (4), but there is no substance in it. As there is no attachment in force the decree-holder ought strictly to be called upon to attach the property. As soon as he proceeds to do so, the claimant will be at liberty to apply under r. 58, and then the Court will be called upon to determine whether the assignment was real, that is whether the assignee was in possession on his own behalf or that of the judgment-debtor. This matter has already been investigated and found against the decree-holder. It would be an idle formality to call upon the parties and the Court to repeat the steps already taken.

PATRINGA KOER v. MADHAVA NAND RAM.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule is discharged with cost. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

dated the 14th of July 1911, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 147 and 332, I. P. C., and sentencing each of them to rigorous imprisonment for nine months and a fine of Rs. 30, an appeal from which order was dismissed by Mr. J. A. Dawson, Additional Sessions Judge of Chittagong, on the 24th of July 1911.

The facts material to the report are briefly as follows :—

Abdul Majid, complainant, filed a petition to the Joint-Magistrate of Chittagong on 10th April for an order under sec. 552, Cr. P. C., on the allegation that his wife, Manuda Khatun, had been taken to the house of her uncle, Abdul Gani, Petitioner No. 3, with the object of being given away in marriage to somebody else.

On this, a search warrant was issued under sec. 100, Cr. P. C., though it is admitted that a printed form under sec. 98, Cr. P. C., was used in writing out the warrant.

It was in the course of the execution of the warrant that the offences charged against the Petitioners were alleged to have been committed.

They were placed on their trial in the Court of Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, who convicted the Petitioners under secs. 147 and 332, I. P. C., and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for 9 months and to pay a fine of Rs. 30.

Petitioners appealed to the Sessions Judge who dismissed the appeal.

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT IS NOTIFIED IN THE India Gazette FOR THE 17th February 1912, that Mr. T. W. Richardson, I. C. S., who has already on two previous occasions officiated as a Judge of the Calcutta High Court, has been appointed to act as an Additional Judge of the said Court for two years under the new High Courts Act with effect from the date on which he will take his seat on the Bench.

THE CASE OF Corbin v. Stewart, NOTED IN THIS issue, is of special interest to the medical profession. It recognises the immemorial custom amongst medical men of attending to a medical man's family without any charge and the learned judge has held that should any medical man desire to depart from the practice he must inform his professional brother or his family beforehand of his intention of charging for the attendance.

THE BAR COUNCIL AT ITS GENERAL MEETING HELD on the 18th of January last and presided over by Sir Robert Finlay entered its protest against the reduction of the salary of the Lords of Appeal in England from £6,000 to £5,000. It would be interesting in this connection to mention that a puisne Judge of the High Court in England receives an annual salary of £5,000, the Lord Chief Justice £8,000, the Master of the Rolls £6,000, and the Lords of Appeal in ordinary, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Atkinson, Lord Shaw, Lord Robson, £6,000 each. It would also be interesting to note in this connection the pensions that some of the eminent members of the Bench enjoy in England. Lord Halsbury receives a pension of £5,000 per annum, Lord Ashbourne a pension of £4,000, Lord Gorell and Lord Mersey pensions of £3,500 each. Of the Scotch Law Lords, Lord Dunedin receives a salary of £5,000 per annum and Lord Kinnear receives a salary of £3,600 per annum.

AT THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE BAR Council some questions of considerable professional importance were discussed. One of the most important of these was the providing of Counsel and solicitors to poor litigants. The view of the Council that indiscriminate springing up of societies or institutions for the procuring of legal aid to suitors would have the effect of increasing litigation, speculation in law suits and the number of unauthorised law agents over whom the State, the profession and law Courts would be able to exercise little control, seems to us to be eminently reasonable. We are, therefore, not a little surprised to find that the views of the Bar in this respect have been very adversely criticised by some influential sections of the English press. The observation of Sir Robert Finlay that the provision in the draft Rule for the payment of fees in suits brought in forma pauperis only when the case was successful was very unsatisfactory, seems to us to be quite reasonable. We gather that the general trend of socialist opinion in England is that the legitimate costs of the poor man's law suit should be met by Legal Aid Societies by adopting a system of insurance. That is, members making a payment of a penny or so a week would be entitled to legal aid when occasion arose. As was to be expected, the Bar Council and the Incorporated Law Society did not like to express any opinion on such a momentous question, for good or evil, without making proper enquiries and giving the matter their serious consideration.

UNDER THE MAHOMEDAN LAW A MOTHER OR A brother of an infant is not his natural guardian and cannot dispose of property on his behalf unless specially authorised by the Court. In Mr. Ameer Ali's work on Mahomedan law this view is affirmed but it is added that if the acts of the unauthorised guardian are to the manifest advantage of the infant: they should be upheld. Relying on this statement of the law, and also it seems on what was considered to be general grounds of equity and justice, the Calcutta High Court held in two recent cases, Mafazzal v. Basid, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 36 and Ram Charan v. Anukul Chandra, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 65, that an alienation for the benefit of a minor by a de facto guardian should be maintained. This practically annuls the distinction, so far as Mahomedan law is concerned, between a legal guardian and any one professing to be a self-constituted guardian, for even a legal guardian cannot alienate property except for the benefit of the minor.

IN A CASE BEFORE THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE, reported at p. 338 of this issue (Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali), the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh after examination of the authorities had come to the conclusion that there was nothing in Mahomedan law to warrant the proposition laid down in Mr. Ameer Ali's book upon which the Calcutta decisions were based. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee however refrained from deciding the question as the alienation in this case was not to the benefit of the minor. But their Lordships expressed the opinion generally that a so called de facto guardian could not clothe himself with the rights of a legal guardian. "It is difficult," their Lordships observed, "to see how the situation of an unauthorised guardian is bettered by describing him as a de facto guardian. He may by his de facto guardianship assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it." We presume that this expression of opinion would be sufficient to dispose of the argument that the rule is one supported by considerations of equity and justice, and we may doubt whether after this any argument in its favour derived from ancient Mahomedan texts of doubtful authority would be allowed to prevail.

reported at pp. 356 and 360 of this issue, that certain Railway administrations are being subjected to vexatious litigations based, as it appears, upon a misapprehension of the true scope of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Hari Lal v. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, 15 C. W. N. 195. It was surely not decided by the High Court in that case, that the Rules of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company in question were not properly sanctioned and published. The High Court accepted, as in a reference under sec. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act it was bound to accept, the finding of the Small Cause Court that the fact of the rules having been duly sanctioned and published had not been made out by the evidence adduced in that case, and it was held in consequence, so far as that particular case was concerned, that the Company could not take the benefit of those rules. The two cases referred to above will, it is hoped, finally remove any misapprehension as to what was actually decided in that case. But we cannot help joining in the regret expressed by his Lordship the Chief Justice in the case of Bengal Nagpur Railway Company v. Ramprotab, p. 360, that "any doubt on this point should be permitted to continue."

THE OTHER RAILWAY CASE REPORTED IN THIS issue, Janaki Das v. The Bengal Nagpore Railway Co., p. 386, is of very great importance to consignees of goods or other persons who may seek to pursue their remedy in Courts of law regarding claims against a Railway Company for damages for loss, detention or deterioration of goods delivered to the Company for purposes of transit, without serving proper notices on the Company. In 99 cases out of 100, the consignees do communicate their grievances to the officer specially employed by the railway administrations to consider such complaints within the time fixed by the Act for the service of notices. And yet when they institute a suit they are met by the highly technical plea that notice was not served on the Agent or the Manager in the manner required by the Act and they are put out of Court on that ground. It seems to us that the language of secs. 77 and 140 of the Railways Act does admit of a more liberal construction and such a construction has in fact been placed on it by the Madras High Court. But the current of authority of the Calcutta High Court has been otherwise, and it is too late perhaps now to expect a departure from it even though it must in a great many cases necessarily lead to a failure of justice. The public should therefore take care in every case to serve the Agent or Manager of a Railway Company with a formal notice of their claim at the same time that they lodge their complaint with the officers specially employed to look into such complaints.

IN Cave and another v. Horsell, DECIDED BY Phillimore, J., in the King's Bench Division on the 12th of January last, the question was raised how far a lessor's covenant not to let any of the adjoining shops for some specified purposes was enforceable. The Defendant in this suit let to the Plaintiffs No. 4 Lime Paxade, one of five shops numbered 2 to 6 all belonging to him. The lessor's covenant was not to let during the continuance of the lease which was for 20 years any of the said adjoining shops for purposes of certain specified business. The Defendant had by a later lease let No. 6, which was next door but one to Plaintiff's shop, to be used for the specified business. The Plaintiff thereupon sued the Defendant for damages and Phillimore, J., held that there was a breach of the covenant and awarded £120 damages to the Plaintiff. It might be said that the enforcement of such covenants by injunction except in suitable cases would amount to interference with freedom of trade but the award of damages would not be open to any such objection.

THE CASE OF Lloyd's Bank Ltd. v. Colston, decided by Warrington, J., in the Chancery Division on 14th January last, is of importance on a question of practice in mortgage suits. In this case the Court passed a decree for foreclosure of mortgaged property on a motion of the mortgagee after giving directions for sale under the following circumstances. The mortgagee had sued for enforcing an equitable mortgage and obtained an order directing an account of what was due, for costs and enquiry as to the properties comprised in the title-deed and Defendant's interest in them with further directions for the sale of the property with the approbation of the judge and payment into Court of the sale-proceeds and payment of what was due to the Plaintiff. The Master certified that £186 19s. 10d. was due to the Plaintiff with interests and costs up to the date fixed by Court for redemption. The capital value of the property was estimated at £160 and the mortgagee now moved for a declaration, that he was absolutely entitled to all the Defendant's interest in the property. The Court ordered a decree for foreclosure in lieu of sale but directed that the order should be prefaced by a statement of it having appeared by evidence that the security being of less value than the amount due it would not be to the interest of either party that the cost of an attempted sale should be incurred. In this connection it may be mentioned that in Exchange and Hop Warehouses v. Association of Land Financiers, 34 Ch. D. 195, the prosecution of accounts and enquiries was ordered to be stayed (unless defendant gave security for costs of the proceedings) on the ground of saving unnecessary cost, it being highly probable that the amount due to the Plaintiff would exceed the value of the property. As foreclosure precludes any action on the covenant, a foreclosure decree in such cases is always beneficial to the mortgagor.

IN THE CASE OF Steed v. Rogers THE COURT OF Criminal Appeal in England, on 22nd January last, had to decide a curious case of cruelty to animals. In the Cornwall coast a number of bottle-nosed whales were stranded by the incoming tide and left high and dry on the shore. A crowd collected and one of them inflicted gashes with a clasp knife into the body of a whale about two inches deep from the eyes for about four to five feet along the belly. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals prosecuted the man under sec. 2 of the Wild Animal in Captivity Protection Act of 1900 under which any person may be fined or imprisoned for cruelty to any "wild animal" "in captivity" by which the animal is "maimed," "pinioned" or "caused unnecessary suffering." Pickford and Avory, JJ., came to the conclusion (with regret) that though whales so stranded were "wild animals" the words of the Statute would not justify a conviction as the stranded whales could not be considered to be animals "in captivity," especially as with the return tide the uninjured whales floated away. Mr. Justice Pickford observed that "in captivity" does not mean temporary inability to get away from the place where they were.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Kerrison v. Glyn, Mills, Currier & Co. Before LORDS HALSBURY, ATKINSON, SHAW AND MERSEY. 4th December 1911.

Money paid to a party's banker under a mistake of fact if recoverable—Payment to representative, banker, in ignorance of bankruptcy of principal.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal. The facts were as follows:

On October 31st the Appellant, Mr. Kerrison, paid £500 to Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, and Co., the London correspondents and bankers of the firm of Kessler and Co., New York. The object of the payment was to cover accommodation or advances to be made by Messrs. Kessler to an American firm called Bote and Co. On that date, October 31st, Messrs. Kessler and Co. stood completely disabled from making such advances or giving such accommodation, for the reason that on the previous day they had filed a deed of assignment in favour of their creditors and had closed their doors. The money was paid, however, in London under the mistake in fact.

The Plaintiff redemanded the money which the Court below held he could not do. Their Lordships reversed that decision. In the course of his judgment Lord Shaw said :

The case was only of importance on account of an able attempt by the Respondents' counsel to distinguish the position of a banker from the position of any other recipient of money acting as factor or agent, and to attach the authority of this House to such a distinction as applicable to a case like the present. It was for this purpose that the dictum of Lord Cottenham in Foley v. Hill (2 Cl. and Fin., 28) was so strongly founded on. That dictum was not capable of the application suggested. In the first place it was pronounced, and indeed the case turned, on a point of procedure, or rather in regard to the respective jurisdictions of a Court of Law and a Court of Equity. This was expressly referred to by the Lord Chancellor when he described the argument :— "Although it is not disputed that the transactions between the parties gave the legal right, it is said a Court of Equity, nevertheless, has concurrent jurisdiction." In the second place, when the general language founded upon, to the effect that "money when paid into a bank ceases altogether to be the money of the principal," and so forth, was used, it was plain that that language was employed solely in regard to the relation between a banker and his own customer. And in the third place, it was not meant to be applied, and did not apply to, or cover the case of, money paid, whether by a customer or not, under a mistake in fact.

His Lordship agreed with the opinion that money so paid could be successfully redemanded. And he did not think that it would be correct, either in law or in business, to permit the recipient, though a banker, to impound money which his principal could not have honestly or legally retained. This rule applied generally, even although the recipient, whether banker or agent, was, as here, ignorant at the time of receipt of the disability of the principal to do the thing for which, and for which alone, the money was deposited, or was himself under a mistaken impression on that subject.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Rowlatt for the Appellant.

Mr. Bailhache, K. C., and Mr. Macpherson for the Respondents.

COURT OF APPEAL—Rio Tinto, "Ld." v. Pena Copper Mines, "Ld." Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND FARWELL. 28th November 1910.

Contract in England in English language—Action in Foreign Court—Chancery Division, its jurisdiction to restrain by injunction in personam at its discretion.

This was an appeal against an order of SWINFEN EADY, J., granting an injunction to restrain the Appellants from continuing or prosecuting (except under or in pursuance of an award under the agreement dated 20th October 1898) certain proceedings commenced by them against the Respondents in Spain. The said agreement was an agreement between the Appellants, Rio Tinto, "Ld." and the predecessors of the Respondents. The Appellants worked the railway and under the agreement they were to receive a lower rate for pyrites than other goods carried by them. They claimed a sum of roughly a quarter of a million pounds on the ground that the Respondents had paid to carry ore on the footing that it was pyrites although it was not pyrites at all, and they had brought that action in Spain to enforce that claim.

Cl. 24 of the agreement provided that it was to be construed and take effect as a contract made "in England and in accordance with the law of England." Cl. 25 contained a provision that all disputes were to be referred to arbitration in the manner provided by the Arbitrators Act, 1889, and that the award of the arbitration or umpire as the case might be should be "a condition precedent to any liability of either party in respect of any matter in difference or any right of action against either party in respect of any such matter in difference."

It was contended for the Defendants that the Court had no jurisdiction to restrain the action in Spain, and that the plea as to arbitration could properly be set up there. Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady granted an injunction from which this appeal which was dismissed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said :—

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery acting in personam was too well known to admit of question. Beyond all doubt the Court had jurisdiction to restrain the prosecution of proceedings in a foreign Court by an English person if the bringing of those proceedings was in breach of contract. The only authority cited on behalf of the Appellants was Hamlyn and Co. v. Talisker Distillery ([1894] A. C. 202), but really that case was fatal to their own contention. It was clear that the Court had jurisdiction to grant the injunction. No doubt it was a matter of discretion in each case whether the Court should grant an injunction, but there could be no better case than the present to justify the exercise of that discretion by granting the injunction. The action related to a contract written in English and governed by English law, and it was not a suitable case for the Spanish Courts to try.

Messrs. Martelli, K. C., and Strobe for the Respondents.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Corbin v. Stewart. Before MR. JUSTICE SCRUTTON. 30th November 1911.

Sale of medical practice by a doctor's wife—immemorial custom of medical profession to treat doctor's family without fee.

This was an action by Mrs. Corbin for the balance of price agreed to be paid for introductions to Dr. Corbin's patients, for board and lodging, etc. The Defendant, Dr. Stewart, denied the claim, and counter-claimed among other things £60 for his fees for medical attendance on the Plaintiff's children. He also contended that the Plaintiff had nothing to sell and that all that he purported to sell belonged either to the estate or to the Official Receiver. Until letters of administration were taken out the good-will vested in the Judge of the Court of Probate. The suit is not maintainable. The Plaintiff pleaded that it was an immemorial custom of the medical profession to attend members of the profession, their wives, widows and families without fee. The learned Judge held in favour of the Plaintiff on these points. He said:—

Dr. Corbin carried on business in a house which belonged to his wife. On his death his wife set to work to "sell the practice," using the words in the receipt; and ultimately an agreement was made to which it did not occur to any one to put in writing. The agreement was that the Defendant should purchase what was called the good-will at nine months' purchase, that he should live in the house and pay something for board and lodging, and that the Plaintiff should give him ordinary introductions. It was said that the Plaintiff could not sue. He must first see exactly what it was that was sold.

In Austen v. Boys, 27 L. J. Ch. 714, Lord Emsford had pointed out the difficulty of using the word "good-will" with regard to a professional man's business. One could not sell a doctor's patients like slaves, or the clients of a barrister, there was no doubt that doctors were ready to pay some sum calculated upon the profits of a doctor's business. It seemed to him that they were in respect, firstly, of an unreasonable propensity in human beings to keep on going to the house, which gave a doctor's house a certain value, and, secondly, of the fact that if people were told that B was the successor of A, they would go to B for that reason. He thought that the Plaintiff sold, first, the right to carry on business in the house which was her own, and, secondly, the right to say, "I am Dr. Corbin's successor." The first had nothing to do with the estate at all, and was purely personal to the Plaintiff.

He had some difficulty with and did not intend to decide the question as to the ownership of the second thing sold. He was rather inclined to think it belonged to the estate, but he found that the widow made a contract which included both these things, and, that being so, he saw no difficulty in her suing on that contract, although it might turn out that the estate would say afterwards, "part of that belongs to me."

In the Law Journal report of Smale v. Graves, 19 L. J. Ch. 157, it was held that the house belonged to the estate, and the widow there sold something very similar to what was sold in the present case. The same reasoning applied to any claim by the Official Receiver. It followed that the claim for the balance of the purchase price succeeded. As to the introductions, he was very much impressed by the absence of any written complaints by the Defendant, and by his own words written in October, "I know you have all done all that you could to help me." He could not find that there had been any breach of that part of the agreement towards a man who acted and wrote in that way. He was sorry that any charge of fraudulent misrepresentations had been set up, for which there was no foundation. With regard to the board and lodging, he found that £2 a week was a fair charge, and he availed himself of his privilege as a jury to give no reasons.

The question as to the charges for attending the children and the cook raised a question of general medical interest. The Plaintiff had young children and a cook. During the year of the Defendant's residence all the children were ill, some seriously, and something happened to the cook. The Defendant attended them and now claimed £60. He (the learned Judge) was quite clear that although there was not a binding custom, there was a very general practice among medical men, to their honour be it said, not to charge the widow and children of a deceased medical man for attendance shortly after his death. He need not go further than that. Under ordinary circumstances, where nothing was said there was an implied contract, where one employed a professional man, to pay him the ordinary charges. But that implication fell to the ground where, according to the practice of the profession, the ordinary charge was not made. He thought that, in a case like the present, if a doctor intended to charge he must say so, thus giving the patient the opportunity of declining his services and of going to another doctor who would not charge. If that had been done here the Defendant would have been the first to realize that it would be a very bad thing for him if the Plaintiff had gone to somebody else, for people would have said, "Mrs. Corbin is recommending him to us, but she herself goes elsewhere."

Special leave—Appealable value—Tenant's interest in dispute or value of land to be considered—Claim for mesne profits if to be taken into account.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal. The facts as stated therein were as follows :—

The Petitioner is the talukdar of Kurwar in the District of Sultanpur in the Province of Oudh and situate in the said taluk is a village Nighyawan. At the time of the Regular Settlement of the said Province the predecessor in title of the Respondents, Bhagwant Rai (now deceased), claimed sub-settlement rights in the said village. The claim was settled by a compromise, dated the 17th June 1869, and the Settlement Officer passed a decree in accordance therewith on the 22nd June 1869 in these words :—"Bhagwant Rai is decreed a 30 years lease, that is a lease for the term of the Regular Settlement now being made of the village of Nighyawan. He has no sub-proprietary right in the village."

The said term expired on the 30th June 1899, and the Petitioner issued to the said Bhagwant Rai (since deceased) a notice of ejectment under the provisions of sec. 52 of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886. On default of compliance with the said notice the Petitioner instituted the present suit on the 30th October 1906 in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad for ejectment of the said Bhagwant Ray (since deceased) from the said village.

The Defendant contested the suit and filed a written statement. He pleaded among other things that he was a perpetual lessee and not liable to ejectment.

The Deputy Commissioner framed several issues but he decided the suit on the determination of one issue only, namely,

"Is Defendant holding under a lease which expired on the 30th June 1899?"

He recorded evidence and delivered his judgment on the 11th April 1907. He was of opinion that the terms of the said decree, dated the 22nd June 1869, were ambiguous and that evidence of surrounding circumstances was admissible to show the true meaning and effect of the said decree. The said decree of the Settlement Officer so construed meant, in his opinion, to give a permanent hereditary lease to the Defendant. He accordingly made a decree dismissing the claim with costs.

The Petitioner appealed against the said decree of the Commissioner of Fyzabad Division which delivered his judgment on the 24th August 1907. He agreed with the finding of the lower Court and accordingly made a decree dismissing the appeal with costs.

The Petitioner being dissatisfied with the said decree applied to the said Commissioner of Fyzabad Division on the 7th February 1908 for leave to appeal therefrom to His Majesty in Council.

Before passing an order on the said petition the said Court directed the lower Court to make an enquiry as to the market value of the subject-matter of the suit. The lower Court recorded evidence and submitted its finding which was that the subject-matter of the suit was worth Rs. 9,238 odd. In its opinion the subject-matter of the suit was not the said village but the quantity of interest which the Defendant possessed therein. It found that the gross assets of the said village amounted to Rs. 804 odd per annum. After deducting the putwari rate and the payments of rent including cesses made every year to the superior landlord the Court found that the net income of the Defendant was Rs. 369 odd and estimating the market value at 25 years' purchase arrived at the finding mentioned above. On receipt of the said finding the Commissioner of Lucknow refused to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council by an order, dated the 30th September 1909, in terms following :—"With regard to the first clause of sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code I find that the subject-matter of the suit is below Rs. 10,000.

"With regard to the second clause of the said section I am unable, as was Mr. Rogers also, to accept the contention that the value of the whole village is directly or indirectly involved. The talukdar already gets a malikana allowance of Rs. 111 and that amount cannot clearly be added to the profits of the opposite party for the purpose of valuation.

"It is also urged on behalf of the applicant that in consequence of the judgment of the Privy Council in Maneshwar Prasad v. Muhammad Ali Khan (L. R. 36 I. A. p. 114) special leave to appeal should be given under cl. (c) of sec. 109, Civil Procedure Code. I find, however, that it has been laid down that this provision is intended to meet special cases where the point in dispute is of importance though not measurable in money."

Hence this petition.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé) submitted that the subject-matter of the appeal was worth over Rs. 10,000. The Court below took no account of the mesne profits to which we shall be entitled in case of success; and also refused to take into consideration the income which a zemindar usually derives from the jungle, village market and trees, having regard to the decision in Maneshar Prasad v. Ewas Ali Khan, L. R. 36 I. A. 114, justice required that special leave ought to be given.

Their Lordships reserved judgment, and subsequently refused the petition.

Mahomedan Law—Sale with condition—Condition invalid.

The suit was for recovery of possession of a holding of 6 bighas which originally belonged to Enyatulla. Enyatulla sold the land in 1301 to his wife Sakhijan in consideration of what was due to her as her dower. The terms of the kobala were that the property should be transferred to Sakhijan and that the rights of Enyatulla in it should come to an end, but there was a condition that, during the life-time of Enyatulla, the land should remain in his khas possession and that Sakhijan should not be entitled to alienate the property.

Enyatulla subsequently sold the property again to the Defendant No. 2. Three days after the sale to Defendant No. 2 Sakhijan executed a registered kabuliyat in favour of the landlords in respect of the land. Subsequently the landlords brought a suit for rent against Sakhijan and obtained a decree and in execution the Plaintiff purchased the holding. The Defendants were in possession of the holding and the Plaintiff accordingly brought this suit which was decreed by the Courts below.

The Defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court.

Held—That the stipulation in the kobala in favour of Enyatulla did not invalidate the original transfer.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 852 OF 1910. KUNJ BEHARI LAL MONDAL, Plaintiff, Appellant v. PUNCHU LAL AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 23rd January 1912.

Priority of sale by registered kobala of later date over sale by unregistered kobala valued above Rs. 100 of prior date—Notice.

The Defendant, Punchu Lal, purchased certain land from Jogeswar Mondal for Rs. 500 by an unregistered kobala and got delivery of possession of the same. Subsequent to the said sale Jogeswar sold the land to Plaintiff for Rs. 400 by a registered kobala. Plaintiff went to take possession but was resisted by Defendant and therefore brought the present suit for recovery of possession. The first Court gave Plaintiff a decree. The District Judge on appeal held that Plaintiff purchased with notice of the Defendants' previous purchase and knew that fraud was practised by his vendor upon the Defendant and must be presumed to be a party to this fraud and would not be entitled to any relief and in that view dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Held—The transaction in favour of Defendant, Punchu Lal, was a nullity and the Plaintiff was not in any way debarred from buying the property because he knew of the Defendant's invalid purchase. The cases which lay down that a person purchasing property which he knew to have been validly transferred to others cannot question the transfer have no application where such prior sale was an absolute nullity.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 915 OF 1909. SATYA SRIGHOSAL AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. KARTICK CHANDRA DAS AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 22nd January. Judgment, 29th January 1912.

Presumption of permanent tenancy—Property debutter at the time the tenancy originated.

The second appeal arose out of a suit to eject the Defendants from a piece of land in Kidderpore on the ground that they were monthly tenants to whom due notice to quit was given. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit with costs, holding that the Defendants had a permanent tenancy. The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Held—"The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity; it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principle."

If the property was debutter at the time the tenancy originated, it would affect the applicability of the presumption, for to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a shebail and was not therefore presumable.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 268 OF 1910. CHAG MULL AND SURAJ MULL, Appellants v. JAI NARAI AND ANOTHER, Respondents. Heard, 16th and 17th January. Judgment, 29th January 1911.

Appeal—Insolvency Act of 1907, sec. 46—Tried by Deputy Commissioner.

The appeal was from an order of the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, dated the 10th March 1910, made by the first Respondent under sec. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1901 setting aside a transfer of his house and shop made by the second Respondent, Nazir Khan, to the Appellants.

The facts of the case were as follows: On the 17th November 1908, the second Respondent transferred the premises in question to the Appellants in order to avoid execution proceeding in a suit brought by them. Six or ten days later the second Respondent filed his petition in insolvency: This he did under the insolvency section of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, as Darjeeling is a Scheduled District under the Insolvency Act, which was not then in force there. The present Civil Procedure Code was applied to Darjeeling on the 5th January 1909, and the Provincial Insolvency Act on the 25th January 1909. The second Respondent was adjudged insolvent on the 27th May 1909 by the District Judge who appointed a Receiver, and transferred the case to the Deputy Commissioner on the 12th June 1909. On the 9th July the first Respondent filed the petition to have the transfer in question set aside, and it was set aside on the 10th March 1910.

On appeal to the High Court:

Held—That appeal lay to the District Court and not to the High Court by force of sec. 46 of the Insolvency Act, as the case was tried by the Deputy Commissioner, as being a Court subordinate to the District Judge, invested with jurisdiction under sec. 3.

GURAMEAH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

passed on the Petitioners should not be set aside on the ground that on the facts proved it ought to be held that the alleged search warrant was illegal and without jurisdiction, and resistance if any to the execution thereof does not amount to any offence.

We are unable to find on the facts that the alleged search warrant was either illegal or without jurisdiction. The order of the Magistrate passing it was made with jurisdiction and it was an order for a warrant under sec. 100 for Manuda Khatun for immediate appearance. Now that warrant was snatched away and destroyed by the accused persons, and it must therefore be presumed that it contained the substance of what is set out in sec. 100, although admittedly it was drawn up on a form which is printed for use under sec. 98. Now under sec. 100 the only kind of warrant that can be issued is a search warrant, and the person to whom such warrant is directed may search for the person so confined and such search shall be made in accordance therewith and the person if found shall be immediately taken before the Magistrate. Now let us see how this warrant under sec. 100 can be conveyed on a form under sec. 98. It is perfectly clear that the form under sec. 98 after scratching out cls. (c) and (d) would be perfectly sufficient for the execution of a process under sec. 100. It is in evidence that there is no form printed under sec. 100 and that the form under sec. 98 is always used for these warrants under sec. 100. We must therefore take it that the portions which had to be altered were altered. But a warrant under sec. 98 used for the purpose of sec. 100 would run perfectly correctly in the words of sec. 98, to enter with such assistance as may be required in such place, that is the house where the woman was confined, and to search the same in the manner specified in the warrant and to take into custody and carry before the Magistrate the person named therein. Now the evidence is that the person named therein is this Manuda Khatun. We therefore find that the alleged search warrant was not illegal nor without jurisdiction, and that any resistance thereto was therefore an offence.

Several cases have been cited to us, but there was only one of them which in any way touches this case, and this is the ruling in Bisu Haldar v. Probhat Chandra (1). There the person applied under sec. 100, Cr. P. C., for a search warrant, but the Magistrate issued warrant under sec. 96, Cr. P. C., under which the Police supposed themselves to be acting: held, that the issue of the warrant under sec. 96 was illegal and the order was a nullity. Reading this finding and the judgment in the case it is clear that the error in that case was an error in substance and not in form. The Magistrate himself with his eyes open issued the warrant under sec. 96. The warrant purported to be for the purpose of sec. 96 and the Police who executed it supposed that they were acting under sec. 96. The case therefore is clearly distinguishable from the present case where the error, if there is any, as to which we know nothing, could have been one merely of form. But having regard to what the learned Judge has said with respect to these cases in the last passage in his judgment we think that the accused have been too harshly dealt with. The learned Judge says,—“This is one of those cases of not infrequent occurrence which show how keenly Mahomedans resent the issue of any process against a woman who may be an accused or a witness in a 498, I. P. C. case, or analogous case; and it is doubtless because of such cases that the Government of this Province has recently issued an order that such complaints should in the first instance be referred to a Local Mahomedan Marriage Registrar or other gentleman of position for enquiry and report. Probably if this had been done in the present instance the present case would not have arisen."

We think that there is a great deal to be said from this point of view, and while we agree with the learned Judge that the Police when they get a warrant from the Magistrate are bound to execute it and must be fully protected in the execution thereof, we are willing to take a more lenient view of the conduct of the accused in the present case than the lower Courts have found it necessary to do.

We therefore in discharging the Rule direct that the sentence on the Petitioners be reduced to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment, and that the fine of 30 rupees each passed upon them do stand with the alternative sentence of imprisonment. The accused will therefore surrender to their bail and serve out the rest of their modified sentence.

MATA DIN, Defendant, Appellant,
v.

SHEIKH AHMAD ALI, Plaintiff,

Respondent.

Mahomedan Law—Will—Executor by implication—Devisee, vesting of estate directly in—Guardianship of minor—Brother if guardian of minor brother—De facto guardianship if confers power to sell—Necessity and benefit, if justifies sale—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 44, 144—Suit to set aside sale by unauthorised guardian.

Under the Mahomedan Law, in the absence of duly appointed testamentary guardians, the care of a minor's property would devolve first on the father and his executor, next on the paternal grandfather and his executor and, failing these, the right of nomination of a guardian would "rest in the ruling power and its administration."

A brother of the minor would therefore have no right to act as guardian except under the authority of an appointment by the Court.

A person who has without authority been acting as the de facto guardian of a minor may, by his de facto guardianship, assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it.

Quære:—Whether, according to Mahomedan Law, a sale by a de facto guardian if made of necessity or for the payment of an ancestral debt affecting the minor's property and if beneficial to the minor is altogether void or merely voidable.

Art. 44 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877 had no application to a suit to set aside a sale by an unauthorised guardian.

Held, on a construction of the will of a Mahomedan testator who left virtually the whole of his property to his four grandsons (one of whom was a minor) in equal shares, that there was no appointment of any of the sons as executor by implication.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 7th

MATA DIN v. SHEIKH AHMAD ALI.

August 1907, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 9th March 1907, of the District Judge of Lucknow who affirmed on appeal a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 28th May 1906.

The principal question for determination on the present appeal related to the validity of the disposition of a minor's property by his brother who was not his guardian under the Muhammadan Law but who acted as such under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows :

One Amir Haider possessed considerable property. He mortgaged a 15 annas share in Mouzah Kabirpur to the Defendant-Appellant by a deed dated the 2nd December 1885. He also executed another mortgage, dated the 7th August 1886, in favour of the same creditor, of a 4 annas share in Mouzah Karora. Under the terms of the said bonds the mortgagee was to take possession and to realize his interest from the profits, and to make over the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor. The mortgagee duly obtained possession of the said villages.

The said Amir Haider died on the 12th August 1887, leaving a will, dated the 7th December 1886, by which he devised and bequeathed his entire estate in four equal shares to his grandsons, namely, Mujid Husain, Ashraf Husain, Muhammad Ali and Ahmad Ali (Plaintiff-Respondent). This Respondent was then a minor.

On the 15th June 1889, the said three brothers on their own behalf and Ashraf Husain on behalf of the Respondent sold the entire 16 annas in Mouzah Kabirpur to the Appellant with the result that the Appellant who was a usufructuary mortgagee of a 15 annas share in the said village thereby became an absolute owner thereof. On attaining majority the Respondent refused to recognize the validity of the said sale. He insisted on treating the said mortgage, dated 2nd December 1885, as one still subsisting to the extent of his one-fourth share, but the Appellant denied it.

The Respondent therefore instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow on the 14th September 1905. He stated the facts set forth above, and claimed to redeem the said mortgage to the extent of his share on payment of what was found due after taking an account of the profits received by the Appellant.

The Defendant-Appellant filed a written statement and his pleas so far as they are material to this report would appear from the following amongst several issues fixed by the said Subordinate Judge :—

Is the Plaintiff bound by the sale-deed, dated 15th June 1889?

Is the claim for redemption barred by limitation?

Is the Plaintiff estopped from questioning the acts of Ashraf Husain relating to the property in suit?

After recording and examining evidence, oral and documentary, the said Subordinate Judge found the first four issues in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent, and also found that the said sale was neither necessary nor beneficial to the Respondent. He accordingly made a decree allowing the claim for redemption with costs on the 28th May 1906.

The Defendant appealed against the said decree to the District Judge of Lucknow who delivered his judgment on the 9th March 1907. He held that the said sale was void under the Muhammadan Law and accordingly passed a decree dismissing the appeal with costs.

The Defendant presented a second appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which delivered its judgment on the 7th August 1907. That Court agreed with the view taken by the lower Courts and affirmed their decrees with a slight modification of the amount of money payable on redemption.

Mr. Greeven, Judicial Commissioner, in the course of his judgment (with which Mr. Chamier concurred) said :—

"The second plea (grounds Nos. 3 and 4 of the memorandum) is to the effect that, by the ordinary principles of Muhammadan Law, the adult brothers of Ahmad Ali (Plaintiff-Respondent), in the capacity of his de facto guardians, were competent to convey his share in the property to discharge a debt incurred by his grandfather. For the sake of this argument, it is not disputed that the brother of a Muhammadan minor is not his natural guardian [Ruttun v. Dhoomee Khan (1), Musammatt Bukshun v. Musammatt Doolhin (2), Bhutnath Dey v. Ahmad Hosain (3), Husein Begam v. Zia-ul-nisa Begam (4)]. It is conceded that he is in no better position than the mother whose power, when she is acting as a de facto guardian, to alienate the property of her minor son, was recently the subject of a minute examination by a Bench of this Court [Amba Shankar v. Ganga Singh (5)]. In that case it was mentioned (at p. 99) that no authority was cited by Mr. Ameer Ali for a statement (Muhammadan Law, second edition, 1894, Vol. II, p. 476) to the effect that if a mother deals with the estate of her minor children "without being especially authorised by the Judge or by the father, her act should be treated as the act of a fazuli" and "if they are to the manifest advantage of the children, they should be upheld, if not, they should be set aside." We are asked to reconsider that decision on the ground that the missing authority is to be found in the doctrine of the acts of fazulis as recently adopted in two judgments of the High Court at Calcutta, Mafazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (6), Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharya (7), by which it is argued, not without some show of reason, that a previous ruling of the same Court, Moyna Bibi v. Banku Behari Biswas (8), has been virtually overruled, though it is described only as having been distinguished. There can be no question that, in the two cases cited Mr. Justice Ameer Ali's observations have been accepted as an authoritative expression of a principle of the Muhammadan Law and it has been held that a Muhammadan mother, though not the legal guardian of the property of her minor children, may, when acting as de facto guardian, make transfers of that property which, if they are for the benefit of the minor children, will be maintained by the Courts. In support of this view of the law we have been referred to an original authority (Hamilton, Hedaya, 1791, Vol. II, Book XVI, Ch. X, p. 508) which, as interpreted by the Appellant, formulates the principle that by a consensus of opinion amongst the doctors with the single exception of shafai, a contract of a fazuli is complete in itself even without the consent of the real owner. It may be observed for the sake of completeness that, in the present instance, it is contended that almost the whole consideration of the transaction impugned was borrowed for the purpose of extinguishing ancestral debt which, according to the Muhammadan Law, is a legal necessity. On this ground we are asked to distinguish two cases, Hurbai v. Hiraji Byramji Shanja (9), Pathummabai v. Vittil Ummachabi (10), which were prominently cited as authorities in the previous decision of this Court, Amba Shankar v. Ganga Singh (5), but which are now questioned as relating to money taken for purposes not contemplated by the Muhammadan Law. That the discharge of debts attaching to the estate of the deceased is sufficient warrant for a sale by an executor, can be defended by ample authority (Baillie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, I, 1875, p. 688; Shama Charan Sarkar's Muhammadan Law, 1875, p. 106). We are pressed with a further argument that an elder brother, though he may not be a natural guardian under the Muhammadan Law, derives some authority in dealing with the minor's property from the circumstance that he belongs to the 'paternal kindred,' Mafazsal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (6).

"I venture to think that the decision of this Court, Amba Shankar v. Ganga Singh (5), which we are asked to review, was correctly decided. It will be observed that all the materials, including the observations of Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, were before the Court when the decision was given. The question for determination lies, therefore, in a very narrow compass, and we have really only to ascertain whether the recent decisions in Calcutta have added anything, hitherto unconsidered, to the discussion. It is manifest to my mind that the observation of Mr. Justice Ameer Ali was the only authority for the view taken by the High Court at Calcutta for the application of the doctrine of fazulis. Mr. Justice Rampini, no doubt, refers (page 38) to two other authorities (Macnaghten's Precedents, p. 306; Shama Charan Sarkar's Tagore Lectures, p. 480); but the first of these passages relates exclusively to personal property with reference to a case stated (page 305, case II) in which a guardian has been duly appointed; and the second appears to be a false reference inasmuch as the page quoted occurs in the index. Mr. Justice Woodroffe confines himself (p. 41) to citing Mr. Ameer Ali as his sole authority for holding the supposed principle to be 'a rule of Muhammadan Law.' The second decision of the High Court at Calcutta, Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharya (7), merely follows the view taken. This view derives no support whatever from the original text-books; and it will be observed that a fazuli's contract, though in other respects complete, does not become binding upon the real owner of the property until he has given his consent (Hamilton, Hedaya, loc. cit.). Thus the case of a minor, who cannot give a valid consent, is entirely excluded. There is absolutely no doubt, upon the authorities cited, that a person acting as de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor, is not invested with the power of selling that minor's immoveable property.

"The first of the cases recently decided by the High Court at Calcutta, Maffazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (6), so far as it seeks to invest the paternal kindred with the powers of a guardian for the minor's property, is founded upon a passage (Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan Law, eighth reprint, revised by Sloan, 1897, p. 304, case I) which recognises investiture of the paternal kindred with certain powers. These powers relate only to matrimony and are restricted in their exercise to the father and grandfather and their executors. So far as the learned judges appear to have been disposed to invest the paternal kindred with power to deal with a minor's property, their observations would seem to be opposed to authority (Wilson's Muhammadan Law, 1903, pp. 207 and 208). It is clear that the paternal kindred are invested with powers only for the custody of the minor's person, while they do not figure amongst the guardians competent to deal with his property (ibidem, pp. 208 and 209, Art. 112)."

Against this decision the Defendant preferred this appeal.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown (with him Mr. A. P. Sen) for the Appellant.—The sale-deed, dated the 15th June 1889, was at the most voidable and not void. The Respondent ratified it on attaining his majority. Further the major brothers were appointed executors to their grandfather's will, and being also heirs could sell the property to pay the testator's debts. The provisions of the will (cl. 9) show that the testator's intention was that his debts were to be paid and the estate administered by his grandsons. To appoint an executor it was not necessary to use the word "executor" or any particular word. Reference was made to secs. 3 and 7, Probate and Administration Act, 1881; Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, pp. 556 and 557; Baillie's Mahomedan Law, p. 632. All brothers were appointed joint-executors but only three being able to act they administered the estate. No grant of probate was necessary. Being executors any one of them could have acted as the guardian of the minor and had power to sell his share in the estate. Reference was made to In the goods of Russel (11). Sec. 90, Probate Act, as amended by Act VI of 1889. In the goods of Indra Chandra Singh (12). The next point is that Ashraf Husain was the de facto guardian of the Respondent.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—What is a de facto guardian?]

In an Irish case the word was explained to mean a person who holds possession of property on behalf of an infant, and when so connected with him as to protect this infant's interests.

[LORD ROBSON.—Such a person has liabilities, but has he any rights.].

It has been held that under the Mahomedan Law a mother's act is that of a fazuli, but it is not void. He referred to Abdul Kader v. Amtal Karim (13), *Maffazzal Hosain v. [LORD MACNAGHTEN referred to Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (19).]

Further a de facto guardian's act is not void, but voidable. It could be ratified and was so ratified by the Respondent's taking advantage of the redemption of Mouzah Karora. The Respondent came of age in 1893 and the present suit was instituted more than 12 years after attaining majority. It was barred by time.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Respondent.—The sale in question was a totally unauthorized act, and was void. A sale even by a guardian is not permitted except for extreme necessity. Reference was made to Must. Bukshan v. Must. Maldai Kooeri (20), Moyna Bibi v. Bantū Bihari (8), Nizamuddin Shah v. Ananti Pershad (21), Ruttun v. Dhoomee Khan (1) was similar to the present case, and it was held that no title passed. In Oudh in the case of Amba Shankar v. Ganga Singh (5), it has been held that a mother's transfer is void altogether.

The cases cited on behalf of the Appellant are distinguishable. They were based on the nature of the transaction, and not on any supposed authority or power in the guardian. The principles of equity and good conscience were applied in Mofazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (6), but it was a case relating to moveables only. There was no authority whatever of text-writers or commentators on Mahomedan Law which laid down that an unauthorized act of a fazuli dealing with immoveables could be upheld by the Court in a case of necessity. In any case both the Courts have found that there was no necessity for the sale, and that it was not for the minor's benefit. There was no acquiescence on the part of the Respondent, and the suit was well within time. The mortgage, dated the 2nd December 1885, was for a fixed term of 10 years which expired in 1895.

Mr. Brown replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBSON.—In this case the Appellant has been unsuccessful, first, before the Subordinate Judge at Lucknow, next, before the District Judge of Lucknow, and, lastly, before the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner granted a certificate for an appeal to their Lordships' Board on the ground that the case raised a question of law as to whether the transfer of a Mahomedan minor's property by a person who was not his natural guardian should be upheld, if made to discharge a debt payable by the minor.

The facts of the case are these:—

Sheikh Ahmad Ali, the Respondent, was the grandson of Amir Haider, who, in his lifetime, was possessed of two villages, Kabirpur and Karora. Amir Haider mortgaged a 15 annas share in Kabirpur to the Defendant-Appellant on the 2nd December 1885, and on the 7th August 1886 he executed another mortgage in favour of the same creditor of a 4 annas share in Karora. The mortgages provided that the mortgagee should take (and he duly took) immediate possession of the mortgaged property for the purpose of realizing the agreed interests out of the annual profits, making over the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor. The terms of the said mortgages were for ten and seven years respectively.

Amir Haider died on the 12th August 1887, leaving a will, dated the 7th December 1886, by which he bequeathed his entire estate to his four grandsons equally. The Plaintiff was about 12 years old when his grandfather died. Afterwards, on the 15th June 1889, the three elder grandsons on their own behalf, and one of them, Ashraf Husain, purporting to act also as the guardian of the Plaintiff, sold the village at Kabirpur to the Appellant in consideration of the discharge by him of the debts secured thereon and on Karora, together with certain other smaller sums, making up a total of Rs. 18,500. The effect of this sale, if held good, was that the Plaintiff lost his interest altogether in the village of Kabirpur, which was the larger and more important property, while the smaller village Karora was thenceforth free of the mortgage.

The Plaintiff on attaining his majority in 1892 or 1893 made no attempt to impeach this transaction, though he knew of it, but in September 1905 he tendered to the Defendant the amount of mortgage money necessary to redeem his share of the mortgage property, and the Defendant refusing to accept it, he brought this action for redemption.

He contends that the sale-deed of the 15th June 1889 is void as against him, on the ground that his brothers had no authority under the grandfather's will to act as executors or to sell his share, and that Ashraf Husain who purported to represent him in that transaction as his guardian was not entitled so to act. The Appellant contends that the four grandsons were entitled to act as executors under Amir Haider's will, but their Lordships agree with the Courts below in finding that there is nothing in the will justifying that view.

The testator left the whole of his property (with certain unimportant exceptions) to his four grandsons in equal shares, and subject to equal obligations in respect of his debts and expenses, but he did not expressly appoint any executors of his will or guardians of his minor grandchildren. It was argued that an express appointment was not necessary if the testator had clearly shown by his will an intention to entrust its administration to particular individuals, but on a fair construction of this will no such intention can be gathered from it. He left his property to his grandsons so that each share thereof vested at once in the devisee, subject to the obligations attaching thereto, and there appears to be no necessity for any act of an executor to complete the operation of the will. No doubt the testator contemplated a partition by the grandsons themselves of the property devised to them, and in that case it would be necessary for his grandson, if still an infant, to have a guardian, but there is nothing whatever to show that he intended all or any one of the brothers to act in that capacity. So far as his intention is concerned, it may well have been that if, and when, the necessity for a guardian arose, the selection should be made by the Court.

The family were Muhammadans and were governed by the Muhammadan Law relating to guardianship. According to that law, in the absence of duly appointed testamentary guardians the care of Ahmad Ali's property would devolve first on the father and his executor, next on the paternal grandfather and his executor, and failing these, the right of nomination of a guardian would "rest in the ruling power and its administration." (Macnaghten's "Principles of Mahomedan Law," 5th Ed., p. 304). The brothers had, therefore, no right whatever to act except under the authority of an appointment by the Court. Both they and the Appellant seem to have had that fact in their minds when they executed the deed of the 15th June 1889 effecting the sale of Ahmad Ali's share in the land, for they stipulated that if Ahmad Ali at any time brought a claim on the ground of minority, and any dispute thereby arose in respect of Mata Din's possession, the three elder brothers should be answerable for the same together with costs.

It is urged on behalf of the Appellant that the elder brothers were de facto guardians of the Respondent, and, as such were entitled to sell his property, provided that the sale was in order to pay his debts and was therefore necessary in his interest. It is difficult to see how the situation of an unauthorised guardian is bettered by describing him as a "de facto" guardian. He may, by his de facto guardianship, assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it.

There has been much argument in this case in the Courts below, and before their Lordships, as to whether, according to Muhammadan Law, a sale by a de facto guardian, if made of necessity, or for the payment of an ancestral debt affecting the minor's property, and if beneficial to the minor, is altogether void or merely voidable. It is not necessary to decide that question in this case. To begin with, the Appellant has not succeeded in showing that the disputed sale of 1889, although made for the payment of an ancestral debt was made of necessity, or was beneficial to the minor. On the contrary, the Courts below have all found on the evidence that it was unnecessary and cannot be said to have been beneficial so far as Ahmad Ali was concerned.

It is next found as a fact, (and their Lordships see no sufficient reason to find otherwise), that the Plaintiff on coming of age never acquiesced in the transaction which he now seeks to impeach, and that there was nothing in his conduct on which the Defendant's plea of estoppel could be justified against him. Unless, therefore, the Plaintiff's remedy is barred by the Indian Limitation Act IX of 1877, he is now entitled to the relief prayed for, as modified by the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

As to the plea of limitation, the Appellant-Defendant placed reliance on Arts. 44 and 144 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.

Art. 44 prescribes a period of 3 years within which a ward who has attained majority may set aside a sale made by his guardian, the time running from the date of the ward's majority. This provision has no application to the present case, for the sale here was effected, not by a guardian, but by a wholly unauthorised person.

Art. 144 deals with immoveable property not otherwise specially provided for by the Act, and prescribes a period of 12 years from the time when the possession of the Defendant becomes adverse to the Plaintiff. In this case, the Appellant was entitled under his mortgage to full possession of Kabirpur and receipt of its rents and profits for 10 years from the 2nd December 1885. The Respondent came of age on some date in 1892 or 1893. He was then certainly entitled to treat, (and by his subsequent tender of the mortgage money it is shown that he has in fact treated), the mortgage as subsisting so far as he was concerned. Under these circumstances, the possession by Mata Din of Kabirpur did not become adverse to the Respondent until the 2nd December 1895, and as this action was begun in 1905 it was well within the period of limitation.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19—Judgment-debt, acknowledgment of—Debt specified in insolvency petition.

An application for execution of a decree was not time-barred though made more than three years after a previous application, where it appeared that the judgment-debtor had in the meanwhile filed a petition of insolvency in which the judgment-debt in question was specified.

The petition though it might not have been addressed to the creditors was nevertheless an acknowledgment within sec. 19 of the Limitation Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 31st of August 1909, against an order of Babu J. N. Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, in Zillah Bhagulpur, dated the 12th of July 1909.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal from an order made by the lower Court on an application in an execution case. The only point we have to consider is whether the execution proceedings was barred by limitation. An application for execution in respect of a certain debt was made on the 9th September 1905. The next application that was made was on the 27th April 1909. The question is whether this second application was barred by the provisions of the Limitation Act. The point before us is whether an application of insolvency, which was made on the 14th May 1906, contained such an acknowledgment of the liability as to bring the case under sec. 19 of the Limitation Act. The judgment-debtor filed a petition of insolvency in which he set out, in compliance with the statute, a list of his debts. The debt which forms the subject-matter of the execution proceedings was mentioned in that petition. Under the last part of explanation (1) to sec. 19 it is not necessary that the acknowledgment under the section should be addressed to the person entitled to the property in respect of which the acknowledgment is made. This seems to prevent the only argument that can be raised under the section, namely that the acknowledgment was not made to the creditors. Whether it was in fact made to the creditors or not we need not consider, for the terms of the section amply cover the statement in the insolvency proceedings. Such authority as is quoted in the matter seems to rest on English cases which we need not consider here, as we have to consider the terms of the Indian Limitation Act. This construction of sec. 19 seems to be referred to in the case of Maniram Sett v. Seth Rupchand (1) decided by the Privy Council. We hold therefore that the lower Court is right in deciding that the second petition for execution of the decree was not barred, as the petition of insolvency contained a sufficient acknowledgment to keep alive the decrees.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

This judgment governs appeal from original order No. 446 of 1909. In each of these appeals the hearing-fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Defendants in a suit of a novel description. The Plaintiffs Respondents allege that they are the descendants of one Sham Nath Misser, and that along with the Defendants, who are other descendants of the same person, they are entitled to officiate as priests at the offering of pindas on the banks of the sacred river Punpun in the District of Gaya. According to orthodox Hindu notions, it is the duty of the pilgrim to Gaya to shave his head on the bank of the river Punpun, to perform the sradh ceremony of his ancestors and to bathe in the waters of the river on his way to the holy city. The Plaintiffs allege that, as the descendants of Sham Nath Misser, they and the Defendants are exclusively entitled to officiate as priests at the offering of pinda, and that whoever amongst them may be employed by a particular pilgrim, he is bound to share with the other members of the family the offerings received and the emoluments earned by him. The Defendants resist the claim of the Plaintiffs, deny that the Plaintiffs are the descendants of Sham Nath Misser, and claim to be exclusively entitled to officiate as priests on the occasion of the ceremony mentioned. The Courts below have concurrently made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs by which they are declared entitled to be restored to possession of the right claimed by them, to recover mesne profits and to have formal possession of the share of the disputed property, to be enjoyed jointly with the Defendants or alternately on different dates as might suit their convenience. The Defendants have appealed to this Court, and on their behalf, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the Courts below have erroneously found on evidence inadmissible in law that the Plaintiffs are descendants of Sham Nath Misser, and, secondly, that the decree made in favour of the Plaintiffs is contrary to law, and grants them relief not enforceable in a Civil Court. In our opinion, the first of these grounds is unsustainable, but the second must prevail in part.

In so far as the first contention is concerned we are unable to hold that the Courts below have relied upon any evidence inadmissible in law. Objection has been principally taken to statements made by the predecessors of the parties, but these statements are clearly admissible under sec. 32, sub-sec. 5 of the Indian Evidence Act. Consequently there is no substance in the first objection taken by the Appellants.

In so far as the second ground urged by the Appellants is concerned, it is manifest that the Courts below have completely overlooked the principles applicable to cases of this description. It is well-settled, as was pointed out by this Court in the case of Gourmoni Debi v. Chairman of the Fanihati Municipality (1), that parties who require religious ceremonies to be performed, for their benefit are at liberty to choose the priest by whom they shall be performed. The Plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to any declaration that they along with the Defendants are exclusively entitled to officiate as priests, when pilgrims, on their way to the holy city, perform the sradh ceremony of their ancestors on the bank of the sacred river Punpun. The Plaintiffs, however, can obtain a declaration that they are entitled to officiate as priests for such pilgrims as may choose to employ them for the purpose of religious ceremonies, and that the Defendants are not entitled to prevent the Plaintiffs from the exercise of their calling. This, however, is not the most important aspect of the case: the Plaintiffs seek a declaration that if any one among the Defendants assists in the performance of ceremonies by a pilgrim, the Plaintiffs are entitled to share with them the offerings and emoluments. To put the matter in another way the Plaintiffs allege that the right to officiate as priest is vested in the entire body of descendants of Sham Nath Misser, and that whoever amongst them may perform the ceremonies on a particular occasion and whatever sum or article he may earn thereby, he is bound to bring that into a common fund to be enjoyed by all the members of the family. In support of this extraordinary position, reliance was placed upon a decree in a suit of 1821 and a deed of partition of 1837. It appears that about the year 1821 there was a dispute between two families of Brahmins who may be called the Pandeys and the Missers, residents on opposite banks of the river Punpun. The Pandeys claimed that they as well as the Missers, the ancestors of the parties to this suit, were entitled jointly to perform religious ceremonies for the pilgrims on the banks of the river Punpun, and to divide the earnings amongst themselves. This claim was negatived on the 27th May 1822, and it was declared that the Pandeys were not entitled to officiate as priest. Subsequently, on the 28th October 1837, a deed of partition was executed amongst the predecessors of the parties to the present suit, in which it was arranged that each of the three branches of the family formed by the descendants of the three sons of Sham Nath Misser should have one-third share of the emoluments or the fees of the officiating priest at the performance of ceremonies on the bank of the river Punpun. The documents in question obviously do not establish the right now claimed by the Plaintiffs. It is intelligible that members of a family may agree amongst themselves, that whoever amongst them may earn anything by officiating as a priest, the income is to be brought into a common fund and divided in certain proportion amongst them but such an arrangement cannot be obligatory upon the parties and their successors for all time and in spite of the wishes of members who may desire to terminate it. The learned Vakil for the Respondents has contended upon the authority of the cases of Dino Nath v. Protap Chandra (2) and Bheema v. Kotha Kota (3) that the members of this family are entitled to a religious office and that it is open to one of them to maintain a suit against his co-sharers for recovery of his share of whatever may be given by pilgrims by way of offerings or emoluments. The cases relied upon however are clearly distinguishable; they are cases in which offerings were made to an idol or some other image of the deity, and it was ruled that the offerings belonged to the entire body of shebaitis. In such a contingency, it is rightly held that although a suit by the rightful owner of a religious office against an usurper for recovery of voluntary gratuities is not maintainable, a suit brought by a sharer in religious office against his co-sharers for recovery of his share of the voluntary gratuities is maintainable, because in the latter class of cases the basis of the claim is an arrangement, express or implied, that all the sharers should have a share in the gratuities. In the case before us, however, the initial difficulty of the Plaintiffs is that they have not established that there is any religious office to which they have a claim. It has not been proved that they have a hereditary right to officiate as priests at the worship of an idol and to have a share in the offerings made to the deity. The case, on the other hand, is more analogous to that of Jowahur Misser v. Bahgoo Misser (4), where it was ruled that a claim was not maintainable for a share in the gratuity or voluntary gift to a priest officiating at a sradh ceremony, because the fee paid was in the nature of a voluntary gift to the person to whom it was directly paid. The reason assigned in support of this view is that where voluntary offerings were made to a priest who officiated at a sradh ceremony, they must be taken to have been intended for the very person who was then actually performing the ceremony, Kashi Chandra v. Kailash Chandra (5), Sitaram v. Sitaram (6), Shivapa v. Krishna Bhai (7). See also Chamru Dutt v. Babu Nandan (8). The Plaintiffs have neither alleged nor established that they have any right to the holy spot, by grant or otherwise, nor have they alleged and proved that they have a hereditary right to officiate as priest at the worship of an idol to whom offerings are made, and to have a share in such offerings. Consequently the decree in so far as it declares such right cannot be supported, nor can the decree be maintained in so far as it entitles the Plaintiffs to recover mesne profits. The Courts below have neither realised the effect of such a decree, nor considered how the mesne profits can be determined in execution proceedings. If what was paid to the officiating priest was paid to him personally by a particular pilgrim the Plaintiffs would not be entitled to claim a share in such sum. But it would be impossible to discover now, from any evidence that might be available, whether a particular pilgrim made a payment for the personal benefit of the officiating priest or whether it was intended to be paid to him as representative of a family.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed in part, and the decree of the Court below modified. The Plaintiffs will have a declaration that they are entitled to officiate at the pinda dehani ceremony on the southern bank of the river Punpun and that the Defendants are not entitled to obstruct the Plaintiffs when they officiate as priests at such ceremony. A perpetual injunction will also issue prohibiting the Defendants from interfering with and offering resistance to the Plaintiffs in the performance of the pinda dehani ceremony. The question, however, whether the Plaintiffs are entitled by grant or otherwise to joint possession, with the Defendants, of the spot where the ceremonies are performed and

An occupancy raiyat borrowed money from Government for agricultural purposes on the security of his holding, but having failed to pay up, a certificate under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act was issued for the realisation of his debt and the holding was sold :

Held—That only the right, title and interest of the raiyat passed under the sale, as the Secretary of State for India in Council in adopting the procedure of the Public Demands Recovery Act, which does not contemplate the realisation of a security, must be taken to have abandoned the security.

That the Secretary of State for India in Council could enforce the security only by a regular suit.

Where a landlord keeps a raiyat out of possession of his holding for the period specified in Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the raiyat's title in the holding is extinguished by adverse possession, on general principles, if not under sec. 28 of the Limitation Act.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation, which has given rise to this appeal, is a parcel of land which admittedly belonged originally to one Biku Dhobi as his occupancy holding. On the 4th March 1889, Biku borrowed money from Government for agricultural purposes, and executed a mortgage of his holding to the Secretary of State for India in Council. He was unable to re-pay the loan on the day fixed and the result was that, in execution of a certificate made under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, the holding was brought to sale, and was purchased on the 6th August 1902 by the Plaintiff, now Respondent before us. On the 11th November 1907, the Plaintiff commenced this suit for declaration of his title and for recovery of possession against two sets of Defendants; the second set of Defendants comprised the landlords of the holding, and the first set was composed of mortgagees from them, who, in execution of a mortgage decree, were about to sell the estate within which the disputed holding is situated. The Plaintiff sought for a declaration that the land was the occupancy holding of Biku, and not the proprietor's private land as falsely alleged by the second set of Defendants; and that, consequently, it was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree held by the first set of Defendants. The Defendants denied that the disputed land was the holding of Biku, and asserted that it was the private land of the proprietor who had been in direct possession since at least 1892. The Defendants further contended that, if Biku had at any time a tenancy-interest in the land, it had been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the landlords; and that, in any event, the Plaintiff had not, by his purchase at the sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act, acquired a title capable of enforcement against the landlords or their representatives in interest. The Courts below have concurrently overruled these contentions and, in the view that the claim is not barred by limitation, have made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on the ground that, in the events which have happened, Biku Dhobi had no subsisting interest in the disputed land at the time of the sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act, and that, consequently, it was not competent to the Secretary of State for India in Council to confer on the auction-purchaser any title which may be deemed valid against the landlords. This contention has been sought to be supported from two distinct points of view, namely, first, that the effect of the sale, under the Public Demands Recovery Act, was to transfer to the purchaser the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, and that, before that date, such right, title and interest had been extinguished by adverse possession of the landlords for the statutory period of 2 years; and, secondly, that, even if the certificate-sale be deemed to be a sale held for the enforcement of the security in favour of the Secretary of State for India in Council, the auction-purchaser could not acquire any title, because by reason of the adverse possession of the landlords, the equity of redemption of the mortgagor as also the interest of the mortgagee had been extinguished.

In so far as the first of these contentions is concerned, it is well-settled by a series of decisions of this Court, beginning with the case of Shekaat Hussain v. Sashi Kar (1), and ending with the case of Raja Koer v. Ganga Singh (2), that the effect of a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act is to pass to the purchaser merely the right, title and interest of the persons named as the judgment-debtor in the certificate. See also Rupram v. Iswar (3), Ashanulla v. Manjura Banu (4), Raja Baikuntha Nath v. Uday Chand (5),

NANDA KUMAR DEY v. AJODHYA SAHU.

Abdul Hai v. Gujraj (6), Baij Nath v. Ramgut (7). Sec. 10 of Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, further provides that the certificate, after it has been filed and duly notified, binds all immoveable property of the judgment-debtor situated within the jurisdiction of the District Collector, in the same manner and with like effect as if such immoveable property had been attached under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Consequently, if on the date of the service of notice, the judgment-debtor has no subsisting interest in a particular parcel of land, the purchaser at the certificate sale which follows can acquire no valid interest therein. Now, in the case before us, it is reasonably plain, upon the proceedings of the Collector, that the certificate was made for recovery of the debt and not for the enforcement of the security held by the Secretary of State for India in Council. In fact, the Public Demands Recovery Act does not contemplate the realisation of a security. The steps taken are analogous to those provided by the Civil Procedure Code for the enforcement of a money-claim. This is clear from sec. 10, sub sec. (2) of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, which lays down that the certificate may be enforced and executed, in the manner provided by Chap. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, for the enforcement of decrees for money. The substance of the matter is that if the Secretary of State for India in Council intends to enforce the security, he must proceed by way of a regular suit; but he may practically abandon the security and realise the loan as money claimed, by the summary procedure of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act. This view is in accord with that taken in the case of Luchmi Narain Singh v. Raghu Nandan Sahi (8). Upon the first branch of the contention of the Appellants, therefore, the question arises, whether the judgment-debtor Biku had any subsisting interest in the disputed land when the notice of the certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act was served upon him. Now it has been found that, in 1872, that is, 10 years before the date of such notice, Biku had been dispossessed by his landlords, who have continued in possession up to the present time. Under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, Biku, as an occupancy raiyat, dispossessed from his holding by his landlords, was bound to sue for recovery of possession within two years from the date of dispossession. He failed to do so. What, then, was the effect of this dispossession upon the title of Biku? It has been argued, on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants, that his title was extinguished at the end of the period prescribed for the institution of a suit by him. In answer to this contention, it has been argued by the Plaintiff that secs. 184 and 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read together, do not make sec. 28 of the Limitation Act applicable to cases of this description. It has been suggested, in fact, that the terms of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 185—which lays down that subject to the provisions of Chap. XVI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act shall apply to all suits, mentioned in sec. 184, that is, suits governed by Sch. III annexed to the Act—are not wide enough to attract the operation of sec. 28 of the Limitation Act to such suits; that section lays down that, at the determination of the period limited by the Indian Limitation Act to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished. We are not impressed by the soundness of this contention of the Plaintiff-Respondent; but even if it be held that sec. 28 of the Limitation Act has not been made specifically applicable to suits of this description by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is clear that the same doctrine must be held applicable on first principles. It was ruled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Gunga Govinda Mandal v. Collector of 24-Pergunnahs (9), that if a person suffers his right to be barred by the law of limitation, the practical effect is the extinction of his title in favour of the party in possession. [See also Luchmee v. Ranjeet (10), Fatimaatunnissa v. Sundar (11), Jagamba v. Ram Chandra (12)]. The tendency of modern decisions is undoubtedly in favour of this view, even in the absence of a statutory provision (for the extinguishment of the right to property) of the type we find embodied in sec. 28 of the Limitation Act: [Dalip v. Deoki (13) and Sarafuddin v. Chandra Mani (14)]; the contrary view, sometimes maintained, [Doe v. Kuppu (15), Secretary of State v. Vira (16)] is opposed to the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee just mentioned, and cannot be supported. We are of opinion, therefore, that, even if it be held that sec. 28 of the Limitation Act does not directly apply to cases governed by Art. 3, of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the principle is applicable; and that, consequently, the title of Biku in the case before us was extinguished in 1894. In 1902, when proceedings were taken under the Public Demands Recovery Act, he had consequently no subsisting interest which could be attached and sold. In this view, the Plaintiff, as purchaser at the certificate sale, has not acquired any interest which he can enforce against the landlords, who by adverse possession have acquired an indefeasible title to the property. The first branch of the contention of the Appellants must, therefore, prevail.

In so far as the second contention of the Appellants is concerned, it has been argued that, if the certificate proceedings be assumed to have been appropriately taken for the enforcement of the security held by the Secretary of State for India in Council, the Plaintiff-Respondent has not acquired any title to the disputed property, because before the security was sought to be enforced, the interest of the mortgagor as also of the mortgagee had been extinguished by adverse possession for the statutory period by the landlords. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Ram-kumar Sen v. Prasanna Kumar Sen (17) and Karan Singh v. Bakarali Khan (18). The question raised is of considerable nicety and by no means free from difficulty, and we may observe that there has been some divergence of judicial opinion upon it. The contention of the Appellants in substance is that the adverse possession on the part of the landlords operated to extinguish not merely the equity of redemption but also the interest of the mortgagee. There can be no room for controversy that if such adverse possession had commenced before the execution of the mortgage, its operation would not have been arrested by the grant of the mortgage security, on the elementary principle that the effect of a statute of limitation, in the absence of legislative provision to the contrary, must be determined with reference to the actual state of the title when time begins to run, and that, when the time has once commenced to run against the absolute owner, no subsequent alteration in the title will postpone the bar. Where, however, as here, the mortgagor has been dispossessed after the grant of the mortgage, the view has sometimes been maintained that the adverse possession does not operate against the mortgagee, see Aimadar Mandal v. Makhan Lal Dey (19), which was accepted as good law in Vencatachala v. Subramania (20). There is, however, considerable force in the contention of the Appellants that the contrary view ought to be maintained on principle. The learned Vakil for the Appellants has argued, that the right of the mortgagee to the security subsists only so long as the mortgagor's right to the property subsists, and both are in the same position if the interests of the mortgagor and mortgagee are equally invaded by the trespasser. This view is supported not only by the case of Ramkumar v. Prasanna Kumar (17), but also by the observations in Sheoumber v. Bhowanee (21), Ram Lal v. Masum Ali (22), Ammu v. Ramakrisna (23), Karan Singh v. Bakarali Khan (18), Anando (17) W. R. Gap. No. 375 (1864).

Moyee v. Dhonendra Chandra (24), and Prannath v. Rookea Begum (25); see also, Chinto v. Fanki (26) and Kanhu Lal v. Manki (27). We are not unmindful that in England it has been ruled that, where land is subject to a mortgage, the statute does not run against the mortgagee in favour of a stranger in possession of the land so long as the mortgagor pays interest to the mortgagee, or more strictly, such payment of interest continually checks the operation of the statute, Doe v. Eyre (28), Doe v. Massey (29) and Ford v. Ager (30), provided the adverse possession began after the creation of the mortgage: Thornton v. France (31). See also Eyre v. Walsh (32). It is worthy of note, however, that the decision of the House of Lords in Heath v. Pugh (33), upon which reliance is placed in Aimadar Mandal v. Makhan Lal Dey (19), is clearly distinguishable, because there the mortgagee had commenced his action to foreclose the mortgagor before the adverse possessor had been able to extinguish the equity of redemption; under these circumstances, it was ruled that for the purposes of an action in ejectment by the mortgagee, who had become full owner, time must be taken to run against him from the date when his title was perfected. In the case before us, the certificate proceedings, even if they be assumed to be proceedings for enforcement of the security, were not taken till the equity of redemption at least had been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the landlords. The view may, therefore, well be maintained that the certificate-sale passed no title to the purchaser. That the question, however, is not free from difficulty, is obvious from the divergence of judicial opinion which has prevailed upon it, and in American Courts, where the question has been much debated, contrary views have been maintained. For instance, in Dadmun v. Lamson (34), Menair v. Lot (35) and Glaser v. Haskins (36), the view appears to have been taken that, as regards a third person not in privity with the mortgagor or mortgagee, the existence of the mortgage does not affect the character or effect of the adverse possession by him as against the mortgagee. On the other hand, in Martin v. Jackson (37), it was held that no adverse possession by the consent or connivance of a mortgagor can affect the mortgagee, unless it be so open as to give the latter notice that his rights are invaded. In so far as the Courts in this country are concerned, as we have already explained, there is a conflict of authorities, and if it were necessary for us to rest our decision on this point, we should have to consider whether the matter ought not to be referred to a Full Bench. In the view, however, we take of the first contention of the Appellants, it is clear that their appeal must succeed.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below set aside, and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

THE BENGAL
NAGPORE RAILWAY
Co., Defendant,
Respondent.

*Railways Act (IX of 1890), secs. 77, 140—
Notice of claim to Goods Superintendent, if sufficient—Irregular sale of left goods, if conversion—Damage.*

Held—That the notice of claim for loss of goods despatched by rail given in this case to the Goods Superintendent did not comply with the requirements of secs. 77 and 140 of the Railways Act.

Quære:—Whether a failure to observe the provisions prescribed in the Railways Act with regard to sales of articles of which no delivery has been taken would make the sale an act of conversion by the Railway.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of May 1909, against the decree of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 10th of February 1909, affirming the decree of Babu Raj Krishna Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated the 10th of August 1908.

The Plaintiffs instituted this suit against the Defendant Company for the recovery of 580 maunds of rice together with 290 bags in which the rice had been packed or in the alternative for the price thereof. The goods in question had been despatched from Raigurh for delivery at Shalimar and the Plaintiffs' case was that out of the 290 bags only 288 arrived at the last-mentioned railway station, that Bhagat Ram their servant when he went to take delivery of the bags found two bags missing and others partly empty, that he asked the goods clerk to re-weigh the goods and to grant him a shortage certificate but this request was disregarded and the goods were wrongfully sold by the Company for Rs. 1,498 wherefrom the Company deducted Rs. 413-12 for wharfage and Rs. 329-4 for freight and remitted the balance Rs. 755 to the Plaintiff's solicitors.

The Defendant Company inter alia objected that the suit was barred by limitation under sec. 77 of the Railways Act, the goods having been delivered at Raigarh on the 11th January 1907 whereas the notice to the agent was not given till the 12th September 1907. The Plaintiffs, however, relied on a notice given by them to the Goods Superintendent on the 15th March which concluded as follows:— "Unless you forthwith comply with the request contained herein, our clients will hold the Railway Company liable for all loss which they may sustain for such non-delivery and they will not be liable to pay any demurrage for the goods owing to the default on the part of the Railway Company." The Subordinate Judge held that the Company was not bound to re-weigh the goods and give a shortage certificate, that sec. 77 of the Railways Act was a bar to the suit as regards the two missing bags and the shortage in the other bags. As regards the sale he found that it was not held after full 15 days' notice but he did not consider the irregularity to be of sufficient importance, and moreover found that the price fetched at the sale was not inadequate. In this view he dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge held that the letter to the Goods Superintendent was sufficient notice under sec. 77, Railways Act. On this point he observed:—

I take it that the Agent is not required to receive every such notice with his own hand and to sign receipt himself for every such notice. It is sufficient if the notice is received by an officer of the Company whose duty it will be to lay the matter before the Agent. Under Rule 57 of the Goods Tariff published by the Bengal Nagpur Railway we find that written claims must be made to the Goods Superintendent. Throughout the correspondence, we find the Goods Superintendent writing for the Company, offering terms for the Company, and finally on behalf of the Company making payments to the Appellants of the sum which he as the representative of the Company considers to be due. Surely the Company have placed themselves in the position that they cannot deny that the Goods Superintendent is the person who will receive on behalf of the Agent claims and notice of suits upon claims, and that for the purpose of all claims to compensation for damage and loss the Goods Superintendent is the representative of the Agent.

On the other points he affirmed the findings of the Subordinate Judge and in the result dismissed the appeal.

The Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Mr. Hyam and Babu Probodh Chandra Roy for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—On the 11th January 1907, the Plaintiffs delivered to the Defendant Company 290 bags of rice, weighing 580 maunds for carriage from Raigarh to Shalimar. The goods have not been delivered, and the Plaintiffs now claim either delivery of the goods or Rs. 2,280-10 by way of damages.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit and his decree was confirmed by the District Court. From this confirming decree the present appeal has been preferred.

As the case comes before us by way of appeal from appellate decree it is necessary to see what the facts are as found by the lower Appellate Court, for by its findings we are bound.

It is common ground that of the 290 bags all but 2 reached shalimar, and these 2 were lost.

The Plaintiffs' case is that the 288 bags that arrived were partly empty and according to the District Judge "their only real complaint is that the Goods Clerk refused to re-weigh the goods and issue a short-certificate." And the learned Judge goes on to say "On this we must find that the facts were that when the Appellant went to take delivery of the goods demurrage was due and that they refused to take delivery without re-weighment and also refused to pay demurrage. Clearly on such a finding the Railway Company were not bound to deliver the goods." Later in his judgment the District Judge says of the Plaintiffs: "They refused to take delivery of the goods which were consigned to them except on certain conditions with which the Railway were not required by law to comply. They demanded a re-weighment and a certificate of shortage. The Railway is not required by law either to re-weigh or to certify shortage."

The result then is that of the 290 bags, 2 were not delivered because they were lost, and non-delivery of the rest was due to the fact that the Plaintiffs would only take delivery on a condition they were not entitled to impose.

I will first deal with the two lost bags.

Where a Railway administration fails to deliver goods entrusted to it for carriage, it may be shewn that the goods were lost and then the provisions of Ch. VII of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, apply. Among those provisions is that contained in sec. 77 which enacts that "a person shall not be entitled to compensation for the loss . . . of goods delivered to be so carried unless his claim to the compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the Railway administration within 6 months from the date of the delivery of the . . . goods for carriage by Railway." By sec. 140 it is provided "any notice or other document required or authorized by this Act to be served on a Railway administration may be served, in the case of a Railway administered by the Government or Native State, on the Manager and, in the case of a Railway administered by a Railway Company, on the Agent in India of the Railway Company—" (a) by delivering the notice or other document to the Manager or Agent, or (b) by leaving it at his office, or (c) by forwarding it by post in prepaid letters addressed to the Manager or Agent at his office and registered under Part III of the Indian Post Office Act, 1866." The method of service permitted by this section has not been followed; nor has it been shown that the claim has been otherwise preferred to the Railway administration so as to satisfy the requirements of sec. 77.

The correspondence with the Goods Superintendent was manifestly insufficient for that purpose and on this point I accept the view of the Subordinate Judge in preference to that of the District Judge.

The suit therefore as to the 2 lost bags must fail on this ground.

The position as to the 288 bags is different. The inference suggested by receipt,

JANAKI DAS v. THE BENGAL NAGPORE RAILWAY CO.

Ex. I, is that each bag at the time of delivery to the Railway administrators contained 2 maunds and the discussion before us has proceeded on that footing.

Now it is no one's case that these 288 bags were lost, on the contrary they have been sold by the Railway Company. But though they were sold the weight of the rice sold was only 427 maunds and not 576 maunds, as it should have been. How there was this difference in weight has not been clearly explained, nor is there any definite finding by the lower Appellate Court on the point. There is however no suggestion that the Railway administration is in possession of the goods or that it has been guilty of wilful misfeasance in regard to them and the only inference appears to be that the difference in weight represents goods which have been lost or destroyed.

The position then would seem to be that the suit must fail either for failure to comply with the provisions of sec. 77 of the Indian Railways Act or because the goods were at the Plaintiffs' risk by reason of their failure to take delivery.

As to the rest of the goods, that is to say the 427 maunds, the position is this :—The goods were sold by the Railway Company as the Plaintiffs failed to take delivery, but in so selling the Railway Company failed to observe the provisions prescribed by the Indian Railways Act. The sale was therefore not in accordance with law.

But even if it be treated as a conversion, what is the consequence? The Plaintiffs would be entitled to damages. But according to the findings of the lower Appellate Court no damages have been suffered.

Then it is objected by the Plaintiffs that the Railway Company was not entitled to deduct wharfage. This rests on their contention that the notification of the 3rd July 1902 was of no legal effect. But the Plaintiffs cannot be allowed to advance this argument at this stage for the first time seeing that it depends on proof of facts.

It clearly was not taken before the Subordinate Judge; it is not to be found in the grounds of appeal to the District Court; and there is no reference to it in the judgment of that Court.

The result then is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be confirmed with costs.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), sec. 47—Rules made by Railway Company, validity of—Sanction of Government and publication.

Upon the finding of the Small Cause Court that the rules of the East Indian Railway Company in question regarding the recovery of demurrage charges from consignees of goods despatched by the Railway, were made sanctioned and published as prescribed by sec. 47 of the Railways Act :

Held—That there was no case for the exercise of the Court's power of revision with reference to the Small Cause Court's decision dismissing the suit for refund of demurrage charges paid.

This was a Rule granted on the 28th of August 1911, against the order of the Babu J. N. Chuckerbutty, Small Cause

SURAJ MULL NAGAR MULL v. THE EAST INDIAN RY. CO.

Court Judge at Howrah, dated the 27th of June 1911.

The suit was for refund of Rs. 93 which the Plaintiff was obliged to pay to the Defendant Company as demurrage for making a delay of 9 days in taking delivery of jute-bales sent from Badshapur to Howrah by Plaintiff's agent, on the allegation that the levying of the charge was unauthorized and illegal as the Rule under which the charge was levied was not framed by the Company and not sanctioned by Governor-General in Council and not published in the India Gazette in the manner provided in sec. 47 of the Railways Act.

The Defendant Company in defence produced a mass of documentary evidence. The Small Cause Court Judge after going through them came to the conclusion that the Rules of the Company were duly framed by the Company and approved by the Governor-General in Council and published in the Gazette of India, and that the Company is entitled to retain the demurrage charges levied by it from the Plaintiff. In this view he dismissed the suit.

Mr. Garth and Babu Probodh Chandra Roy for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha, Graham and G. B. McNair for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion the Rule should be discharged. The Judge of the Small Cause Court finds on the evidence before him that the Rules under which the Railway Company acted were made sanctioned and published as prescribed by sec. 47 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, and in the circumstances no case arises for the exercise of our powers of revision. The applicant should pay the costs of the application which we assess at one gold mohur.

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT HAS BEEN ANNOUNCED IN THE PUBLIC PRESS that Mr. Sivaswamy Iyer has been appointed a member of the Executive Council to the Governor of Madras in the place of the late Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer. Mr. Sivaswamy Iyer is a vakil of long standing and high position in the Madras Bar and has for the last four years held the office of the Advocate-General of Madras. He has not the record of public life which Mr. Krishnaswamy had but for four years he did good work in the Madras Legislative Council where he represented the Madras University. He is one of the foremost lawyers of his province and we have no doubt that he will amply justify his appointment. In conferring this responsible office on him the Government has shown both wisdom and regard for the opinion of the educated community. While congratulating Mr. Sivaswamy Iyer on his elevation to this position of distinction, we would at the same time express our appreciation of the recognition of the principle, in Madras at any rate, that such appointments should go by merit and qualities of character and public service which would enable the recipient to command public confidence.

THE QUESTION AS TO THE PRINCIPLE ON WHICH costs in an action where there is claim and counter-claim should be awarded came up in a recent case before the Court of Appeal in England. The general principle on this question has been laid down by Lindley M. R. in the case of Atlas Metal Co. v. Miller, 2 K. B. (1898), p. 500. The principle laid down there is that the costs in respect of the claim or the counter-claim are to be awarded quite independently of the one or the other. That is, the party ordered to pay or receive the costs of the claim receives or pays the cost as if there was no counter-claim. On the other hand the party ordered to pay or receive costs in counter-claim pays or receives costs occasioned by the counter-claim. This latter would not include such costs as those for the issue of the writ or of other proceedings that were not actually incurred by the person counter-claiming.

Sharpe v. Haggith, IN WHICH THIS QUESTION came up, was a suit where the Plaintiff claimed damages for the sale of a business by fraudulent misrepresentation by the Defendant. The Plaintiff admitted however that £90 was due to the Defendant for the stock-in-trade and for which sum she pleaded that she was willing to give credit to the Defendant against the damages claimed. The Defendant counter-claimed £90 and the Plaintiff in defence to the counter-claim admitted the amount was due as stated above. The case was tried before Coleridge, J., with a jury and the jury awarded the Plaintiff only £50 as damages. Thereupon the Judge passed a judgment for the Defendant for £40 the nett balance due to the Defendant and gave costs against the Plaintiff. On appeal from this judgment Alverstone, L. C. J., and Vaughan Williams and Farwell, L. JJ., on the 19th of January last, reversed the judgment of Coleridge, J., and entered judgment for the Plaintiff for £50 and for the Defendant for £90 and ordered that Plaintiff was to get the costs of the claim and the Defendant of the counter-claim. This evidently follows the principle we have explained above. It is to be noted here that when the Plaintiff was successful in recovering damages it is quite reasonable that he should be entitled to the costs of his suit and it would be obviously unjust to saddle him with the whole of the costs. The Defendant, according rule above-stated, would only be entitled to the costs occasioned by the counter-claim. Of course there may be instances where the Plaintiff or the Defendant may be deprived of his costs in respect of the claim or the counter-claim. What we have stated above is the usual and ordinary practice.

HOW CRIMINAL PROCEDURE IS SOMETIMES PUT into operation for determining summarily people's civil rights is illustrated by the proceeding under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., reported in I. L. R. 38 Cal. 876 (Kamini Mohun Das Gupta v. Harendra Kumar Sarkar). It is reported that the party first named, in February 1911, "commenced excavating a tank on his own land about 10 feet from his residential house, but the latter who had a house about the same distance from the western bank of the tank objected to the excavation on the ground that it would render his house unsafe." What particular form his objection assumed does not appear, but it is clear he did not carry his complaint to the law Courts, civil or criminal, but the local Sub-Inspector of Police felt compelled to intervene and report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that the parties were "contesting regarding the excavation of a tank" and that "if the tank is excavated then sooner or later the house of the first party which is adjacent to it will go down to its bed." Upon this, the Magistrate, moved no doubt by a genuine regard for the welfare of the parties, was induced to hold personal interviews with both and was satisfied thereof as also from his "personal knowledge" and "local inspection" that there was a likelihood of the parties breaking the peace, and passed an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., forbidding further excavation of the tank and the exercise thenceforth by either party of any right of possession on the western bank of the tank.

THE OWNER OF THE TANK MOVED THE HIGH Court and obtained a Rule which was not contested by the other party. Their Lordships for reasons which are obvious held that sec. 144, Cr. P. C., was not intended for the purpose it had been made to serve in this case and observed that "if the Opposite Party had been so advised he might have obtained an injunction to prevent the Petitioner from continuing the excavation of the tank."

IT IS NO DOUBT TRUE THAT EVERY OWNER OF land has a right that his neighbour should not cause a subsidence of it by excavations on his own land; and when this being a natural right incidental to ownership, the land has been built upon or otherwise altered a right to the additional support called for may also be acquired by prescription or grant. In either case, however, according to English precedents, no cause of action arises until there has been subsidence or other damage, for the wrong consists not in the withdrawal of the support which the dominant tenement is receiving but in doing damage by means of such a withdrawal (Blackhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. C. 503). It seems to follow from this that no injunction can issue to stop excavation merely because it is apprehended that there will be a subsidence or damage in consequence. This rule if strictly applied in all cases may at times result in great hardship and it remains to be seen, whether this rule of English law will be strictly applied in this country.

A growing evil of Calcutta has now assumed proportions which make it impossible to view the matter with indifference any longer. Within the last few months the whole city has been studded over with innumerable stalls where betting on cotton figures in carried on openly and publicly on a very extensive scale. People with scanty resources are risking their daily earnings and running into debt on account of this pernicious game. Even women and children in daily growing numbers are resorting to these places. It is high time, therefore, that Government should intervene to put an end to these dens of iniquity which are working the moral and material ruin of all classes of people. Gambling has not been a common vice amongst the people of this Province. We strongly object, therefore, to the gambling shops being allowed to corrupt the morals of our people and carry on a profitable trade in this new form of vice with the Police gazing on and the local Government holding its hands in apparent helplessness.

The game takes the shape of betting on the prices of cotton in America which are daily telegraphed by Reuter and other news agencies to this country. We are not quite sure of the bond fides of these transactions and from what we know of similar institutions we shall not be surprised to find dark truths disclosed if the methods of these people are subjected to a searching enquiry. But even assuming all that is professed by them to be true and assuming the whole business to be transacted in a fair and straight-forward manner, we are confident that this form of gambling ought to be put down with a strong hand in the interests of public morality and for the protection of the poor and ignorant people of Calcutta.

The game, to put it most mildly, is one of pure chance. What the last figure telegraphed from America will be can never be a matter of calculation or even of intelligent forecast at this distance. On principle there is nothing to distinguish it from lotteries such as are provided for by sec. 294A of the Indian Penal Code, or from the various kinds of gambling specified in the definition of "common gaming house" in the Bengal Gambling Act.

In Calcutta such matters are provided for by sec. 44 of the Calcutta Police Act (IV of 1866, B. C.). That section provides that an owner occupier, &c., of a common gaming house is liable to be punished and the succeeding sections provide for several matters of procedure and evidence. But there is no definition of common gaming house in the Act itself. But these provisions of the Police Act are analogous to those of the Bengal Gambling Act (II of 1867, B.* C.) and in the latter Act "common gaming house" has been defined as "any house, tent room, space, or walled enclosure in which cards, dice, table or other instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying or using or keeping such house, tent, room, space or enclosure whether by way of charge for the use of the instruments of gaming or of the house enclosure room or place or otherwise howsoever; or in which rain gambling, that is to say, wagering on the occurrence or non-occurrence of rain is carried on for the profit or gain of any such person." It is possible that this definition of gambling may be adopted by the Courts when they are called upon to interpret Part X of the Calcutta Police Act. In that case, the cotton figure dens cannot very well be dealt with under the present law.

It is therefore necessary that the Legislature should at once move in the matter and amend the law so as to put a stop to this evil. Indeed it seems that the whole law relating to betting, wagering and gambling is in a most unsatisfactory condition besides being spread over a number of Statutes in the most confusing manner. It is surely time that the law on this subject should be consolidated and placed on a more satisfactory basis by bringing together the divers provisions on the analogous subjects of lotteries, gambling and wagering and making provisions for other cases not dealt with by the existing law so as to effectively check the growing evil of gambling.

With reference to this particular evil legislation on the lines of the English Betting Act, 16 and 17 Vict., Cap. 19, may be suggested. Sec. 1 of that Statute provides as follows :

"No house, office room or other place shall be opened, kept or used for the purposes of the owner occupier or keeper thereof, or any person using the same, or any person procured or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, occupier or keeper or person using the same or of any person having the care or management or in any manner conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto. . . ."

Some of the provisions of the Act which follow would be very effective to prevent and suppress the evil. Thus for instance it is an offence for the owner or occupier of a betting-house or any person assisting in the management of a betting-house to receive a deposit of any bet; and the exhibition or publication of any placard or advertisement showing that any house is used as a betting house and the sending of any letter, telegram, circular, placard with a view to betting are made punishable by secs. 7 and 3 of the Act respectively.

Legislation on these lines may easily be undertaken and we think that having regard to the rapid strides with which the evil has been growing, no time should be lost to pass a law to a similar effect, and we shall be happy to see the occasion availed of to remodel the entire law relating to gambling, betting and wagering so as to avoid confusion and place the whole thing on a rational basis.

Reviews.

A COMMENTARY ON THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT (VIII of 1885). By M. Finucane, M. A., C. S. I., P. C., LL.D., and Ameer Ali (Syed), M. A., B. L., C. I. E., P. C. Second edition. Edited by J. Byrne, B. A., I. C. S., late Assistant Settlement Officer, Bihar Settlement. Calcutta: The Cramdenburgh Law Publishing Press, 3 to 5, Bow Street. 1911.

The first edition of this work appeared in 1904 and was noticed at some length in these columns. As we then observed this edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act contained certain features of great value which were not to be found in other editions. Since then some very important amendments of the Act were effected by Act I, B. C. of 1907 and Act I of 1908 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Council. It would have been a matter for regret if a new edition of the book incorporating these amendments and the recent decisions on the provisions of the Act had been held over indefinitely. We are therefore glad to welcome this edition by Mr. Byrne who has brought it up-to-date both with reference to amendments by the Legislature and judicial decisions which he has digested with a very intelligent discrimination. We do not wish to repeat what we said of the commentaries in our notice of the first edition. But we think we ought to draw some attention to the appendices which should prove of great value to lawyers and judges and other officials concerned in the administration of the provisions of the Act. Appendix I reproduces notifications concerning the commencement and local extent of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Appendix II gives a list of enactments other than the Act which regulate agricultural tenancies in Bengal. Appendix III gives a statement of the agricultural years prevalent in different parts of the Provinces. Appendix IV gives a glossary of terms in Hindi and Bengali used in authorised translations of the Act, and a list of the many varieties of tenures, under-tenures and raiyati holdings prevalent in the different parts of the Provinces with full explanation thereof furnished from authorised sources. It need hardly be added that the rules framed under different provisions of the Act by the Governments of the two Provinces and the High Court are also given in the book.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1908). By Trekamal R. Desai, B. A., LL. B., assisted by Rangrav B. Mogre, B. A., LL. B. Third edition. 1911. Bombay: The Lawyer Office, Girgaon. Price Rs. 3-8.

The book originally intended for use by candidates for law examinations still retains its character of a students' manual, though in successive editions increasing attention appears to have been paid to the requirements of practitioners. The notes are necessarily brief. They are not and could not with profit to students be exhaustive so far as the case law is concerned. Nevertheless the book will be found useful by practitioners as book of ready reference.

THE LAW OF DISCOVERY. By R. E. Ross, LL. B. London: Butterworth & Co., 11 and 12, Bell Yard, Temple Bar, Law Publishers. Calcutta: Butterworth & Co. (India), Ltd., 8/2, Hastings Street. 1912. Price 15s. = Rs. 11-4 net.

Since Judge Bray's handbook on the Law of Discovery went out of print, the want of a comprehensive treatise on this important branch of law and practice has been keenly felt. His Honour Judge Bray was induced in 1904 to issue an abridged practice manual based on his previous treatise which has proved so useful that a new edition of it was called for in 1910. The book under notice contains a full and comprehensive treatment of the subject in its various branches, viz., the principles and practice relating to Interrogatories, Discovery of Documents and Inspection of Documents in proceedings in the High Court and County Courts. The exposition of principles is marked by lucidity of statement as well as by clearness of arrangement, and they are illustrated by facts and extracts from judgments which should make the book of special value to lawyers in this country who may not find the original reports always within reach. In two Appendices the rules of the High Court and of the County Courts are reproduced with forms. At the end of each chapter is added what is described as "Canadian notes" for the use of legal practitioners in Canada. We have no doubt that the book will be appreciated wherever the English procedure for trial of cases obtains.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1130 OF 1909. ARJUN RAM PAL, Plaintiff, Appellant v. ROHIMA BANU AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 29th January. Judgment, 6th February 1912.

Acknowledgment—Mortgage—Parties—Debt acknowledged by a party, if binds another.

The suit was on a mortgage executed by one Akram on the 20th August 1895. The due date was the 28th November 1895, and the suit was instituted on the 28th November 1907. The Defendants Nos. 6 to 12 who claimed through Akram's daughters, were made parties more than 12 years after the due date. The delay was due to the Plaintiff's laches. The Plaintiff obtained a partial decree with which he was dissatisfied and hence the appeal.

In appeal it was contended that limitation was saved by a payment of interest by Akram's widow.

Held—That as Defendants Nos. 6 to 12 did not claim through the widow but through the daughter, the payment by the widow would not save limitation against the daughter, much less against the purchasers from the daughter. Hence the Plaintiffs could not get a decree to sell the land in the possession of those Defendants in satisfaction of his mortgage.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and IMAM, JJ. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE ORDERS. Nos. 80 TO 84 OF 1910. NAND LAL MARWARI, Defendant, Appellant v. RAMPAL SING AND OTHERS, Judgment-debtors, Respondents. 6th February 1912.

Acknowledgment—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19—Insolvency petition—Decrees mentioned in schedule.

The five appeals arose out of as many applications for execution of decrees which were held by the lower Appellate Court to be barred by limitation. The decree-holder appealed.

The decree-holder filed applications for execution in July 1905. An application was made by the judgment-debtor Rampal on the 14th May 1906 to be declared an insolvent. In March 1909, the present applications for execution were filed. The judgment-debtor in his application for insolvency mentioned that four other decrees of Nandlal were still existing. Those four decrees were in execution.

Held—That as the existence of the decrees was acknowledged by the judgment-debtor in his petition of the 14th May 1906, the period of limitation was extended and the decree-holder was entitled to proceed with his execution against the acknowledging judgment-debtor.

THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY CO. v. RAMPROTAB GONESHAM DASS.

Plaintiff obtained delivery of the goods on 9th August 1910, on payment of freight and other charges legally payable. The goods, however, were not removed from the Railway premises till 27th August. This the Plaintiff was allowed to do on payment of wharfage or godown rent. The delay in the delivery of the goods and their removal from the godowns was due to some dispute between the parties, the Plaintiff insisting on the weightment of the goods. The Defendant Company objecting to the same.

The Plaintiff claimed the refund on the ground that the Railway Company could not legally recover wharfage under the Rule relied upon inasmuch as they were not made and published in the Gazette of India in the manner prescribed by sec. 47 of the Act.

The trial Judge held that the Rules were not made as contemplated by the Act by the Railway Company. Nor were they published as such in the Gazette and he accordingly decreed the suit.

The Defendant Company thereupon moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Mr. Bagram and Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

The Opposite Party appeared in person.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This application arises out of a suit brought against the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company for the refund of wharfage charges alleged by the Petitioner to have been illegally realised from him.

A decree was passed against the Railway Company in the Petitioner's favour.

The Railway Company then obtained a Rule under sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, questioning the validity of the decree, and it is with that application that we are now concerned.

Having regard to the circumstances of the case and the materials on the record the only point that arises for decision is whether Rules have been made, sanctioned and published as prescribed by sec. 47 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, which entitled the Railway Company to make the wharfage charges claimed by them.

Sec. 47 provides that "every Railway Company . . . shall make general Rules consistent with this Act . . . for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner." It is however enacted by sub-sec. (3) that a Rule made under this section shall not take effect until it has received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council and been published in the Gazette of India.

The Rules on which the Railway Company relies are those which were published in the Gazette of India on the 3rd of July 1902, and those Rules were sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council.

But the question is whether they were made by the Railway Company.

Rules adopted by the Railway Company, though not originally prepared by it, would come within this description, and Rules so adopted, if then sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council and published in the Gazette of India would satisfy the requirements of sec. 47.

It is not clear that the learned Judge considered the case from this point of view. Moreover he appears to have regarded the decision in Hari Lal Sinha

THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY CO. v. RAMPROTAB GONESHAM DASS.

v. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co. (1), as in some measure governing this case.

But that is not so: that case came before the High Court on a reference under sec. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, with the limitations that procedure implies, and the decision turned wholly on the finding of the Small Cause Court that it had not been proved that these were Rules made, sanctioned and published as required by the Act.

Here, on the other hand, the question is whether the Rules were so made, sanctioned and published, and this question must be considered afresh by the Court of Small Causes in the light of the above remarks.

It is to be regretted that any doubt on this point should be permitted to continue.

The remedy is simple and it may reasonably be hoped that it will be applied, so that Railway Companies may be spared the expense and annoyance of that class of litigation of which the present suit is a type.

The Rule is therefore made absolute, the decree of the Small Cause Court is set aside, and the case sent back to the Small Cause Court for a fresh hearing in the light of the above remarks. The parties will be at liberty to adduce further evidence for the purpose of establishing or negating the identity of the Rules (if any) made by the Railway Company with those sanctioned and published; and I would here remark that it is not necessary, as the learned Judge seemed to suppose, that this identity should appear on the face of the Circular or the Gazette.

The costs of this application, which we assess at two gold mohurs, and of the suit up to this stage will abide the result of the re-hearing.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL*,
Respondent.

Zemindars of Central Provinces, status of—British subjects with delegated Judicial and Police powers not feudatory chiefs—Resumption of Police and excise functions—Abolition of private pounds—Suit by zemindars in Civil Court, questioning legality—Executive acts—Zemindars, removal of, forfeiture of their privileges, discontinuance of nazarana, provisions as to, in wajib-ul-az, if legal—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

In 1864 when certain petty chiefs of the Central Provinces were declared to be feudatory chiefs and the rest were classed as non-feudatories and declared to be ordinary British subjects certain judicial and administrative powers were entrusted to the latter or left in their hands as a matter of convenience or economy of administration. These zemindars in exercising Police and excise functions were not acting as of right but were so acting either by sufferance or by delegation. The resumption of these functions by the Government was a thing done by the Government in exercise of sovereign powers and no action was maintainable in a Civil Court in regard to such resumption.

* Several other appeals by other zemindars against the Secretary of State for India in Council, and cross-appeals by the Secretary of State for India in Council were consolidated and heard together.

The maintenance of private cattle-pounds is incompatible with the provisions of the Cattle Trespass Act, and the establishment and maintenance of cattle-pounds under the superintendence and control of Government officials empowered to obtain the assistance of the Police when required may be considered essential for the maintenance of law and order and the peace and good Government of the country, and therefore an act of the Executive Government with which it is not competent for the Civil Court to interfere.

Where such non-feudatory zemindars accepted a fresh assessment of the takoli or revenue payable by them to Government under sec. 54 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881) for 11 years from 1st July 1890 to 30th June 1901 or until a fresh settlement was made, and agreed to be bound by all the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz of their zemindari as laid down by Government; and at the new settlement of May 1903, the zemindars were required to execute wajib-ul-arzes which amongst other things provided for the resumption of the Police and Excise administration and cattle-pounds by Government and also provided for the removal of zemindars and forfeiture of their privileges and the discontinuance of nazarana on grant or renewal of leases, and the zemindars executed the wajib-ul-arzes as required but under protest:

Held—That the resumption of the Police and Excise administration and of cattle-pounds by Government could not be questioned by Civil Courts, but the District Judge's decree cancelling the clauses relating to the removal of the zemindars and the forfeiture of privileges as also concerning the discontinuance of nazarana on the grant or renewal of leases was proper.

These were consolidated appeals from judgments and decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, dated the 14th May 1907, which reversed and modified judgments and decrees of the Court of the District Judge of Raipur, dated the 6th August 1906.

The appeals raised for determination the question of the rights and privileges of the Chiefs of the following States, viz.:—1. Khariar, 2. Suarmar, 3. Dhondi Lohara, 4. S. Narra, 5. Fingeshwar, 6. Sahaspur Lohara, 7. Parpodi, 8. Bindra Nawagurh.

It will be convenient to set out in the first place the nature of the litigation relating to the State of Khariar.

The Chief of Khariar was one of the Sambalpur Garhjat Chiefs. At first they were independent, then they held in subordination to the most powerful of their number the Maharaja of Patna. In later times the Maharaja of Patna was forced to share his supremacy among the Chiefs with the Maharaja of Sambalpur and this was the situation when all fell under the dominion of the Mahrattas in the year 1755 as tributaries. In the year 1818, the Garhjat States were ceded to the East India Company and in the year 1862 they were placed under the control of the Chief Commissioner for the Central Provinces.

On cession to the East India Company a small tribute was exacted from each State which for a great many years was unaltered while the judicial and executive administration of each State remained without any interference in the hands of the Chiefs. In the year 1863, enquiries were instituted by the Government of India in regard to the status and position of the various Chiefs. The result of these enquiries is incorporated in correspondence between the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces and the Supreme Government. It began with a report of the Chief Commissioner, dated the 31st October 1863, and ended with the final orders of the Governor-General in Council, dated the 3rd April 1865, by which it was decided that while certain of the Chiefs should be regarded as feudatories and possessing sovereign powers the remaining Chiefs including all the parties to the present appeal should be classified as ordinary subjects.

No attempt was then made to determine the rights, privileges, powers or authority of the latter class of Chiefs in the Raipur Division nor was their position defined at the time of the settlement of the Central Provinces made in the year 1869. In regard to the Chanda zemindaris, an arrangement was made and the status and rights of these zemindars was settled by a document known as the Chanda Patent.

On the 25th November 1874, a sanad was granted by the Chief Commissioner to the zemindar of Khariar confirming his proprietary rights "subject to the payment of such land revenue and cesses as may from time to time be assessed according to the terms of settlement and to the conditions specified in the Administration Paper and other Settlement Records." As a matter of fact, however, no conditions had been so specified, for no Administration Paper had been prepared in regard to Khariar at the Settlement of 1869.

In the year 1892, another settlement was made and an Administration Paper was then prepared. In the year 1903, a further settlement was made and in the new Administration Paper the Settlement Officer made various amendments and alterations to the prejudice of the rights of the zemindar, which caused him on the 6th May 1904 to institute the first of the present suits in the Court of District Judge of Raipur. The clauses objected to were Part I. Clause 3. Removal of zemindar and forfeiture of privileges.

Clause 6: Ferries and pounds.

„ 10. Mines.

Part II. „ 2. Nazarana.

„ 11 (1). Forests within the boundary limits of villages.

Clause 7. Power to dismiss a Kotwar.

„ 15. The right to appropriate the income from the hides of dead cattle.

The plaint after reciting the matters already mentioned claimed the following relief, viz.: a declaration that the Plaintiff was not bound by the said provisions in the Administration Paper.

The Defendant to the suit was the Secretary of State for India in Council on whose behalf a written statement in defence was lodged. The nature of the pleas sufficiently appears from the following issues which were fixed by the District Judge.

1. Did the treaty of 1826, between the Honourable the East India Company and the Bhonsla Raja entitle the Honourable Company or their successors to confiscate the private rights of persons living in the territories ceded by that treaty?

2. Did the zamindars enjoy the rights the subject-matter of suits as of right and independently or by sufferance or by delegation from the Defendant?

If so, for what period were the rights so enjoyed?

3. Can the Defendant confiscate or modify any rights enjoyed by any persons in the ceded territories by executive order or is any legislative enactment necessary for the modification of such rights?

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

4. Have the zamindars acquired the rights claimed in the suits by adverse possession for more than 60 years?

5. Were the zamindars informed that they were allowed to exercise the rights claimed either by delegation of Government authority or by sufferance?

When was such intimation given to the zamindars and how?

6. Did the Defendant ever object before 1903 to the zamindars exercising any of the rights and privileges claimed in the suits?

7. What rights and privileges were exercised by the zamindars at the grant of the sanad dated 25th November 1874?

8. What rights were conferred on the zamindars by the sanad dated 25th November 1874?

Did the sanad in any way affect the rights and privileges exercised by the zamindars before that date? And what were the rights which were so affected?

9. Did the zamindars or any of their predecessors in title ever acknowledge that they exercised the rights claimed in the suits under the terms of the Chanda Patent subject to certain modification as stated in para. 5 of the Defendant's written statement?

10. What is the effect of such acknowledgment?

How far are the parties bound by the Chanda Patent with its modifications?

11. What modifications were made in the Chanda Patent at the time the Patent was ordered to be issued or soon after or before it was accepted and acknowledged by the zamindars in order to make it applicable to the Raipur zamindars?

12. Is the Defendant entitled to make any further modifications in the Chanda Patent after it was issued, and understood by the zamindars to be binding on them?

13. Were the terms of the Patent in its amended state embodied in the wajib-ul-ars for 1889, 1892 and 1903 with or without any modifications?

Has the Defendant any right to modify the terms of the amended Chanda Patent?

14. Is the cl. 3 of Part I of Mr. Scott's wajib-ul-ars in accordance with the Patent and is it binding on the zamindars?

15. Are the provisions in the wajib-ul-ars relating to ferries and pounds in accordance with the provisions of the Ferries and Cattle Pounds Acts? And are they binding on the zamindars?

16. Is the provision relating to forest made in Part I, cl. 7 and Part II, cl. 11, sub-cl. 1 of the wajib-ul-ars in accordance with the amended Patent and the Land Revenue Act, and is it binding on the zamindars?

17. Is the provision relating to minerals contained in Part I, cl. 10 of the wajib-ul-ars consistent with the Land Revenue Act, sec. 151, and the amended Chanda Patent, and is it binding on the zamindars?

18. Is the provision relating to the payment of nasarana contained in Part II, cl. 2 of the wajib-ul-ars beneficial to the zamindars?

Can it be retained in face of the zamindar's objection or should it be declared to be not binding on them?

19. Is the provision relating to Kotwars made in Part II, cl. 7 of the wajib-ul-ars in accordance with the provisions of sec. 147-A of the Land Revenue Act, and the rules made thereunder?

Is it binding on the zamindars?

20. Were the zamindars in receipt of profits arising from the sale of hides and bones of cattle dying in their zamindaris?

Is the Settlement Officer justified in introducing a provision in respect to the matter in Part II, cl. 15 of the wajib-ul-ars?

Is the clause of the wajib-ul-ars binding on the zamindars?

21. Are any of the provisions in the wajib-ul-ars repugnant to the terms of the amended Chanda Patent held applicable to the Raipur zamindars?

22. If so, are the provisions binding on the zamindars?

23. Are the Acts passed by the Legislative Department of the Government of India not specifically extended to the scheduled districts binding on the Raipur zamindars?

24. Is the Land Revenue Act binding on the Raipur zamindars, and do they hold their estates subject to it and to rules made thereunder?

25. Does the Land Revenue Act not affect any of the vested rights and privileges of the zamindars?

26. If it does, is it ultra vires, and did it transgress the legislative powers of the Government of India?

27. Was Mr. Scott, the Zamindari Settlement Officer, justified in making or legally authorised to make the entries in the wajib-ul-ars referred to in para. 6 of the plaint and are the zamindars bound by such entries?

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

28. Are any of the entries in the wajib-ul-ars prepared by Mr. Scott superfluous, or made in contravention of any Acts of Legislature?

29. Are the zamindars entitled to the declaration sought?

30. Did the zamindars enjoy the privileges and the rights the subject-matter of suit as of right and independently or by sufferance or by delegation from the Native Rulers before the acquisition of the Raipur District by the Defendant?

If so, for what period were the rights so enjoyed?

31. How did the acquisition of the District by the Defendant affect the rights and privileges in dispute of the zamindars?

Did the enjoyment of such rights and privileges by the Plaintiff become dependent upon and subject to the pleasure of the Defendant after such acquisition?

32. If the Defendant could confiscate the rights and privileges of the Plaintiff at the time of the acquisition of the district, did the Defendant confiscate such rights and privileges? Or did the Defendant signify or inform the Plaintiff at or about the acquisition of the territories that the exercise of such rights was subject to, and dependent upon his pleasure?

33. If the Defendant did not confiscate the rights and privileges, and did not intimate to the Plaintiff that his enjoyment thereof had become permissive and subject to the pleasure of the Government, can the Defendant now withdraw the rights and privileges from the Plaintiff so long enjoyed?

After recording evidence which was entirely documentary the District Judge delivered his judgment on the 6th August 1906. He decided that this Zemindari was not held on the terms and conditions provided by the Chanda Patent and that, of the alterations made in the Administration Paper, all were binding on the Plaintiff except cls. 3 and 7 of Part I. A formal decree was accordingly made.

Against the said decree both parties appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, who disposed of both the said appeals by one judgment delivered on the 14th May 1907. The said Court allowed the appeal of the Plaintiff so far as it related to pounds in cl. 6 of Part I of the Administration Paper; and allowed the appeal of the Secretary of State in regard to cl. 7 of Part I. In other respects it affirmed the judgment of the District Judge, and made a decree accordingly.

Against the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the Plaintiff, Bir Bikram Deo, appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The second of the suits was instituted by the Zemindar of Khariar on the 5th August 1904 in the Court of the District Judge of Raipur in consequence of Orders of the Government of India removing as and from the 1st September 1892 the management and control of the Police from the Zemindar, and further Orders of the Government of India depriving the Zemindar of his revenue from excise as and from the 1st April 1894. The plaintiff after reciting the rights of the Zemindar claimed as relief a declaration that the action of the Government of India in connection with the Police and Excise was illegal; the recovery of Rs. 1,656 illegally levied from the Zemindar towards the cost of Imperial Police; an account of the profits derived from excise by the Government and the recovery of Rs. 3,100 as profits for the year 1903-1904.

The Defendant the Secretary of State for India filed a written statement and on the pleadings the District Judge fixed the following issues:—

1. How have the Raipur zamindaris come to be incorporated in the Central Provinces of British India?

Were they ceded to the British Government in 1818?

2. What, if any, was the effect of such cession on the zamindars' rights in suit?

3. Were the zamindars exercising the Police and Excise rights at the time of cession?

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

If so, for how long were the rights exercised?

4. Were the rights exercised as of right or were they exercised on sufferance or at the pleasure of the then sovereign power before and after the cession?

5. What was the effect of the conferral of the proprietary rights on the zamindars on their rights in suit?

6. Was the conferral of the proprietary rights subject to the Chanda Patent?

7. Does the fact that the said Chanda Patent was not issued to or accepted by the zamindars render the Chanda Patent inoperative against them?

8. Was the fact that the conferral of proprietary rights on the zamindars was subject to the terms of the Chanda Patent communicated to them, and did they accept the terms?

9. Was the sanad, dated the 25th November 1874, conferring proprietary rights on the zamindars subject to the Chanda Patent?

Is there anything in the sanad of 1874 to give notice to the zamindars of the conditions subject to which it was issued and to the Plaintiff who succeeded to the estate in 1889?

10. If there was no such notice to the zamindars, what is the effect of want of such notice on the rights of the zamindars in respect of the subject-matter of dispute?

11. Was the resumption of the Police and Excise administration from the hands of the zamindars by the Defendant made by the Government in its executive capacity and in the exercise of its sovereign powers?

Is a suit on that account not maintainable?

12. Is the resumption of the Police and Excise rights by the Government in its executive capacity legal, and has this Court no power to declare its illegality?

13. Is the right of the zamindars to maintain the Police force illegal under Act V of 1861?

Does that Act apply to the Raipur zamindari?

14. Is the administration of Excise by the zamindars within their estates illegal under Act XXI of 1856, Act X of 1871 and Act XXII of 1881? And how far are these Acts or any of them applicable to the zamindaris?

15. Are the zamindaris scheduled under Act* XV of 1874?

If so, how far do the Police and Excise Acts mentioned by the Defendants apply to them?

16. Is the recovery of the amount of the Police contribution included in the takoli payable by zamindars illegal?

17. Is the question of the legality or propriety of the payment on account of Police charges beyond the jurisdiction of this Court?

18. Are the zamindars entitled to the net profits realized by the Defendant from the administration of Excise in their estates?

If so, what amount has been thus recovered from the several zamindaris?

19. Is the suit barred by time?

20. Was the inclusion of the Excise and Police rights in the Chanda Patent by the Government in excess of its powers?

If so, is the Defendant justified in resuming them on that ground?

After recording evidence which was only documentary the District Judge delivered judgment on the 6th August 1906, and decided that the Chanda Patent was not binding on the Zemindars, that the exercise of police and excise rights by the Raipur Zemindars after the cession of the Gurhjat States to the East India Company was not by virtue of any right but that the rights were exercised on sufferance or by delegation from the sovereign power and that the act of resumption of the excise and police administration by the Government was an act done in the exercise of its sovereign powers. He therefore held that the suit was not maintainable. He was also of opinion that the legality of the additional assessment on account of the cost of the police could not be considered by a Civil Court in consequence of sec. 151, cl. 3 and cl. 10 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act. He further decided that the suit was barred by Art. 120, Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act. In accordance with the above findings he made a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Against their decree the Plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for the Central Provinces and on the 14th May 1907 the Judicial Commissioner delivered his judgment. He decided that the suit was not barred by limitation and that the Civil Courts were precluded by the provisions of the Land Revenue Act from considering the validity of the extra assessment for cost of police. He however was of opinion that the rights claimed by the Plaintiff in regard to the administration of police and excise had been validly granted to him and were incapable of resumption by executive act. He accordingly made a decree modifying the decree of the District Judge granting the Plaintiff the declaration prayed for and directing the repayment to him of the profits from excise for the year 1903-1904. The full text of the judgment is as follows :—

"This and the cross-appeal (No. 61 of 1909) arise out of a suit (No. 6 of 1904) brought by the zemindar of Khariar in the Raipur District against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The object of the suit was to obtain cancellation of certain clauses in the wajib-ul-arz sanctioned for zemindari in Revenue Secretariat letters No. 2390, dated the 25th April 1902, and No. 1244, dated the 18th March 1903. A copy of this document will be found printed as Ap. XIII to the 'Report on the Land Revenue Settlement of the zemindari Estates in the Raipur District effected during the years 1899—1902.'

"The plaint begins by alleging that before the advent of British Rule the Plaintiff's ancestors were sovereign rulers and that when the zemindari was transferred to the Central Provinces in 1862 the zemindar was still in active enjoyment of various rights and privileges detailed in a separate list. In 1865 the British Government, when deciding the status of many important landholders, divided them into two classes, namely, Feudatory Chiefs and Non-feudatory Chiefs. The zemindar of Khariar fell into the latter and inferior class, but he was not otherwise interfered with. On the 25th November 1874, a sanad recognizing the zemindar's proprietary rights was issued with the permission of the Government of India. The zemindar continued to exercise the aforesaid rights and privileges till the 1st September 1892, when the British Government took over the right of managing the local police and levied from him an annual sum of Rs. 1,656 on account of maintaining the necessary force. On the 1st April 1894 the same Government took over the administration of all excise matters, proposing to pay as compensation the inadequate sum of Rs. 3,000 yearly. The *wajib-ul-arz framed at Carey's Settlement (1885—1889) contained nothing inconsistent with the sanad of 1874 or incompatible with the continued enjoyment of the aforesaid rights and privileges; but the corresponding document of 1902 is of a very different character, being inconsistent with the sanad of 1874. Further, the clauses complained of are invalid because they prevent or tend to prevent the enjoyment of the aforesaid rights and privileges and are such as could not legally be prescribed without an express enactment in that behalf. The serial numbers and the subjects of these clauses are as under :—

IN PART I.

6. Provision that the zemindar be given reasonable compensation, if it is considered expedient at any time to assume the management of ferries and pounds.

7. Provision that the forest mahals shall be managed in accordance with rules framed by the Chief Commissioner under sec. 124-A, Land Revenue Act.

10. Declaration that all minerals are the property of Government.

IN PART II.

2. Direction that the zemindar shall discontinue the practice of levying nazarana on grant or renewal of leases.

7. Declaration that the appointment, suspension and removal of village watchmen (kotwars) are governed by the rules framed under sec. 147-A, Land Revenue Act.

11 (i). Direction that forest lands not included in forest mahals be managed in accordance with any rules which may be made by the Chief Commissioner.

15. Declaration that the hides and carcases of dead cattle are the property of the respective owners of the cattle.

"The defence and other pleadings are set out at length in the lower Court's judgment, and I think it unnecessary to recapitulate them here in detail. The gist of the defence seems to be that the British Government were not bound to and did not on acquiring the zemindari recognize the zemindar permanently and indefeasibly as possessing the rights and privileges mentioned in the annexure to the plaint; that those rights and privileges were in fact exercised on sufferance or by delegation and subject to the pleasure of Government as declared from time to time; that the zemindar is bound by terms identical with those of a document known as the "Chanda Patent"

(modified in a detail not material for present purposes); that the sanad of 1874 was expressly granted subject to those terms; and that none of the clauses complained of were invalid either as being illegal or as infringing any indefeasible right of the Plaintiff.

"No fewer than 33 issues were framed, but the evidence to be considered is wholly of a documentary nature and the lower Court came to a decision on issues 9—12, 14—20 and 23—29 only. The decree passed declared cls. 3 and 7 in Part I and cl. 2 in Part II of the wajib-ul-ars of 1902-03 not to be enforceable against or binding upon the Plaintiff and directed their deletion. For the rest the claim was dismissed. Both sides have come up in appeal.

"Dealing first with the Plaintiff's appeal, I observe to begin with that the 11th ground was not pressed in argument. Khariar is a Scheduled District appearing as serial No. 1 in Part VI of the first schedule to Act XIV of 1874. As originally framed the second sentence of sec. 1, Land Revenue Act, included the words and figures 'except those specified in Part VI of the first schedule of the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874,' which were repealed by the amending Act, No. XVI of 1889. It follows that since the 29th October 1889, when the last-mentioned Act came into force, the Land Revenue Act, 1881, has been running in Khariar.

"4th, 16th and 17th grounds.—Following the order of the arguments advanced by the Plaintiff's learned counsel I take up next the 4th, 16th and 17th grounds of appeal. The argument here is that the wajib-ul-ars or administration paper referred to in sec. 77 (d) of the Land Revenue Act is identical with the record-of-rights prescribed by sec. 79 ibid.; that the entries complained of do not represent the outcome of inquiries made under Chap. VI of the Act; that no rules of the kind contemplated by sec. 79 (b) ibid. have been made; that consequently the clauses in question could not legally be included in the wajib-ul-arz; and that the form of Chaps. III—VI indicates that the procedure therein laid down was not intended to apply to zemindaris. I do not think there is any substance in the last part of this contention. For Settlement purposes a zemindari is treated simply as an aggregate of villages; the assets of each village are determined and made the basis of a kamil jama, i.e., the revenue which would be payable if the village were an ordinary malguzari one; and finally a certain share of the aggregate of these kamil jamas is made payable by the zemindar in the shape of what is technically called a takoli: see para. 157 of Carey's and para. 3 of Scott's Settlement Report. The term "mahal" as defined in sec. 4 (7) of the Land Revenue Act is a perfectly general one and may therefore be applied to a zemindari as a whole. In the absence then of anything to indicate that the Settlement of 1819—1902 was not effected under the Land Revenue Act I would assume that it was so effected. That the administration paper and the record-of-rights are not identical seems clear from sec. 80 of the Act read with paras. 278, 279, 280 and 266 of the Settlement Code, and also from the fact that two such different expressions are used in sections so close together. The results of inquiries prescribed by secs. 68—70 and 72 must find place in the record-of-rights, which moreover is to consist of 'papers,' not of only one paper; but it is certainly not the practice to include in the wajib-ul-arz the results of inquiries under those sections, the obvious place for recording those particular results being the khewat, khassra, jamabandi, etc. The fact, however, remains that there is no section except No. 79 which gives the Settlement Officer power to make entries in any part of the record-of-rights. Rules under sec. 79 or sec. 80 to have the force of law must be published as required by sec. 162 and admittedly no such rules have yet been so published: see in this connection para. 2 of the preface to the Settlement Code. On the 27th issue the lower Court treated sec. 77 as giving power to prepare the administration paper, whereas it does no more than authorise the determination of certain disputes. On the 28th issue the view taken seems to be that inasmuch as the Chief Commissioner sanctioned the wajib-ul-arz in the Secretariat letters above cited all entries in it were legally made. I am unable to concur in this view, and I hold that, failing effective rules of the kind contemplated by sec. 79 (b), no clause in the wajib-ul-arz can be justified unless it embodies a result of the kind covered by sec. 79 (a). This conclusion does not, however, help the Plaintiff; for unless his suit relates to entries as to matters referred to in sec. 78 and so comes within the scope of sec. 83 it is incompetent, inasmuch as sec. 152 (b) (8) deprives the Civil Court of jurisdiction over the formation of the record-of-rights. In short, as I understand the position, the Plaintiff's suit would have to be dismissed altogether, if it were once conceded that the clauses in the wajib-ul-arz of which he complains do not embody decisions as to matters referred to in sec. 78. He certainly did not plead in the lower Court that the clauses were not the outcome of inquiries, and it is too late for him to raise such an objection now.

"14th ground.—The 14th ground seems to me to state what the law is without thereby furnishing much aid to the decision of the present dispute. If a particular right was expressly or impliedly granted by the British Government to the zemindar, it certainly could not be taken away otherwise than by legislation or by agreement. And it is a rule of interpretation that when an enactment changes or takes away rights it is not to be construed as affecting existing rights, unless there are express words to that effect: Doolubdass v. Ramlohl (1), Papa v. Anuntarama (2), Javanmal v. Muktabai (3). See also Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, page 427 (4th edition). But in respect of each right in dispute the question will be—has there been an express or implied grant? And in answering this the Court will have to bear in mind that the British Government is not to be necessarily regarded as having maintained the zemindar, after cession of his territory in 1826, in the enjoyment of all the rights allowed him by the Mahrattas: Secretary of State in Council of India v. Kamachee (4), Cook v. Sprigg (5).

"In dealing with the rest of the Plaintiff's appeal I will assume—for a reason already stated—that the Chief Commissioner was competent to order insertion in the wajib-ul-ars of all the clauses to which the Plaintiff objects, subject, however, to the power of the Civil Court to cancel or amend any entry under sec. 83 of the Land Revenue Act.

"1st, 2nd and 3rd grounds.—The three opening grounds relate to cl. 6 in Part I of the wajib-ul-ars which runs thus:—

'If at any time it is considered expedient to assume the management of ferries and pounds, the zemindar shall receive reasonable compensation in respect of any loss of income resulting from such transfer.'

"The Plaintiff, in connection with this and all the other clauses he objects to, repudiates altogether the Chanda Patent. He points to the sanad of the 25th of November 1874 (Ex. P-2) as recognising that absolute proprietary rights over his zemindari were already vested in him. He urges that the concluding words—'and (subject) to the conditions specified in the administration paper and other settlement records'—should be altogether ignored, as there are no such papers embodying any conditions in the case of his zemindari. It is admitted* by the Defendant that no administration paper for Khariar existed in 1874 and also that any settlement records there may have been then contain nothing relevant to the matter in hand. Would it in these circumstances be reasonable to treat the sanad as recognizing all that the zemindar now claims in respect of pounds and ferries? I think not. Reading together the letters of August and September 1874 copies of which form the Defendant's Exs. 13, 14 and 15, it seems clear that the Plaintiff was intended to receive not only a copy of the ordinary malguzari sanad modified by substituting the word 'zemindari' for the word 'mouzah,' but also one of a wajib-ul-arz similar to that issued to each Bilaspur zemindar. That intention was for some reason not now ascertainable left unfulfilled. But I cannot think that the Plaintiff is entitled to take the sanad as it stands alone, for it does not convey the real intention of the grantor. If it is not to be regarded as subject to the Chanda Patent (slightly modified), on what principle is it to be construed as recognizing a right to control ferries and pounds? No reference to such rights is ever made in the wajib-ul-arz of the ordinary malguzari village, and it is significant that even in the Chanda Patent the rules obtaining in the khalsa tracts are expressly cited as applicable to the levy of fees at ferries and pounds. I would therefore treat the sanad of 1874 as doing no more than vest the formal and legal title to the villages of the zemindari in the then zemindar: see Loknath v. Bissessar-nath (6). Nor do I see sufficient prima facie reason to hold that in 1874 the Plaintiff was not governed as to ferries by the Saugor and Nerbudda Rules applied in 1855 to the Nagpur Province (pages 92 and 324, Nicholl's Law of the Central Provinces) or as to pounds by the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871. The latter Act undoubtedly extended to Khariar, for the preamble excluded from its operation only 'the Presidency Towns and such districts or tracts of country as the Local Government, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may exclude from its operation.' With these exceptions the Act was in character general and applicable to the whole of British India. Further it was not included in the first schedule of the Laws Local Extent Act, 1874. Consequently there was no need for the Chief Commissioner to issue a declaration under sec. 3 (a) of the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, in order to keep it in force. In this connection I have further to remark that when the sanad of November 1874 was given the Scheduled Districts Act had not received the assent of the Governor-General. The Northern India Ferries Act, 1878, came into force in the Central Provinces on the 1st April 1879 (Notification No. 1457, dated 26th March 1879): sec. 4 (b) expressly empowers the Local Government to take possession of any private ferry, and sec. 5 requires compensation to be paid. Assuming that all ferries in Khariar were private ferries in 1903 and that they belonged to the zemindar, his rights may under this express provision be taken away, and so far as cl. 6, Part I of the wajib-ul-arz, contemplates this and the grant of reasonable compensation I hold that the clause cannot be interfered with. With regard to cattle-pounds the position is to my mind appreciably different. Act I of 1871 followed and repealed Act III of 1857 in pari materia; yet we find that the modified Patent approved in 1874 by Ex. D-13 for the Raipur zemindars allowed them to levy pound fees under the rules obtaining in the khalsa tracts, while it is nowhere suggested that the pounds in the zemindaris were established as required by the later Act (sec. 4). Clearly therefore the pounds in Khariar were both established and managed by the zemindar. The Act does not expressly provide for confiscating private rights, nor does it lay down that there shall be no pounds save those established by the District Magistrate. In the face of these facts I am unable to see how the action of the Government in 1874 is explicable except as a recognition of rights vested in the zemindar. To say that the zemindari is a rugged and remote tract where it would have been difficult for the District Magistrate to make and enforce such arrangements as are contemplated by secs. 4, 5 and 6 of the Act is to furnish a reason for allowing the zemindar to take the District Magistrate's place, not to show that this course was the outcome of something other than an admission that the zemindar had a right to occupy that position. Not till 1892 were any steps taken indicative of a denial that the Khariar pounds had been placed permanently under the zemindar and even then the denial took the shape of a clause in a wajib-ul-arz which the zemindar has not at any time accepted as binding upon him. I hold that there was an implied grant to the zemindar of the right to manage the pounds established by him and to receive the fees therefrom and that there is nothing in the Cattle Trespass Act to affect that grant. The words 'and pounds' will accordingly be deleted from cl. 6 of the wajib-ul-arz as prayed.

"6th, 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th grounds.—I come next to five grounds of appeal relating to cl. 10 of the wajib-ul-arz of which the terms are these:—

'All minerals are the property of Government which has a right of free access and egress thereto and therefrom.'

"The lower Court has found on its 17th issue that sec. 151, Land Revenue Act, gives the minerals to Government, that the zemindar had no proprietary rights of any kind till November 1874 when he received his sanad, and that the sanad cannot be regarded as even giving at its date the mines and minerals. In this Court the Plaintiff relies again upon Sriram v. Hari (7) and cites also Megh Lal v. Girdhari Singh (8). In my opinion sec. 151, Land Revenue Act, is by itself a sufficient answer to this part of the claim. That the section was intended to operate on records and grants already made is indicated by the fact that in any other view the commencement of its operation would have been long postponed. Settlements in the Central Provinces ran for the most part for 30 years from 1865 or thereabouts and had it been desired to provide only for the future executive orders would have amply met the object in view. That the general policy of Government was everywhere to retain the right to mines and minerals appears from the wajib-ul-arzes in Fuller's Collection (1885) and from the Chanda Patent issued in 1868 (Exs. D-7 and D 8).

"12th ground.—The 12th ground of appeal is directed against the following clause (No. 7) in Part II of the wajib-ul-arz:—

'The appointment, suspension and removal of village watchmen are governed by the rules framed under sec. 147-A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act.'

"With this may be compared the corresponding clause in the wajib-ul-arz, originally issued with Carey's settlement which was reproduced verbatim in the revised form of November 1892:—

'The zemindar may, subject to appeal to the Deputy Commissioner, dismiss a kotwar for continued misconduct or failure to perform his duties, and may appoint a man in his stead. The Deputy Commissioner may call upon the zemindar to dismiss a kotwar offending in any such way, and if the zemindar fails to comply, the power of dismissal is vested in the Deputy Commissioner.'

"The issue in this connection is No. 19 worded thus:—

'No. 19. Is the provision relating to kotwars made in Part II, cl. 7 of the

(7) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 54 (1905).

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

wajib-ul-arz in accordance with the provisions of sec. 147-A of the Land Revenue Act and the rules made thereunder? Is it binding on the zemindar?’

“The lower Court held that these rules, being binding on the Plaintiff and framed on the lines of Carey’s original wajib-ul-arz, have properly been entered in the new wajib-ul-arz. As to this part of the claim I do not think there is any proof of an express or implied grant empowering the zemindar to appoint and dismiss kotwars at his pleasure, which is the position he contends for. It is true that Carey’s wajib-ul-arz (Ex. D-19), which appears to have been signed by the Plaintiff on the 6th March 1891, was prepared after sec. 147-A was added to the Land Revenue Act. On the other hand no rules were framed till August 1891. R. 5 is the one which chiefly prejudices the Plaintiff:—

‘The appointment of village-watchmen shall rest with the Deputy Commissioner. Provided that in zemindaris the zemindar may nominate to a vacancy, and the Deputy Commissioner shall appoint the person so nominated if he be qualified in accordance with r. 4.’

“R. 8, moreover, gives a zemindar no power of dismissal:—

‘A village-watchman may be suspended or removed by the Deputy Commissioner on the report of the mukaddam or of his own motion, etc., etc.’

“The Plaintiff then is worse off than under the wajib-ul-arz of 1891, and unless it can be held that sec. 147-A of the Land Revenue Act empowers the Government to alter such an arrangement as the one embodied in that document the Plaintiff will, I think, be entitled at least to some amendment of the clause in question. On the whole I incline to hold that the section does give the necessary power. To take the opposite view would land one in the admission that each landholder who till 1891 appointed and dismissed his kotwars would be entitled to continue doing so, the result being a large exception to the scope of what to be of real use ought to have a general application. I conclude that the Plaintiff must submit to the rules, though they reduce his authority below even what it was from 1891 to 1903.

‘Is the provision relating to forest made in Part I, cl. 7, and Part II, cl. 11, sub-cl. (i) of the wajib-ul-arz in accordance with the amended Patent and the Land Revenue Act and is it binding on the zemindars?’

“The lower Court has deleted cl. 7 of Part I. Cl. 11 (i) of Part II has been retained on the ground that it merely reproduces verbatim cl. 10 (i) of Carey’s original wajib-ul-arz. There appears to have been some confusion in the Judge’s mind, for he deals with waste as distinguished from forest land, though the issue has no relation to the former. The Plaintiff contends that he is not concluded by the agreement of 1891, inasmuch as it was for the period of Carey’s Settlement only. I do not see my way to accepting this view of the agreement. By it the Plaintiff admitted that he held forest within village-boundaries subject to any rules the Chief Commissioner might make, and the effect of the admission cannot reasonably be restricted, like the period of the assessment, to a limited time in the future.

“13th ground.—Cl. 15 of Part II is word for word the same as cl. 14 in the wajib-ul-arz of 1891. I agree with the lower

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Court in holding that the Plaintiff cannot go behind what he accepted as binding in the former Settlement. In this instance to allow him to do so would affect injuriously the rights of others.

"15th' ground.—I need not separately consider the 15th ground of appeal. It is concerned with the lower Court's findings on issues 23—26 and particularly with the effect of the Scheduled Districts Act upon (i) the Land Revenue Act, (ii) the Cattle Trespass Act. I concur generally with the District Judge on these points with which I have also dealt already to some extent in connection with the first three grounds of this appeal.

"The Plaintiff's appeal having now been disposed of I turn to the cross-appeal (No. 61 of 1906). Here the main contention is that the Plaintiff must be regarded as bound by the Chanda Patent as modified in 1874 for application to all the Raipur zemindars. This is rested on three grounds :—

(i) that in para. 8 of the plaint in a cognate suit (No. 27 of 1904) brought by the Plaintiff he admitted that Government intended to apply the Chanda Patent to him ;

(ii) that in paras. 9 to 13 of a petition (Ex. D-20) addressed in 1897 to the Secretary of State for India the Plaintiff indicated his acceptance of the said Patent ;

(iii) that as a matter of law it suffices for the validity of a grant that the Government should determine on its terms, acceptance by the grantee not being essential.

"Para. 8 of the plaint in suit No. 27 of 1904 runs thus :—

'That on the other hand these (quasi-sovereign) rights (to maintain police and control Excise monopolies) were further ratified and confirmed by the Government of India who issued fresh sanads the terms of which were similar to those issued and delivered to the Chanda Chiefs. But it appears, and so the Plaintiff has been informed, that the sanads issued for the zemindars of Chhattisgurh were owing to some accident or mistake never delivered to them. Nevertheless the Government of India had expressly ordered that the Chanda Patent shall be taken as a general model for continuing the existing arrangements in respect to the non-feudatory zemindars of Chhattisgurh.'

"I am clearly of opinion that this paragraph contains no sort of admission which can help the Defendant, who moreover does not appear to have relied on it in the lower Court. From paragraphs 5—8 of the Plaintiff's written reply in suit No. 27 of 1904 the extent of his reliance on the Chanda Patent may be gathered, namely that it shows the minimum of rights which must be conceded to the Plaintiff. As to the effect of the passages in Ex. D-20 I concur entirely with the lower Court. They describe the terms of the Chanda Patent as wrongly held applicable to Khariar, but use them as an argument to prove that in 1874 the Plaintiff was treated as entitled to manage his own police and administer Excise in his zemindari. The position taken was this—as ruler of Khariar the Plaintiff's ancestor enjoyed a position superior to that of the zemindars of Chanda, yet they were allowed to maintain police and administer Excise: a fortiori those rights must have been and were recognized as vested in the Plaintiff's ancestor. That the terms of the Chanda Patent were not communicated to the Plaintiff in 1874 as attaching to the sanad (Ex. P-2) given him in that year seems perfectly clear. By 1897 his position had been minutely examined, the inquiry having begun at least as far back as 1891. In any view then of the language used in the petition it would be unsafe to use it as proving acceptance of the Patent which the Defendant cannot prove to have been delivered. Then as to the point of law I am not shown any authority for the position that a grantee from the Crown can be bound by conditions which were never communicated to him. In Re Antaji (9), the following is quoted from a judgment of Westropp, C. J. :—

‘In respect to Crown grants upon a question of the meaning of words, the same rules of common sense and justice must apply whether the subject-matter of construction be a grant from the Crown or from a subject, and it is always a question of intention, to be collected from the language used with reference to the surrounding circumstances.’

“It is—I venture to think—a requirement of the same rules of common sense and justice that a person should not be bound by conditions which have never been brought to his notice. Under sec. 122, Transfer of Property Act, acceptance by or on behalf of the donee is necessary to the validity of a gift, and in Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council appear to have assumed (at p. 650 of the report) that a sanad to be binding must be accepted.

“I hold then that the Plaintiff is not bound by any term of the Chanda Patent. What he got in 1874 was a recognition or conferral—for present purposes it matters not which—of proprietary right. The devolution of that right would—in the absence of stipulation to the contrary—be governed by the ordinary law and the Government cannot legally alter that without express legislation. If the Government could alter the terms of its grant at pleasure, it could also revoke the grant likewise. To a gift divesting a private donor of all his interest in certain property a condition cannot afterwards be attached: Hussain Khan v. Nateri Srinivasa (11), Ram Sarup v. Bela (12). And Government cannot, by issuing a subsequent proclamation, resume a grant made by a previous proclamation, inasmuch as it cannot, any more than a private person, without the consent of the donee, revoke a gift actually made: Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatray (13). It follows that the lower Court has rightly deleted cl. 3 from Part I of the wajib-ul-arz: to depose a zemindar, would obviously be to derogate from the original grant to his predecessor.

“4th ground.—It remains to deal with a contention that the lower Court was wrong in deleting cl. 7 of Part I which runs thus :—

‘The Forest mahals shall be managed in accordance with the rules which may from time to time be framed by the Chief Commissioner under sec. 124-A of the Land Revenue Act.’

“In dealing with this the District Judge entirely ignored cl. 10 (i) of Carey's original wajib-ul-arz wherein it is expressly stipulated that the forest lands in the estate will be managed in accordance with any rules which may be made by the Chief Commissioner. I hold that the Plaintiff cannot resile from this agreement merely because the term of Carey's Settlement has expired. The direction to delete this clause will therefore be reversed.

SIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

"The net result of the two appeals is that the lower Court's decree will be modified by

(i) adding a direction that the words 'and pounds' be deleted from cl. 6, Part I of the wajib-ul-ars ;

(ii) substituting for the words and figures 'cls. 3 and 7 of Part I' the words and figures 'cl. 3 of Part I.'

"The success of the Plaintiff being insignificant I direct that he pay the entire costs of his own appeal. In the Defendant's appeal success has been equally divided : each side will bear half the total costs. In the lower Court each party will bear his own costs as already ordered."

Against the said decree the Secretary of State appealed to His Majesty in Council.

On the 6th August 1904, the Zemindar of Suarmar instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council claiming reliefs similar to those claimed by the Zemindar of Khariar in regard to the contested clauses of the Administration Paper and the Administration of Police and Excise. On the 6th August 1906, the District Judge delivered his judgment. He followed his decision in the Khariar cases and made a decree accordingly. Against the said decree the Zemindar and the Secretary of State appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces and on the 14th May 1907 the said Court made decrees similar to the decrees already passed in the Khariar appeals. Against the said decrees both parties appealed to His Majesty in Council.

On the 15th July 1904, the Local Government took possession of the cattle-pounds in the Khariar zemindari and on the 9th May 1905 the zemindar instituted a suit against the Secretary of State to obtain a declaration as to his right to the income derived from cattle-pounds within the limits of his zemindari and to recover damages. On the 6th August 1906, the District Judge of Raipur relying on his principal judgment made a decree dismissing the suit with costs. On appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner on the 14th May 1907 made a decree reversing the said decree of the District Judge and granting the zemindar the relief claimed by him. Against the said appellate decree the Secretary of State appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Dr. Gour for the Appellants.—The Appellants were originally independent ruling chiefs, till the assumption of power by the East India Company. It was conceded that they were now ordinary British subjects. But at the time of assumption of power the policy of the Government was to ascertain what rights and privileges were enjoyed by the zemindars from time immemorial and to leave them when ascertained untouched. Vide Nicholl's Law of Central Provinces (1870), pp. 1, 5, 13, 30, 42, 43, 442 and 443. Aitchison's Treaties and Sanads, Vol. 3, p. 91. The correspondence that subsequently took place between the Government and the zemindars resulted in the Government conferring on some zemindars the status of feudatory chiefs, while others became ordinary British subjects. But the rights and privileges of both were left untouched. There was nothing to show that the Government ever confiscated the rights and privileges of the Appellants. By secs. 77, 78, 79 of Act XVIII of 1881, a settlement is empowered but the function of a Settlement Officer is to make a record of rights as they exist and not to vary them. He has no power to impose new conditions by inserting them in the wajib-ul-ars.

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

He is to decide disputes summarily as the result of an inquiry. But he is not "to create new rights nor to abolish old rights." It is the first principle of international law that a power taking over property takes it with existing rights. A Settlement Officer cannot exceed the powers which he gets under the Statute. The Government could have confiscated the rights but it did not. And in the settlement of 1869 no conditions were imposed nor the rights varied. The functions of a Settlement Officer appear from Fuller's Settlement Code, 1883. There is express provision in the introduction that the rules of Settlement Code were not to apply to the chieftains or zemindars. In any case the Settlement Officer was bound to hold an inquiry as to our rights and to decide accordingly. He did not do so. Our objection therefore is that in the absence of some Acts of the Legislature which confiscated our existing rights they still subsist and the Government was wrong in interfering with them. The rights are the following:—

(1) Ferries. Act XVII of 1878, § 5 does not apply to us. The Government could not resume our private rights. In the Scheduled Districts Act XIV of 1874, Khariar is included.

The preamble to the said Act shows that those Acts only will apply to the scheduled districts which the Local Government will declare applicable to them by notification. This has not been done. For the same reason the Cattle Trespass Act I of 1871, § 18 does not apply.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—May not General Acts apply without the declaration? The Act does not say that General Acts will not apply to the scheduled districts unless and until the notification is made.]

Mr. De Gruyther.—I submit that was the object of the Act. It appears from the preamble.

(2) Pounds. Our pounds have existed long prior to the passing of the Cattle Trespass Act. The Act applies to British India but it has not been extended to the scheduled districts.

[LORD MERSEY.—Then there can be two pounds.]

Mr. De Gruyther.—Yes.

(3) Forests. We do not come under the Act XVI of 1889, § 22. There is no sanad or record-of-rights to limit our rights.

(4) Mines. The Central Provinces Land Revenue Act XVIII of 1881, § 151, was not applied to the scheduled districts until 1891. Further if the right to minerals did not vest in the Government before the Act then unless the Act were retrospective (which it is not) our ancient rights subsist. The Act would apply only when there was no proprietor of the minerals before the Act. Every grant of proprietary interest would include minerals also. In fact the Chanda Patent also recognizes the zemindar's proprietary right to the minerals.

(5) Kotwars, (6) Police and (7) Excise.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Secretary of State for India.—The Appellants have shifted their ground. They first claimed as sovereign—the rights of Police, pounds and excise are sovereign rights and were taken away by the Government in 1865. It was an Act of State. A sanad is not a recognition of previously existing rights, it is a fresh grant. An ordinary subject can have no rights of Police and Excise. The Plaintiffs' real case is, quasi-sovereign rights are maintained to them, but the fact is they have been determined by the Government by the mere fact of assumption of sovereignty. The argument based on the Scheduled Districts Act has no force. The Genera Acts apply to Khariar without the declaration. The Act was for convenience only. The Court below was wrong about the pounds. There could not be two pounds—one private and the other public. The mainenance of pounds is a necessary administrative function and is intimately connected with the Police.

Mr. L. DeGruyther in reply.—Our main contention is that the Government in its executive capacity has no power to interfere with the rights of a subject. No limitations on our rights were placed by the Government at the settlement of 1869. There must have been a wajib-ul-arz. Indeed the evidence on the record indicates that a wajib-ul-arz was prepared in 1869. We challenge the Government to produce the proceedings of the settlement of 1869. This settlement was like any other settlement in Bengal or Oudh. It is impossible to make a settlement without preparing a wajib-ul-arz. See Directions for Settlement Officers in North Western Provinces, p. 22, Nicholl's Law of Central Provinces, pp. 169, 329, Fuller's Central Provinces Settlement Code. A settlement having been made once our rights could not be changed at the subsequent settlement. After a settlement we got proprietary rights on payment of revenue and a sanad is not necessary for title. It is only a certificate of title. If the terms of Chanda Patent do not apply to us (as they do not) our ancient rights must be maintained in the absence of a clear act of confiscation. The Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to alter or modify the rights, position or status of any zemindar.

ment and decrees of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces in part affirming, in part varying, and in part reversing judgments and decrees of the District Judge of Raipur.

The zemindar of Khariar in the district of Raipur, and other zemindars in that district, proprietors of estates varying in extent and importance, have sued the Secretary of State for India in Council, complaining that they have been illegally deprived of rights to which they were indefeasibly entitled from time immemorial, and that by the requirement of Government officials they have been compelled to execute wajib-ul-arz or administration papers containing provisions in derogation of their undoubted privileges. Their contention is that the provisions of which they complain are illegal and ought to be expunged or annulled, and that the rights of which as they allege they have been improperly deprived ought to be restored by the Civil Court.

It was agreed between the parties to this group of litigation that decisions in the suit brought by the zemindar of Khariar should govern all the rest of the cases.

The status of the zemindar of Khariar and the Plaintiffs in the other suits is simply the status of an ordinary British subject. That matter was determined by the Government in 1864 after an exhaustive enquiry into the position of the petty chiefs of the Central Provinces. A few were recognised as feudatories having some of the attributes of sovereignty. The rest were classed as non-feudatories and declared to be ordinary British subjects.

Before these petty chiefs came under British rule they held their possessions at the will and pleasure of the ruler for the time being in power. When their country became British territory, whether by conquest and cession as in the case of Khariar and in the case of Bindra Nawagurh in Chattisgurh, or by lapse as in the case of the other zemindars in Chattisgurh, they were left much in the position they occupied before. The district was wild and for the most part uncultivated, thinly populated, and very difficult of access. They paid to the paramount Government the tribute they had been in the habit of paying to their native rulers reduced in some cases on account of the poverty of the district. They managed their estates as best they could, binding themselves to use rightly the judicial and administrative powers entrusted to them or left in their hands as a matter of convenience or economy of administration. In no case were they recognised as entitled to independent power or as possessing any sovereign rights.

In 1867, the Government determined to confer upon the non-feudatory zemindars in an adjoining district known as the Chanda District proprietary rights in the soil on certain terms and conditions which were embodied in a document referred to in these proceedings as the Chanda Patent. It was the intention of the Government at that time that sanads should be granted to other non-feudatory zemindars, in the Central Provinces, including the Raipur zemindars, framed on the model of the Chanda Patent, with such variations as the circumstances of the case might require. However, it seems that when sanads were issued to the Raipur zemindars in the year 1874 the matter was overlooked or forgotten, and proprietary rights in the soil were vested in them, expressed in the sanad to be "subject to the payment of such land revenue and other cesses as may, from time to time, be assessed according to the terms of settlement and to the conditions specified in the administration paper and other settlement records." In point of fact these sanads were not accompanied by any administration papers or any other record. This mistake or omission has given rise to much argument. The Government contended that the Plaintiffs had recognised and were bound by the terms of the Chanda Patent. The Plaintiffs, while relying on the terms of the Chanda Patent which were to their advantage, maintained that the terms of the Chanda Patent in their entirety, and so far as they tended to their disadvantage, were not binding upon them. In the result both Courts below have held that the Chanda Patent is not to be treated as embodied in or affecting the sanads granted to the Raipur zemindars. In this conclusion their Lordships agree. For the purposes of these cases they think that the Chanda Patent may be disregarded.

In 1888, the Government decided that Police administration in the non-feudatory zemindaris in the Chattisgurh division including those belonging to the Plaintiffs other than the zemindars of Khariar and Bindra Nawagurh should be withdrawn from the zemindars, and that an addition should be made to the takolis or revenue payable by the zemindar when thus relieved of Police duties.

In March 1891, the zemindar of Khariar accepted a fresh assessment of the takoli or revenue payable by him to Government under sec. 54 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), for 11 years from the 1st of July 1890, to the 30th of June 1901, or until a fresh settlement should be made. He then agreed to be bound by all the conditions laid down in the wajib ul-ars of his zemindari and duly executed that document.

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

In September 1892, the police administration of the zemindaris of Khariar and Bindra Nawagurh was assumed by the Government, and on that account an addition was made to the takolis of the two zamindaris.

In November 1892, a new form of wajib-ul-arz applicable to the case of the non-feudatory zemindars was approved by the Government. It was not, however, brought into use until some years later.

In 1893, the Chief Commissioner, with the sanction of the Government, determined to assume the administration of Excise. At the same time it was proposed to pay compensation for loss of income and for the present to farm out to the zemindars the Excise Administration, the takolis to run with their Land Settlements.

Some of the zemindars accepted compensation and took farms of the Excise. Some, including the zemindar of Khariar, and others of the Plaintiffs refused both offers.

In May 1903, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces decided to assume the administration of cattle-pounds in the case of the non-feudatory zemindars in the Chattisgurh Division, including the Plaintiffs, paying compensation for the withdrawal of this source of revenue.

In 1903, in connection with the new assessment, the non-feudatory zemindars in the Chattisgurh Division, including the Plaintiffs, were required to execute wajib-ul-arz in the form sanctioned by Government in November 1892 with some further amendments.

The proposed wajib-ul-arz was executed by the zemindar of Khariar and the other Plaintiffs in compliance with the requirement of the Government. It was however executed under protest. It bears date the 6th of August 1903. After an ineffectual appeal to Government this litigation was commenced.

The principal ground of complaint relates to the withdrawal of police and Excise administration. That head of complaint in the case of the zemindar of Khariar is the subject of Suit No. 27 of 1904.

The withdrawal of cattle-pounds is the subject of complaint in Suit No. 31 of 1905.

The clauses in the wajib-ul-arz of the 6th of August 1903, to which objection is taken are the subject of Suit No. 6 of 1904. One of those clauses deals with cattle-pounds.

Suits No. 6 of 1904 and No. 27 of 1904 were heard together. It was agreed that the decision in those suits should govern the decision in Suit No. 31 of 1905.

On the 6th of August 1906, the District Judge delivered separate judgments and made separate decrees in the three suits.

In Suit No. 27 of 1904, the District Judge held that the Raipur zemindars in exercising police and Excise functions were not acting as of right, but were so acting either by sufferance, or by delegation, and that the resumption of those functions by the Government was a thing done by the Government in exercise of its sovereign powers, and consequently that the suit was not maintainable.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioner held that powers of administration in respect of police and Excise must be deemed to have been granted to the Plaintiff, and that the Plaintiff was entitled to maintain his own Police and administer Excise in his zemindari.

On this question their Lordships agree with the view of the District Judge.

The District Judge dismissed Suit No.

BIR BIKRAM DEO v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

31 of 1905. The Judicial Commissioner reversed his judgment and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

In suit No. 6 of 1904, which relates to the Wajib-ul-arz of the 6th of August 1903, the following are the clauses objected to :—

In Part I. :—

"3. Removal of zamindar and forfeiture of privileges.

"6. Resumption and management of ferries and pounds.

"7. Provision that forest mahals shall be managed in accordance with rules framed by the Chief Commissioner under sec. 124A, Land Revenue Act.

"10 Declaration that all minerals are the property of Government.

In Part II. :—

"2. Discontinuance of hazarana on grant or renewal of leases

"7. Appointment, suspension, and removal of kotwars (village watchmen) to be governed by rules framed under sec. 147A, Land Revenue Act

"11.—(1.) Forest lands not included in forest mahals to be managed in accordance with any rules made by the Chief Commissioner.

"15 Hides and carcases of dead cattle to be the property of the owners of the cattle."

The District Judge was in favour of the Government on all these questions except Part I, No. 3 and No. 7, and Part II., No. 2.

On appeal to the Judicial Commissioner the decree was varied by adding a direction that the words "and pounds" be deleted from Cl. 6, Part I., and by substituting the words and figures "Cl. 3 of Part I." for the words and figures "Cls. 3 and 7 of Part I."

On appeal to this Board the objection to Part II., No. 15 was not pressed.

The case was very fully and ably argued ; but after carefully considering the arguments adduced the Wajib-ul-arz of 1892 and the Acts of the Legislature to which attention was called, their Lordships are of opinion that there is no ground for disturbing the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner in Suit No. 6 of 1904 except as regards cattle-pounds.

Their Lordships are disposed to think that the maintenance of private cattle-pounds is incompatible with the provisions of the Cattle Trespass Act, and they are of opinion that under the circumstances the establishment and maintenance of cattle-pounds under the superintendence and control of Government officials empowered to obtain the assistance of the police when required may be considered essential for the maintenance of law and order, and the peace and good Government of the country, and therefore an act of the Executive Government with which it is not competent for the Civil Court to interfere.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that in Suits 27 of 1904 and 31 of 1905 the decrees of the Judicial Commissioner should be discharged, and the decrees of the District Judge restored, but without costs. That in Suit No. 6 of 1904 the decree of the Judicial Commissioner should be varied by omitting the words "and pounds."

Their Lordships do not think fit to make any order as to costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

Nos. 167 AND 279 OF 1908.

COXE, J., N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1911, 14, December.	}	RAMDEO PRASHAD SINGH, Judgment- debtor, Appellant, v. MUSST. GOPI KOERI and another, Decree-holders, Respondents.
-------------------------------------------------------------	---	----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Grandson if liable for interest on grandfather's debts—Son's liability, if may be thrown primarily on the share obtained by survivorship from father and grandfather.

A decree for mesne profits with interest was passed against A and D grandfather and father respectively of R after R was born. Subsequently on the death of A and D the decree-holder sought to execute the decree against the entire ancestral property in the hands of R. R claimed that inasmuch as the debt was his grandfather's he was not liable for the interest, Held—That the wrong being the joint act of the father and grandfather and the liability arising therefrom being that of the father as well as of the grandfather the son was liable for interest.

That after the entire property vested in R on the death of A and D, there was no distinction between what was obtained by R by survivorship from them and his own share so as to enable R to compel the decree-holder to proceed first against the share of the father and grandfather to the exclusion of his own share.

Quære—Whether the rule in KISHUN PERSHAD v. TIPAN PERSHAD (1) throwing the burden primarily on the share of the father applies to the case of a simple money debt as distinguished from a mortgage.

(1) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 735 : s. o. 11 C. W. N. 618 (1907).

This was an appeal preferred on the 27th of April 1908, against an order of Babu L. K. Basu, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Monghyr in Bhagulpur, dated the 11th of April 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Ganesh Dut Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Kulwant Sahay for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case the Respondent obtained a decree against Ajodhya and Damodar, the grandfather and father respectively of the Appellant, for recovery of possession of land, with mesne profits, costs and interest. The mesne profits were subsequently ascertained and decreed in 1912 against Damodar and Ajodhya. At that time all three members of the family were in existence. The Respondent took out execution of the decree ; and the case ultimately came up to this Court in appeal. The Court below had excluded certain evidence : and the case was remanded in order that an opportunity might be given to the Appellant to show that the debt with respect to which execution was sought was not one for which he was liable. On remand the Court below has come to the decision that the Appellant is liable ; and this finding has been returned to this Court.

Two points have been taken on behalf of the Appellant. The first is that, in any case, the decree-holder is not entitled to interest ; and reference has been made to a passage at page 232 of Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar Shastri's book on Hindu Law, in which it is said that the grandson is not liable to pay interest on the grandfather's debts. It is argued that the dis-possession which created the liability to account for mesne profits was effected by Ajodhya, the grandfather ; that, therefore, it was he that was liable for the interest ; and that that liability does not descend to the present Appellant, who is his grandson. But it is clear that the decree for mesne profits was passed against both Damodar and Ajodhya ; and there is nothing to show that the dispossession which formed the cause of action was not effected by Damodar just as much as by Ajodhya. In any case, it is clear that Damodar was liable for the whole of the interest and mesne profits decreed ; and that being so, the passage we have quoted does not relieve the present Appellant from a similar liability.

The second point taken is based to a great extent, on the decision in Kishun Pershad v. Tipan Pershad (1). That was a suit by a mortgagee against a father and son, to enforce a mortgage ; and the order was that the Plaintiff should have the usual mortgage decree against the share of the father and, if that was not sufficient, should be entitled to realise the balance by the sale of the share of the son in the ancestral property. It is argued that following the principle of this decision, the decree-holder ought to proceed first against what was the share of Damodar and Ajodhya in the ancestral property at the time of the decree, and only in the event of that being insufficient should be allowed relief against the interest that then belonged to the present Appellant. The case, however, which has been cited was a suit upon a mortgage ; and it seems open to considerable doubt whether if it had been a case of a simple money decree, the Court would have made any distinction between the interest of the father and that of the son. But whether that be so or not, we are certainly not prepared to hold that after the death of Damodar and Ajodhya there remained any such distinction between the interest which was vested in the Appellant at his birth and the interest that he acquired by survivorship from Damodar and Ajodhya as would justify the application of the case cited. The case, therefore, does not appear to us to sustain the contention of the learned pleader for the Appellant : and there is certainly no direct authority in favour of that contention. No attachment of the property had been effected during the life-time of Damodar and Ajodhya.

It has been argued that the Appellant is not entitled to take these pleas at the present time. But, as we have decreed that they are not well-founded, it is not necessary to give any opinion on that point.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

This decision will also govern appeal No. 279 of 1908.

The hearing-fee for both the appeals is assessed at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE DECISION OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE IN the case of Taylor, reported in this issue at p. 386, will be found of considerable interest and importance to the legal profession. In the Colonies the Supreme Courts seem to entertain strange notions of judicial dignity and professional misconduct. In the special leave appeal in McLeod's case (3 C. W. N. cccxvi), from the Supreme Court of St. Vincent, the Judicial Committee intervened and awarded costs against the Acting Chief Justice for improperly having recourse to proceedings in contempt against McLeod who practised before him as a barrister and solicitor. In the present case the facts were no doubt very different and undoubtedly the offending lawyer had acted irregularly in respect of some proceedings taken by him before the law Courts on behalf of his client. But an irregularity does not necessarily signify contempt of Court or professional misconduct.

TAYLOR, A BARRISTER OF GRAY'S INN, PRACTISING at Sierra Leone also as a solicitor, acting for his client gave notice to one Wright that unless he compensated his client for some alleged assault, he would bring an action against him, which he did, on Wright not replying to his letter. As Wright was about to leave the Colony, Taylor applied to the Supreme Court under the Debtor's Ordinance for a warrant which the Acting Chief Justice rejected, observing that the warrant applied for was intended to be used as a 'lever' for getting the money which he had demanded from Wright. Thereupon Taylor went before the Magistrate, applied for and obtained a warrant for the alleged assault and got Wright arrested. For lodging a complaint for an offence committed, as in this case, within the Protectorate a fiat of Governor was necessary. Taylor had not obtained this fiat and it did not transpire whether he had brought this fact to the notice of the Magistrate. The Supreme Court thereupon took proceedings against Taylor for contempt of Court and professional misconduct.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE WAS OF OPINION THAT the warrant being on the face of it in respect of an offence committed in the Protectorate it might have been issued without a fiat from the Governor owing to inadvertence on the part of the Magistrate, and in the absence of proof of concealment or deceit on the part of Taylor he could not be charged with unprofessional conduct. In the next place their Lordships observe that when there are more remedies than one in a matter, it is open to a party to pursue one or the other or both, at his discretion. It is strange therefore that the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone should have thought that after Taylor had been refused a warrant by the Acting Chief Justice, though it be in connection with a civil action, it amounted to a contempt on his part to go before a Magistrate and to apply for a criminal process in respect of the same transaction. The effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee will surely be to remove such absurd notions of judicial dignity. The decision is also of importance as it draws a line between irregularities which may be otherwise punishable but yet may not amount to professional misconduct.

IT IS VERY MUCH TO BE REGRETTED THAT THE Hon'ble Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu's Bill to amend the Civil Marriage Act should have been thrown out by the Supreme Legislative Council. In the discussion that took place on the Bill it was all unreasoned social prejudice and vague alarm on one side and claim for individual liberty and the dictates of individual conscience on the other. We can well understand the opposition from the class of people who see in every progressive social movement the spectre of rack and ruin to the existing order of things. We can also appreciate the apprehension felt by some orthodox members of the Indian community that the passing of the Bill will somehow bring about a serious breach in the fabric of Hindu or Mahomedan society. Alarmists as a rule are blind to the facts and believe that by only shutting their eyes to them they can stop the world from moving. We are prepared to make every allowance for such honest prejudice or vague misapprehension on this question. But what we fail to comprehend is the attitude taken up by some Indian members of the Viceroy's Council who pose at times as social reformers and of official members who are supposed to keep an open mind with regard to such questions.

IN SOCIAL LEGISLATIONS OF THIS TYPE THE Government may very well stand aloof without committing itself to any particular opinion and leave the representatives of the people to fight out and decide the question amongst themselves. If it were a measure which sought to place the society or any community under any disqualification and deprive it of any important privileges, the Government would no doubt have been justified in casting its votes against the Bill. But the Bill was a merely permissive measure allowing to some people a small measure of liberty and freedom from the rigour of the latter day customs and prejudices. It did not pretend to restrict the rights and liberties of any class or community nor did it seek to impose upon Hindu or Mahomedan society the obligation to receive back amongst them any person who had chosen to marry outside the community. If such persons were ardent believers in the Vedas, Vedanta, Quoran, Avesta, or the Scriptures, why should the Government object to their professing faith in any of these gospels of truth and compel them against their conscience to make a false declaration for the purpose of contracting a valid marriage. Even if individuals or any small section of the community wanted the Bill for safeguarding their own and their children's civil rights there can be no moral justification why the Government should actively oppose what after all was but an enabling measure.

FROM OTHER POINTS OF VIEW AS WELL IT WAS the duty of Government to support the Bill. The law of marriage is intimately connected with the public policy of the State and is the foundation of important civil rights of the subject. In India the diversity of religious faith, social ceremonies and practices make it all the more necessary for Government in this country to require a law for the registration of marriages, no matter in what form they may be celebrated. So from considerations of public policy as also from the point of view that it is a matter of duty on the part of every civilized Government to secure the publicity and certainty of marriage, the official members of the Government of India should have lent their support to the Bill. In any case they should have offered to be guided by the votes of the representatives of the people on the subject. The attitude taken up by them was, however, wholly inexplicable. It was surely not justified by any serious apprehensions on the score of public antipathy; for the opposition against the Bill was assuredly not very great and the feeling against it was not of very remarkable intensity. At any rate there was nothing to compare with the amount and intensity of feeling roused by the Widow Re-marriage Act or the Civil Marriage Act. In opposing this measure the Government has surely gone against its traditions of a century during which it has always associated itself with any forward move in social legislation whenever any section of the people have wanted it.

IT IS UNFORTUNATE THAT THE SUBJECT OF THE reform of criminals, a part of which the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoi touched by his resolution in the Supreme Council on Wednesday last, received a very inadequate consideration at the hands of the Hon'ble members. Mr. Dadabhoi's proposal was to credit a portion of the profits of jail products to individual prisoners so that, on leaving, the prisoners may have some capital to start an honest living with. The Hon'ble gentleman referred to similar measures taken in England, America and other foreign countries.

TAKEN BY ITSELF THE PROPOSAL INVOLVED serious difficulties and we certainly feel the justice of the remark of Sir Reginald Craddock that "although it might be desirable to provide the 'habitual' with some money when he was released from jail he could not help feeling that in the great majority of cases such generosity would be misplaced. In fact in England and America, we cannot speak with equal assurance of other countries, providing released prisoners with some capital is a part of an elaborate system, and it could not be isolated from the whole without considerable risks of abuse. What is wanted in India is not that such measures should be introduced piecemeal, but that the whole penal system should be overhauled. The Hon'ble the Home Member gave some illustrations of what the Government had done towards such improvement. But the improvements effected touch only children, and even in their case, the very necessary provision of a separate Court for them is wanting. So far as adult persons other than 'habituals' are concerned nothing seems to have been done yet.

ANY SCHEME WHICH SEEKS TO DEAL ADEQUATELY with released offenders must presuppose the existence of probation officers and other voluntary aid societies whose duty it would be to take the released prisoner under their care and to help them with advice and assistance. Without these, merely money help of the kind suggested by Mr. Dadabhoi is likely to lead to abuse. With probation officers and other suitable organisations for the benevolent supervision and assistance to released prisoners such generosity would surely be the means of reclaiming many an offender from a life of crime. Merely to provide such a person with some money is not enough. The greatest difficulty lies in finding work for him. Proper arrangements for assistance in finding work and generally helping such a man forward in life are really the things that are first wanted. When proper aid and assistance of the released prisoners is thus provided for, the steps suggested by Mr. Dadabhoi may well be taken. We think that it is time that the Government should make a determined endeavour in this direction. We have a Prisoner's Aid Society in Calcutta which cannot do all that it would like to do for want of funds. A larger measure of support than has hitherto been accorded to it should, we think, be given to this noble institution and serious attempts made to establish similar organisations elsewhere. Children's Courts should be established at least in the big cities and a comprehensive system of probation of offenders gradually introduced. We hope that the Government will now make a decided attempt to move forward in this direction.

IN HIS REPLY SIR REGINALD CRADDOCK OBSERVED that the measures taken in England and other countries were 'in an experimental stage and that it would not, in the circumstances of the country, be advisable to diminish the deterrent effects of prisons. We are not prepared to say that no experiment should ever be tried in India till it has been successfully tried elsewhere. On the other hand where the principle on which an experiment is started elsewhere is sound we think it should be tried here as well. The effects of these measures in Europe and America cannot furnish an adequate index of what would necessarily follow here. In these matters India has an initial advantage to start with as compared with Europe or America and that is that the common people of this country are more moral and much more religious than people of the same class anywhere else in the world. It would be difficult to find in India any parallel to the utter absence of moral instincts which characterises the hardened criminals of Europe. Besides, a large majority of the crimes in India would seem to issue from momentary impulses or from a chronic want of the bare necessities of life. In conditions like these the experiments may be tried here under more favourable conditions than in Europe or America.

THE DETERRENT INFLUENCE OF PRISON LIFE IS one of the problems which has been engaging the attention of criminologists of the West. The general conclusion seems to be that the deterrent influence on habitual criminals of prison life is, to say the least, very questionable. And, we think, those who have had to deal much with criminals in this country will admit that here too prisoners on their release from jail are found to come out with a strong inclination to commit crimes of, perhaps, more serious character. It is also well known that hardened criminals are not in the least affected by the terrors of the prison. Cases are not uncommon where such people contemplate prison life with the utmost indifference. If that is so, it is time to consider whether, without impairing what value prison discipline may have for common offenders, a larger share of the attention of the Government may not be more profitably directed to the work of reclamation both inside and outside the prisons.

DELIVERY OF "SYMBOLIC" POSSESSION.

The question when legal possession is transferred from one individual to another is often sought to be determined upon purely logical considerations. In point of fact, however, usage or convention approved by law courts plays an even more important part in such matters than observation and induction. The possession of a warehouse is transferred with the delivery of the keys because it is according to established convention the approved mode of transfer of warehouses. The possession of a tract of land is sufficiently delivered for the same reason by the transferee formally crossing its boundary at one point or even by viewing it from a distance. With the increase of civilization these conventional modes of transferring possession tend to multiply in number and complexity. The element of convention has in fact entered so largely into current notions of possession that it is only where the artificial element is very glaring that writers of text-books and judges find it necessary to characterise the delivery of possession as only "formal" or "symbolical." The difference between what is generally described as "formal" or "symbolical" and other modes of delivery of possession will however be found on analysis to be really one of degree, the "formal" or "artificial" element in the latter being in fact only less pronounced than in the former. Therefore the distinction often drawn between delivery of "formal" or "symbolical" possession and what by way of distinction is described as "actual" possession is thus in most cases more imaginary than real. The question in every case is, what is the conventional mode of transfer of possession approved by the law in respect of the particular object under consideration—and it is to be remembered that the convention or usage varies with the nature of the object and also with regard to the same object with variations in its situation.

It may often be very difficult to determine what is the generally approved mode of delivery of possession in respect of any object in a given situation, and differences of opinion may very well arise from this circumstance. Where however the mode or modes are prescribed by Statute no difficulties should arise. Instances of this are to be found in sec. 263 (see also sec. 318) and sec. 264 (see also sec. 319) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Different modes are prescribed for delivery of possession of immoveable property in the direct possession of the judgment debtor and of similar property in the possession of a tenant. Where the special mode prescribed is not followed there is no effective delivery of possession. Thus where the formalities prescribed for delivery of property in the occupation of tenants are gone through in a case requiring transfer of direct possession, the transfer of possession should be wholly ineffective, and to describe such delivery of possession as "formal" and then to proceed to attach some legal consequences to it is surely the result of a confusion of ideas. This seems to be the rationale of the decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Mahadev Sakharam Parkar v. Jann Framji Hally, reported at p. 115 of 14 Bom. Law Reporter, which overrules Gopal v. Krishnarao, I. L. R. 25 Bom. 275 and Mahadeo v. Purashram, I. L. R. 25 Bom. 358, where it was laid down broadly that the delivery of formal possession (e.g., in the mode prescribed in sec. 264, C. P. C.) was effective at least as between the judgment-debtor and the judgment-creditor when the case really called for delivery of direct possession (as contemplated in sec. 263, C. P. C.). The judgment unfortunately is not sufficiently explicit even when read in the light of the order of reference.

Correspondence.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

In the Law Quarterly Review of October 1911, p. 489, I find a review of Mr. Sripati Roy's Tagore law lecture on "Customs and Customary Law in British India." The author of that review has evidently misunderstood the scope of the work. The reviewer thinks that Mr. Roy's plan of work is faulty, that he should have confined himself "to cases of custom which are opposed to the general law, that is to rules which in particular families or in a particular district have from long usage obtained the force of law but are in their essence contrary to the general law." Now to have done so would have rendered the treatise useless alike to the student, the practitioner and the jurist. Mr. Roy has classified the various customs and usages prevailing in British India. No language could have been more clear, concise and accurate. I would refer the reader to the pages of the author (see p. 40).

The reviewer concludes that Mr. Roy is of opinion that an only or the eldest son cannot be adopted. He merely states what the shastras declare, and refers to the Madras and Allahabad cases to illustrate the interpretation put on the shastric passages by those two Courts with reference to the adoption of an only son. As to the adoption of the eldest son Mr. Roy referred to the Calcutta case of Seetaram and others v. Dhunnook Dhare Sahye and others, 1 Hay 260 (1862), and quoted the words of the report "that there was no evidence to show that Nursing Narain was the eldest son at the time of the adoption, and that precedents showed that the adoption of an elder son though improper, was not illegal." Up to the date of the ruling by the Privy Council in 1899 in the appeals from Madras and Allahabad, reported in 26 I. A. 113; S. C. 3 C. W. N. 415, the interpretation of the law on this point was that the adoption of an only son was invalid. This the author has clearly stated. The case in the 24 Bombay Series, p. 367 (Vyas Chuman v. Vyas Ramchundra), was a reference to the Full Bench and the question there was simply this: whether or not in Gujarat where the Mayukha is the paramount authority, the adoption of an only son is legal and valid. This decision would not apply to the whole of India, but the Privy Council's decision is certainly contrary to the law laid down in the Courts of Calcutta and Bombay. I might here say that although the Privy Council has interpreted the Hindu law as not invalidating an adoption of an only son, there are eminent jurists, both Indian and European, who hold that such an adoption is contrary to the letter and spirit of the Hindu law. I cannot but think that all this contention and uncertainty have arisen because of the Indian interpreters of law, whether Manu, Vasistha, Yajnavalkya, Saunaka, or the authors of the Dattaka Mimamsa not being real legislators enacting Statutes or Acts in clear concise language, or Judges declaring the law in solemn form, but rather only teachers expressing themselves to their pupils in loose language and adding reasons, to their mind no doubt very cogent but in the light of modern legal learning often very puerile. However this may be the Privy Council's decision is binding on our Courts for the present. This decision has not been referred to by the author, evidently by an oversight, and I am sure, he is much obliged to the reviewer and thankful to him for bringing it forward. The readers of the author's valuable work will no doubt excuse the omission.

As to the reviewer's remark on the author's treatment of the Mahomedan customs that "Mr. Roy in several places lays down the law in questionable shape and many of his propositions have no bearing on custom and customary law," I feel bound to say, it is more captious than just. The reviewer gives as an instance that Mr. Roy says that divorce may be made in either of two forms—talak or khola, but he ignores divorce by mubārat. Surely the reviewer must know that divorce by mubārat is not commonly known even to the Shiah masses, not to speak of the Sunnis, but only to jurists more antiquarian than modern.

I think a reviewer's task is to point out the merits of a work and incidentally refer to glaring mistakes, in order that they may be corrected, but in this review faults are searched for and merits overlooked. The reviewer seems to be of opinion that there are three forms of divorce—talak, khola and mubārat, whereas in fact divorce strictly speaking, that is, the putting away of a wife, is effected in only one way. The Moslem husband has absolute power to divorce his wife. This power he can exercise arbitrarily. He is morally blamable if he does so capriciously. The words used by Arabians to signify the putting away of a wife is taulauk. He says to his wife taulauk to ka unta taulakun. It may be revocable, ruja, or, irrevocable, bain. As to taulauk-us-sunnat and taulauk-ul-badat, and the opinions of contentious jurists I need not refer to them. But I may be permitted to make the following observations. In the Mahomedan Law marriage is based strictly on the principles of contract, that is an offer, and acceptance, and a consideration. Now bearing this in mind khola is not really a divorce, but rather the rescinding of the marriage contract at the instance of a wife for consideration issuing from the wife to the husband, who accepts and releases the wife from the contract. As to mubārat it also follows the principles of the contract law and as such is grounded on mutual consent. I am of opinion, therefore, that the correct and the logical view of the question of divorce and the rescinding of the marital contract is as I have stated.

Let me cite another instance of the reviewer catching at supposed flaws. Mr Roy, he says, is not accurate in stating that talak is not complete and irrevocable by a single declaration of the husband. Mr. Roy is quite right; for, when he wrote this passage he must have had the traditional judgment of the Prophet in his mind. What does the reviewer say? He says talak called ahsan is so by virtue of a single declaration. But is it? No; for the reviewer adds that to be so, it must be followed by abstinence from sexual intercourse for the period of iddat. Therefore a single declaration surely does not even in the ahsan taulauk make it irrevocable. I think the reviewer will agree with Quintilian and Pope when they say "for not to know some trifles is a praise."

I need not take notice of the padding to his review of all that he has said about the Aga Khan, as the whole of it, forming a large portion, is irrelevant and pedantic. But as to the typographical mistakes of the printers devil I may just mention that works printed in India are not exceptionally full of misprints. When I look at the very p. 499 of the Law Quarterly Review I find several mistakes and I should be very uncharitable to attribute the mis-spelling to the want of a knowledge of modern orthography on the part of the author of that review, as I should by attributing ignorance to the reviewer when I see in his review LEVESTER instead of Sevester.

In ev'ry work regard the writer's end,
Since none need compass more than they intend;
And, if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.

Reviews.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF TORTS. By Arthur Underhill, M. A., LL. D., and J. G. Pease, B. A., Bar-at-Law. Butterworth & Co., London and Calcutta, 8-2, Hastings Street. Ninth Edition. 10s. 6d.

We notice several changes of importance in this new edition. Notably amongst them is that a chapter has been devoted to the principle of liability on account of breach of duty as laid down in Fletcher v. Rylands and other allied cases. The extension of the principle to cases of damage by animals and fire has been well-indicated and explained. We find a paragraph devoted to Lowey v. Walker, [1910 (1 K. B. 173) reversed 1911, A. C. 10], and the authors declare themselves in favour of the view of the appeal Court which was reversed by the House of Lords. Whilst much may be said in favour of either view we do not approve of the authors disposing of the view of the House of Lords in a single sentence and declaring themselves in favour of the lower Appellate Court especially in a book of this kind which is meant for students. For learners it is always preferable to present before them, when necessary, the ratio of the decisions of the Court below and the final Court of Appeal and indicate the principle on which they are respectively based rather than to fasten on them the opinion of the author. All the same we have nothing but praise for the accuracy with which the leading principles of the Law of Torts have been summarised by the authors and illustrated and explained briefly by reference to the leading cases. Practising lawyers may also refer to the work at times with profit.

THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL. By R. E. Ross, LL. B., Bar-at-Law. Butterworth & Co., London, and 8-2, Hastings Street, Calcutta.

Appeal in criminal cases is quite a new institution in England. The English Statute does not provide in detail the procedure to be followed by judges in respect of the revision of the judgments of the Court of first instance or the hearing of appeals from them as in India. When the English statute was passed some three years ago, it had its prophets of evil, who in England, as they do often in India, made many predictions of evils that would result from the innovation. We are glad to find that their prophecies, like those of their class who are always ready to oppose every reform here, have been wholly falsified. The criminal appellate work has not taxed the time and resources of either the State or of the judges to any abnormal extent. The procedure provided by the English statute is much simpler than it is in India and much is left to the discretion of the judges. The object of this work is to evolve rules from the practice followed by the English judges as embodied in their decisions. It is interesting to find that although in theory in England, as here, questions of fact cannot be gone into by the Court of Appeal, yet in considering question of law the judges have often to consider incidentally questions of fact with which the law is intertwined. The rules evolved by the author from the English Appellate Court decisions regarding the standardisation of sentences will be found of special interest and the author is to be congratulated on the care bestowed on this portion of the work. For instance the English Judges have laid it down that it does not follow that because a man has been convicted a second time of a similar offence a heavier sentence should be passed on him. The comparative gravity of the offence, the circumstances under which it was committed and the interval after the commission of the first offence should all be taken into consideration. The principle followed by English Judges that "wherever it is possible all the charges upon which it is intended to prosecute an accused person should be disposed of at the earliest time which is reasonably possible and should not be allowed to remain till the punishment for one or more of the offences has been nearly or entirely completed" should also be observed in this country.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REVISION No. 96 OF 1911. RAM DEO PANDE, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 15th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 110—Successive proceedings—Locus penitentiae.

The Petitioner was once before bound down under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., to be of good behaviour for 2 years ending with the 22nd December 1910. The police again submitted a report against him, dated the 20th October 1911, and the Sub-divisional Magistrate drew up proceedings against him under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. The Petitioner then moved the High Court for quashing the said proceeding.

Their Lordships observed :—

We think that this Rule must be made absolute on the first ground on which it was issued, namely, that the proceedings are premature. The police report upon which they are based mentions 17 cases, in which the accused has been suspected to have taken part, and 8 of these cases or nearly half, we are surprised to find, took place during the period when he was previously furnishing security. Then there are four cases in which the police reported that he has been known to have taken part. All four of these cases took place during the previous terms of security and it is upon these 12 cases, with 9 other cases which occurred in April, May and June and August 1911, that he is now being arraigned. * * * *

But these proceedings must be confined to facts and circumstances alleged against him after his release from his last security, and to import anything before as evidence of habit would be to lay down that having once been called upon to furnish security he could always on the same evidence be made to continue that security from one term to another. That certainly is not the law. The principle on which these cases should be tried is laid down in Jonab Ali v. The Emperor, I. L. R. 31 Cal. 783. We do not mean to lay down in any particular case or in this case that 15 months is or is not a sufficient period to give a man a locus penitentiae. * * * *

Mr. Huq with Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Srish Chandra Chaudhury for the Crown.

Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REV. No. 94 OF 1911. BALAI BHADRA AND ANR., Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 15th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 133—Magistrate must adjudicate upon the claim of private right.

This Rule was obtained on the ground inter alia that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to appoint a jury in a proceeding under sec. 133 when one of the Petitioners had shown cause and stated that the disputed path-way was not a public path-way and the Magistrate had not made a preliminary enquiry into the bona fides or otherwise of the claim set up by the Petitioner before appointing the jury.

Their Lordships observed :—

As regards the first ground on which this Rule was issued it is no answer for the Magistrate to say that he overlooked the fact that the Petitioner Balai had at the inception of the proceedings put in a claim that the place was not a public pathway. Such a claim having been made must necessarily be adjudicated upon by the Magistrate.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

Compensation—Appellate Court's power to order compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. C.

On the complaint of the Petitioner the Opposite Party were convicted; on appeal the District Magistrate set aside the conviction and ordered the Petitioner to pay compensation to the accused. This Rule was obtained on the ground that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order in appeal.

This Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. The Full Bench case, Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda, 16 C. W. N. 10, has now decided that the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to order compensation. The money paid must be refunded.

Babu Puran Chandra Roy for the Petitioner.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CHATTERJEE, J. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos. 1465 AND 1627 OF 1909. DULA MEAH, Plaintiff, Appellant v. JOLEKHA BIBI AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 20th February 1912.

Presumption—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 103—Entry in favour of two persons—Chitta, entry in, correctness of.

In the record-of-rights recently prepared in the locality, a certain tank was recorded, half in the name of the Plaintiff and half in the name of the Defendant.

Two suits were filed, one by the Plaintiff and one by the Defendant, each claiming the entire 16 annas of the tank. The Settlement Officer allowed the entry to remain as made in the record-of-rights.

The Special Judge on appeal declared Dhanghavo, the Plaintiff in one of these cases, as entitled to the whole 16 annas and ordered an alteration in the entry accordingly.

On appeal to the High Court by Dula Meah, who was Plaintiff in one case and Defendant in the other, it was contended that the learned Judge in arriving at his decision overlooked the presumption arising in favour of the correctness of the record-of-rights until rebutted and further that he erroneously held that a certain Government chitta of 1826 raised a presumption as to the correctness of the entry made therein.

Held—That when the entry was made in favour of each of the parties to the extent of 8 annas, to that extent each party was entitled to rely upon the record-of-rights as furnishing presumptive evidence of his title to the extent of that share.

As regards the chitta of 1826, it was prepared by a certain Government Amin in respect of a Government khas mehal. The genuineness of the chitta was admitted by the parties. It was also admitted that a certain tank in that chitta was identical with the tank in dispute. But it was not admitted that it represented a correct state of things.

Held—That there is no law which creates in favour of the chitta a presumption as to the correctness of the entry contained therein. An investigation based upon the existence of the presumption in favour of the chitta was a defective investigation, because the presumption assumed a certain state of things to be proved, unless the contrary was shown.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), sec. 154—Suit for declaration of title, maintainability—Settlement, if can be cancelled when still subsisting.

The Defendant was an annual settlement-holders of a large plot of land, about 10 bighas, for some time. After some years of Settlement in this way the land was not settled with anybody and became 'Sarbasai.' In fact it remained waste at the disposal of the Government and was used for grazing purposes. For some years this state of things continued and then the Government settled the disputed land which was a portion of the said bigger plot of land with the Plaintiff's predecessor in title for 2 years, under annual leases. Thereafter there was a re-settlement and the disputed lands were settled with the Plaintiff's predecessor in title. During the pendency of that settlement the Defendant made an application to the revenue authorities that those lands should have been settled with him as they formed a part of his old holding. The revenue officer made some enquiries behind the back of the Plaintiff and cancelled the settlement of the Plaintiff and made a settlement in favour of the Defendant for 18 years. The Plaintiff then sued for a declaration of his title to those lands, evidently such title as was given to him under two annual settlements and the re-settlement thereafter.

Held, that as the prayer was for a declaration of title, sec. 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation was not applicable.

Held, also, that the settlement in favour of the Plaintiff could not be cancelled during its subsistence.

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch.

II, Arts. 14, 120—Suit for cancellation or amendment of entry—Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (1881), sec. 83.

The only question that arose in the appeal was whether the suit of the Plaintiff was barred by Art. 14 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The suit was for the cancellation or amendment of certain entries made in the record-of-rights under sec. 83 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1881. Sec. 83 provides for suits for the setting aside of certain decisions or for the cancellation or amendment of certain entries.

Held, that the suit was not for setting aside any order of a Government officer.

A revenue officer is a Government officer who can be said to act when he makes an entry in the Register; such an act cannot, however, be set aside by a Civil Court except under any statutory power.

Held, that the suit as brought did not come within the strict wording of Art. 14, but came under Art. 120.

to a dispute relating to possession of land have been bound down under sec. 107 no order of attachment under sec. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be made in respect of the disputed property.

This was a Rule granted on the 10th July 1911, against the order of Babu A. L. Gupta, Deputy Magistrate of Magura, dated the 4th of May 1911, directing under sec. 146, Cr. P. C., the attachment of the disputed jalkar until the rights of the parties thereto are determined by a competent Court.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Navendra Kumar Bose for the Petitioners.

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Kumar Sankar Ray for the Opposite Party.

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order attaching a certain jalkar should not be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed after all the members of the second party had been bound down under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., on the 19th December 1910 in a prior proceeding.

The proceedings under sec. 145 were taken on the 23rd February 1911 and the order complained of was passed on the 4th May 1911, and the Magistrate finding it impossible to determine who was in possession of the jalkar attached the property under sec. 146. Now it would be impossible for us to say that in no case can the fact that one party had been bound down to keep the peace under sec. 107 leave the Magistrate any jurisdiction to act under sec. 145 when the circumstances so require; and we cannot see our way to making this rule absolute without laying down such a general proposition. Certainly on the facts of this case it was quite open to the Magistrate to hold that there was a probability of a breach of the peace in respect of the possession of this jalkar, even although the members of the second party had been bound down. There were many persons who are said to be interested in the jalkar who absconded at the time of the 107 proceeding. The second party say that they have a reasonable apprehension that these persons may by claiming rights in this jalkar cause a breach of the peace with the first party, who are admittedly fishermen; or the first party being fishermen may very naturally seek to enforce their rights against the second party who have been bound down; in which case the order binding down the second party will have the effect of ousting them from any possession which they may have.

It would seem that in this state of facts the right course for the Magistrate to take would be the course he has taken, namely, to try and discover who is in actual possession of this jalkar. He finds himself unable to do so and he therefore properly exercises his jurisdiction under sec. 146. The fact that the order under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., expired in December 1911, does not of course in any way affect the legal aspect of the case, but it certainly renders us less disposed in the exercise of our discretion to interfere with any measure that the Magistrate has thought it necessary to take for the preservation of the peace in his district.

1911, In the matter of

26, January.]

Professional misconduct—Proceeding to strike off from Rolls—Contempt of Court, pursuing remedy in Criminal Court when Supreme Court refused civil remedy, having disbelieved information, if amounts to—Forgery, striking out names of witnesses from subpoenas and putting other witnesses' names by solicitor after informing responsible officer—Intent to defraud, if any—Bad faith—Right to be heard on matters relating to professional misconduct.

Where a Plaintiff who has been refused a warrant for the detention of the Defendant by a Civil Court straightway starts a criminal process on the same subject-matter and by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit obtains his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, he undoubtedly runs several risks of a serious character. He is not, however, restricted by law to a single form of remedy. He may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance, and his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court whatever may be its other consequences.

Where in such a case the arrest by warrant of the Criminal Court was obtained without getting the necessary fiat of Government, and it was executed but the prisoner was then discharged on the ground that the warrant was in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and it appeared that the Magistrate was not misled into issuing the warrant by any concealment or deceit on the part of the applicant but that it might have been due to the Magistrate's own inadvertence and there was no evidence to show that the applicant did not believe in the justice of his claim and did not so instruct the solicitor who acted for him in the matter :

Held—That the conduct of the solicitor, though it might, from other points of view, be shown to be open to strong animadversion, could not, in the absence of proof that the proceedings were tainted by his fraud, be held to constitute contempt of Court, nor did it show bad faith on the part of the solicitor.

Where two persons on being served with subpoenas taken out by the solicitor on behalf of certain accused persons stated that they knew nothing of the case, and thereupon the solicitor took back the subpoenas and mentioned to a responsible Court officer that he wanted the names of witnesses to be substituted, and on his making no objection struck out their names and substituted those of two other persons in their place :

Held—That there being nothing to show that the intent of the solicitor in so doing was to defraud, the facts did not establish the charge of forgery brought against him, who at most had committed an irregularity and for which a pecuniary penalty of £20 imposed on him was an adequate punishment.

That an order striking the solicitor's name from off the Rolls on account of the said two alleged offences of contempt and forgery could not in the circumstances be maintained.

References in the order to the solicitor's "conduct in other professional matters," when no such matters were specified in the information before the Court and upon which the solicitor had not been heard could not be relied on against him,

IN THE MATTER OF MOSES AMADO TAYLOR.

This was an appeal by special leave from three Orders of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Sierra Leone, dated respectively the 3rd day of September 1908 and the 7th and 10th days of May 1909.

Mr. Moses Amado Taylor, a native of Freetown in the Colony of Sierra Leone, a Barrister of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn where he was called to the Bar in June 1907, was subsequently enrolled as a Barrister and Solicitor of the Supreme Court of the said Colony of Sierra Leone.

Early in April 1908 the Appellant, Mr. Taylor, was instructed by one Michael Huggins, a railway pointsman in the service of the Sierra Leone Government, to bring an action against one George Wright, a foreman platelayer in the employ of the said Government, for damages for an alleged assault by shooting on or about the 30th of January 1908. On the 10th of April 1908, the Appellant sent the usual letter before action to the said George Wright, demanding from him an apology and costs. There being no answer to the said letter, an action (Michael Huggins v. George Wright) was commenced on the 6th day of May 1908 in the Circuit Court of the Protectorate of the Colony of Sierra Leone.

The Appellant acted professionally for the Plaintiff in the said action of Huggins v. Wright, and during the absence on leave of the Judge of the said Circuit Court, the Appellant on the 22nd day of August 1908, applied to the Acting Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Colony of, Sierra Leone, to issue under the provisions of secs. 2 and 3 of the Ordinance for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, and for the Punishment of Fraudulent Debtors, Ordinance No. 7 of 1883, for the arrest of the said Defendant Wright, on the ground that the Defendant was about to leave the Colony but the said Acting Chief Justice rejected the said application.

The Appellant then advised Huggins that in his opinion he might proceed criminally against Wright for the alleged assault, and Huggins on the 24th day of August 1908 swore to an information before the Acting Police Magistrate of Freetown, who issued a warrant for the arrest of Wright for a felony alleged to have been committed by him, on or about the 30th day of January 1908. The warrant was duly executed, and the Appellant on the instructions of Huggins, appeared to prosecute Wright when he was brought before the Magistrate, who however discharged Wright, for want of jurisdiction.

On the 27th day of August 1908, Wright presented a petition to the Acting Chief Justice, alleging inter alia, that he had been prejudiced in the action of Huggins v. Wright by reason of the fact that Huggins, the Plaintiff, and his Solicitor, the Appellant, caused him, the said Wright, to be illegally arrested and falsely imprisoned under the circumstances stated in the last paragraph, and praying that he might be afforded such relief as might seem fit to the learned Judge, in order that his cause might not be prejudiced at the hearing of the said action.

The Acting Chief Justice, thereupon, issued under the seal of the said Circuit Court, a summons, dated the 27th day of August 1908, calling upon the Appellant, and Huggins "to show cause why an attachment should not issue against you for a contempt of this Court, in causing to be illegally arrested, on a warrant of arrest, dated the 24th day of August 1908, under the hand and seal of the Police Magistrate of the Freetown Police District, the above-named Defendant for a felony alleged to have been committed by the said Defendant in the protectorate aforesaid on the 30th day of January last, in gross contempt and defiance of the refusal of the Judge, of the said Court on Saturday the 22nd day of August 1908, to issue a warrant for the arrest of the said Defendant, on an application made by you in the above-mentioned action under the provisions of secs. 2 and 3 of an Ordinance intituled 'An Ordinance for the abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, and for the Punishment of Fraudulent Debtors' whereby, in so illegally causing the said Defendant to be arrested as aforesaid, you have acted contrary to good faith, and the true interests of justice, and in a manner calculated to bring the process of the Court and the administration of justice into contempt."

The Appellant answered the said summons and pleaded in defence, inter alia, that the procedure adopted was irregular, that the Acting Chief Justice had no jurisdiction in the matter of a contempt, if any, of the said Circuit Court, and that the action of the Appellant was not a contempt of Court.

After recording oral and documentary evidence, the said Acting Chief Justice delivered his judgment and made an order, on the 3rd day of September 1908, whereby the Appellant was ordered, "to pay a fine of one hundred pounds, and costs of these proceedings, and to be imprisoned, till the fine is paid within twenty-four hours, in which to pay the fine." He held that there was no irregularity in the procedure adopted, that he had jurisdiction to deal with the matter, and that the Appellant was guilty of a grave contempt of Court. The Appellant complied with the said order and paid the amount of the fine and costs.

In or about the month of February 1909 the Appellant was retained to defend, in the said Supreme Court, three of the accused in the case of Rex v. Ganson and others, and with a view to secure the attendance of certain witnesses, he applied to the Master of the said Supreme Court, to issue certain subpoenas, which were duly issued upon the Appellant, paying only the necessary conduct money (there being no fees chargeable). The said subpoenas were duly issued, and served by the bailiff. When the Appellant called upon two of the witnesses, who were prison warders, so served respectively, named Charles Ashley and Robert Gittens, to take their proofs, he learnt from them, that they knew nothing about the case. The Appellant, thereupon, requested the said Charles Ashley and Robert Gittens to return the subpoenas served upon them, and the said witnesses handed over the same to the Appellant. The Appellant then struck out the names, addresses, and occupations of the said Ashley and Gittens, and also the date on which the said two persons were summoned to attend the said Supreme Court, and substituted therefor the names, addresses, and occupations of two other witnesses, respectively named Lamina and Sorie, and another date, namely, 1st March. The said subpoenas, so altered, were served on the said Lamina and Sorie by the Appellant. The said Sorie did not give evidence, but the said Lamina did, and at the close of his evidence the subpoena served upon him was impounded.

The Appellant was subsequently brought before the Police Magistrate of Freetown, on a charge "that he the said Moses Amado Taylor, did on the 28th day of February 1909, at Freetown, in the Police District of Freetown, unlawfully deliver or serve or cause to be delivered or served upon one Sorie and one Lamina, labourers, residing at Big Wharf, Free-town, in the Colony aforesaid, certain forged processes on orders of the Court, or copies thereof, to wit, subpœnas, well knowing the said processes, or orders to be forged, contrary to sec. 59 of Ordinance No. 14 of 1904."

The Magistrate, after recording the oral and documentary evidence adduced in support of the said charge of alleged forgery, committed the Appellant, who reserved his defence, to the Supreme Court for trial. One of the witnesses examined before the Magistrate, was the Master of the Supreme Court, Mr. Samuel A. Metzger whose evidence went to show that only the Master of the Supreme Court could make an alteration in a subpœna, and that a "criminal subpœna" could not be served, except by a bailiff of the Court. According to his view, the Appellant forged the said two subpœnas by making the alterations that he did, and served the alleged forged processes of the Court, by serving them on the said witnesses himself. Mr. Metzger, however, admitted in cross-examination that the practice alluded to by him was unwritten.

The Appellant was thereafter indicted by the Acting Attorney-General, and when the case (Rex v. Taylor) came on for hearing, the learned Chief Justice made an order, dated the 7th day of May 1909, to the effect that if the Appellant paid a fine of £20 by the following 10th day of May, he would not be called upon to plead to the said indictment. The Appellant paid the said fine, on the same date.

On the 10th day of May 1909, the case (Rex v. Taylor) was again taken up by the learned Chief Justice who made an order removing the Appellant's name from the Roll of Barristers and Solicitors of the said Supreme Court, as a consequence of the matters which resulted in the orders, dated the 3rd day of September 1908 and the 7th day of May 1909, respectively.

On the 11th day of May 1909, the learned Chief Justice, in recording his reasons for his refusal to suspend the Appellant, expressed himself in the following terms :—

"I refused to suspend Mr. Taylor for a definite period, as I have not struck off the Rolls of the Court as a punishment for his offence in the above case (i.e., Rex v. Taylor), but because I consider his present conduct and also previous conduct, in other professional matters render him unfit to be on the Rolls of the Court, and that I have had reasonable grounds for removing his name under the provisions of sec. 56 of the Ordinance No. 14 of 1904"

The Appellant was subsequently required, by the Benchers of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn, on the application of the Acting Attorney-General of Sierra Leone, to make answer to the following charges :—

"That while practising as a barrister and solicitor of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, you were guilty of professional misconduct and conduct unworthy of a member of the Bar, in respect of (1) the matter for which you were fined £100 on the 3rd September 1908, by the Acting Chief Justice of Sierra Leone; (2) the matters for which you were struck off the Roll of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone by the Chief Justice of the Court on the 10th day of May 1909."

The Appellant sent a written answer to the said charges, and on the 3rd day of

IN THE MATTER OF MOSES AMADO TAYLOR.

November 1909 the said Bench made the following Order :—

"That the Bench, having considered the communication of the Acting Attorney-General of Sierra Leone, with regard to the conduct of Mr. Amado Taylor, and the documents which accompanied the said communication, and having also considered Mr. Taylor's written answer thereto, does not think fit to take any action in the matter."

By an order in Council made on the 28th day of November 1910, on the petition of the Appellant, it was ordered that he should have special leave to appeal, from the said three orders of the said Supreme Court.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C. (with him Messrs. Daniel Warde and Parikh) for the Appellant submitted that the Appellant's action was not a contempt of Court. There was nothing wrong in the Appellant advising his client to prosecute Wright in the Criminal Court if his client chose to do so. Even if it was, Wright could bring an action for damages in a Civil Court. But it was not contempt of Court nor could the arrest in any way prejudice the trial of the civil action. As regards the subpoenas, they were often taken out in blank and the names of witnesses were inserted afterwards. The Appellant's alterations were unintentional breaches of the unwritten practice of the Master's office. The alterations were made openly and without any attempt at concealment. There was no wrong motive. The payment of the fine of £20 was not admission of guilt. It was paid only to put an end to the matter. The Chief Justice's judgment ordering the Appellant's name to be removed from the Rolls of the Court was a most extraordinary one. The Appellant knew nothing whatever about the "other professional matters" referred to by the Chief Justice. He had no opportunity of defending himself. The Appellant had been hardly and unjustly treated:

The Attorney-General and Mr. S. A. T. Rowlatt for the Respondents.

Mr. Rowlatt submitted that the Appellant was guilty of contempt of Court in bringing to bear the process and the pressure of the Court by arresting Wright on an alleged assault. The process must have been irregular to the Appellant's knowledge as he had not received the fiat of the Attorney-General. It was an abuse of process to coerce the Defendant. Referring to the subpoenas it was submitted that the offences charged against the Appellant involved intent to defraud. In a Colony such as Sierra Leone the way of dealing with a barrister or solicitor was by contempt of Court for there were no Bar Council, no Law Society and no professional opinion.

Sir R. Finlay in reply.—It was no doubt true that it desirable that the law should be observed and applied with all strictness and regularity in a Colony where there was a large native population but it was no less important that His Majesty's Judges in such a community should not bring to bear such a weapon as they exercised in this case under the guise of their jurisdiction for contempt of Court, against a barrister whose proceedings had brought him under their displeasure.

LORD ROBSON.—The Appellant Moses Amado Taylor is a native of Freetown in the Colony of Sierra Leone and a barrister of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in June 1907. He was afterwards enrolled as a barrister and solicitor of the Supreme Court of the said Colony, and he now appeals from three orders of that Court.

By the first of those orders, dated the 3rd September 1908, he was fined 100*l.* and costs for an alleged contempt of Court; by the second, dated the 7th May 1909, he was fined 20*l.* in respect of an alleged forgery in the case of Rex v. Ganson and by the third, dated the 10th May 1909, his name was removed from the Roll of barristers and solicitors of the said Supreme Court.

On the 6th May 1908 the Appellant, acting professionally for one Michael Huggins, commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the Protectorate wherein the Plaintiff Huggins, who was a native railway pointsman in the service of the Sierra Leone Government, sued one George Wright, who was a foreman plate-layer in the same employ, for damages for an alleged assault by shooting on the 30th January 1908 at Kangahun, in the Protectorate. When the action was begun Huggins had been dismissed from his employment, and on the 20th June the Appellant wrote to Wright saying that if his client had not been peremptorily dismissed from work he would have advised him to drop the matter, and offering at the same time to settle it if Wright would agree to pay his client's wages for the six months' employment he had lost (amounting to about 10*l.*) and costs. He further stated that if these terms were refused he would apply for the Governor's fiat to have the action tried in Freetown before he (Wright) left the Colony.

No notice was taken of this letter.

On the 22nd August 1908, the Appellant applied to the Acting Chief Justice under sec. 2 of the Debtor's Ordinance, 1883, for a warrant for the arrest of Wright on the ground, which was true, that he was about to leave the Settlement. The Appellant at the same time stated that if Wright would settle on the terms before suggested, his client would be satisfied. The Acting Chief Justice refused this application because, as he states in his judgment delivered on the 3rd September 1908, he "saw that all he (Appellant) wanted was to get some money out of Wright and to use the warrant as a lever."

On the 24th August 1908, an application was made on the information of Huggins to one of the police Magistrates, Mr. Vergette, at Freetown, for a warrant for the arrest of Wright upon a criminal charge of assault, with intent to murder, on the 30th January 1908, and a warrant was issued accordingly. As the Magistrate who granted it had no jurisdiction over matters arising in the protectorate, except under the authority of the fiat of the Governor, which was wanting in this case, this warrant was in excess of his jurisdiction. Afterwards, in the proceedings for the contempt, the Magistrate stated that—

"In granting the warrant, I was misled by the information, which did not go to show that the offence was committed in the protectorate; it was brought to me while I was on the Bench."

The information was silent as to the place where the alleged assault was committed, but it so happens, however, that the warrant itself explicitly states that the offence took place at Kangahun in the protectorate, a circumstance which must have been communicated by the Appellant or Huggins. There does not appear, therefore, to have been any concealment or deceit on the part of the applicant, though there may have been inadvertence on the part of the Magistrate. The warrant was duly executed, and on the 25th August 1908 Wright was brought before the Magistrate. The Appellant appeared for Huggins, the prosecutor, and at once asked the Court to remand Wright so that he (the Appellant) might apply to His Excellency the Governor to obtain a fiat to give the Magistrate jurisdiction. The Magistrate had, under the circumstances, no jurisdiction at all, and very properly refused that application, whereupon Wright was discharged.

On the 27th August 1908, a summons was issued by the acting Chief Justice and served on the Appellant, calling on him to appear and show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for contempt of the Circuit Court of the protectorate in causing Wright to be illegally arrested—

"in gross contempt and defiance of the refusal of the Judge of the said Court on the 22nd August 1908, to issue a warrant for the arrest" of Wright.

The summons was heard on the 29th and 31st August 1908 by the Acting Chief Justice, who called and examined Wright, and the Magistrate, Mr. Vergette. The sole question then to be determined was whether or not the prosecution and arrest of Wright was a contempt of Court. The Acting Chief Justice came to the conclusion that it was. He was of opinion that the Appellant and Huggins resorted to the criminal proceedings and procured the illegal arrest as a mere lever to get the money they were demanding from Wright.

"The whole proceeding" said the learned Judge

"was simply an abuse of a process of Justice," and he adds,

"I am satisfied that the contemnors, in initiating their criminal proceedings, were influenced by the intention of defying me for having refused them the civil warrant of arrest they applied for, and Taylor in particular had this object in view, for when I refused him the warrant, he became impudent and threatened to complain to the Secretary of State."

 "Even if the warrant had been valid, a contempt would have been committed, and the illegality of the warrant only intensifies the contempt."

It was the recourse which this solicitor had, on behalf of his client, to another tribunal and a different process, in order to get what the learned Judge had decided he was not entitled to have, which constituted, in the learned Judge's view, the essence of the contempt.

It is true that the learned Judge found as a fact that the Appellant was not acting in good faith, but the sense in which that charge is put forward needs some explanation. It is not suggested, or certainly there is no evidence to support such a suggestion, that Huggins did not believe in the justice of his claim and did not so instruct his lawyer. It was, indeed, pointed out by the learned Judge that the alleged assault was seven months old, and that if the contemnors had been acting in the interests of justice they would have taken their proceedings earlier, but mere delay in such circumstances can scarcely be advanced as a proof that the proceedings were fraudulent. It may be that the alleged contemnors have made themselves liable to proceedings at the instance of Wright; that is a question on which their Lordships express no opinion whatever, and have no adequate means of forming one; it may be that the conduct of the Appellant may turn out to be open to strong animadversion from other points of view than that of contempt of Court, but for the purposes of the present proceeding it has not been proved, and cannot be assumed, that the proceedings before the Magistrate were tainted by any fraud on the part of the Appellant.

The question is therefore narrowed down to the bare ground stated in the summons, namely whether under the circumstances, procurement of the warrant and the arrest consequent thereon constituted in law a contempt of the Supreme Court. Their Lordships think they did not. Where a Plaintiff who has been refused a warrant for the detention of the Defendant by a Civil Court straightway starts a criminal process on the same subject-matter, and, by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit, obtains his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, he undoubtedly runs several risks of a serious character. He is not, however, restricted by law to a single form of remedy. He may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance, and his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court, whatever may be its other consequences.

The next order complained of, that of the 7th May 1909, arose out of the case of Rex v. Ganson and others in the Supreme Court, in which the Appellant was retained to defend three of the accused. He was desirous of securing the attendance of two witnesses, Ashley and Gittens, who were prison warders, and applied to the Master of the Supreme Court for subpoenas for them. The subpoenas were accordingly issued on the deposit by the Appellant of the conduct money, or allowance usual for witnesses of that class, (there being no fees payable), and were duly served by the bailiff. It turned out that the witnesses named said they knew nothing about the case, so the Appellant asked them to return the subpoenas to him, which they did. He then struck out the names of Ashley and Gittens, and substituted for them the names of two labourers, Lamina and Sorie. The subpoenas, so altered, were served by the Appellant on Lamina and Sorie, and one of them, Lamina, was called and gave evidence. On these facts being disclosed at the trial the learned Chief Justice ordered Lamina's subpoena to be impounded.

Proceedings were subsequently taken against the Appellant in the Police Court at Freetown on the charge that he had forged the subpoenas delivered to Lamina and Sorie.

The facts above stated, which were never in dispute, and which constituted the whole case against the Appellant on this head, were then duly proved, with one additional circumstance worthy of note. It appeared on cross-examination of the Deputy Master and Registrar of the Supreme Court, who is also Under-Sheriff, that the Appellant called on him on 27th February 1909 for a subpoena for one Anderson. At that time the other subpoenas, including those for Ashley and Gittens, had been issued, and the Deputy Master admitted that the Appellant told him that he wanted some other witnesses substituted. He clearly referred to a proposed substitution of names in the existing subpoenas. The Deputy Master never told him that new subpoenas would have to be taken out. He made no protest or objection. It did not seem to strike him as being in any way a serious matter, though, possibly enough, if any one had paused to think about it, it would have been recognised as an irregularity.

The Appellant was committed for trial, and on the 1st May 1909 the Attorney-General preferred an information against the Appellant charging him with (1) altering two copies of a subpoena with intent to defraud, (2) serving the copies, so altered, with intent to defraud, and (3) uttering forged subpoenas, with intent to defraud, knowing that they were forged.

The case came on for trial before the Chief Justice on the 3rd and 7th May 1909. Some of Appellant's colleagues at the Bar made a representation to His Honour, pointing out that the effect of his pleading to the information would be a conviction for an indictable offence, the consequence of which would be the removal of his name from the Roll of the Inns of Court in London. His Honour, therefore, on the application of the Appellant's counsel, consented that a plea should not be taken, the prisoner admitting his guilt and submitting to a fine of 20*l.*, which was paid.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the facts alleged against the Appellant did not suffice to establish the very serious offence with which he was charged. The evidence does not show or suggest any intent to defraud on the part of the Appellant, and, indeed, there seems to have been no motive so far as he was concerned which could give rise to any such intent. At the most he committed an irregularity for which some pecuniary penalty on his part was an adequate punishment.

A fresh proceeding was then immediately instituted against the Appellant to have him struck off the Roll of barristers and solicitors of the Supreme Court of the Colony, and on the 10th May 1909 the Chief Justice made an order to that effect. This is the third order complained of. It is founded entirely on the two alleged offences already dealt with, and must stand or fall with them. It is true that the Chief Justice in giving his reasons for this order refers to the Appellant's

"conduct in other professional matters" as rendering him unfit to be on the Rolls of the Court, but no such matters are specified for the information of their Lordships, nor has the Appellant been heard upon them. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the Order of the 3rd September 1908, should be discharged, and the sum of 100*l.* and the costs paid thereunder by the Appellant be returned to him; that the Order of the 7th May 1909, be discharged, except in so far as the same accepts the offer of the Appellant to pay the sum of 20*l.*; and that the Order of the 10th May 1909, be discharged, and the name of the Appellant restored to the Roll of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Sierra Leone.

No order is made as to the costs of this appeal.

This was an application by the purchaser for the issue of a sale certificate in respect of property purchased by him at a sale held by the Receiver.

Mr. B. L. Mitter for the Petitioner.—The High Court has always recognised the rights of a purchaser at a Receiver's sale to invoke the assistance of the Court in obtaining possession under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which relate to sales in a suit.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an application by a purchaser at a sale held by a Receiver under an order of Court for a sale certificate and for confirmation of the sale. The purchaser relies upon a decision of Sale, J., in the case of Minatoonnessa Bibee v. Khatoonnessa Bibee (1). The short point is whether a sale by a Receiver under the direction of the Court is a sale by the Court so as to enable or require the purchaser to obtain a sale certificate. With the utmost respect for the learned Judge I think he has made a confusion between a sale by the Court and a sale under the Court. There are two classes of sales in suit, first sales by the Court and second sale under the Court. Sales by the Court are cases in which the Court makes a title to the purchaser and the Court confirms the sale and issues a sale certificate. The second class is where the Court authorises a trustee, receiver or other person holding property to sell the property and the sale is made out of Court, the Court while authorising or directing the sale does not make any title to the purchaser and in such a sale the Court does not grant a sale certificate nor does it confirm the sale. I am of opinion that the purchaser can rest content upon his purchase without having the sale confirmed by the Court or having a sale certificate issued to him.

I certify this case for counsel.

Where there were two different darpun tenures in respect of 13 as. and 3 as. respectively of a putni, with different assessments of rent held by the same tenant though it is competent to a landlord to bring one suit for both the tenures, the mere fact that the total rent of the two tenures is claimed in the same suit cannot have the effect of consolidating the two tenures into one.

A decree obtained for arrears of rent in respect of two or more separate tenures cannot be executed as a rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act but must be executed as a money decree under the Civil Procedure Code.

The question raised in this appeal is whether a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the Respondent against the Appellants can be executed under the special procedure prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act. The record of the rent suit was sent for and is before this Court. It appears from the plaint that there are two darputni tenures one in respect of the 13 annas share of the putni and the other in respect of the 3 annas share. Separate rents and instalments are fixed in respect of each darputni which moreover are not proportionate to each other, and the tenures are referred to in the plaint itself as both the jamás. The mere fact that the total rent of the two tenures are claimed in one suit cannot have the effect of consolidating the two tenures into one.

It is true the decree refers to a darputni but the question, whether there were two separate tenures or there was only one becomes material only when the decree is sought to be executed under the special provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is competent to a landlord to bring one suit for the total rents of several tenures held by the same tenant and no objection can be taken to the decree passed in this case.

It is clear upon the authorities that when one decree is obtained in respect of two or more separate tenures the special procedure prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be adopted in executing such a decree. Such a decree must be executed as an ordinary decree under the Civil Procedure Code.

The order of the Court below is accordingly set aside. The decree-holder of course will be at liberty to execute the decree as a decree for money under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

We make no order as to costs. The Rule is discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXI, r. 2—Payment not certified if may be taken to extend limitation.

Under Or. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, an adjustment or payment of a decree which is not duly certified cannot be recognised by the Court for any purpose whatever, e.g., for extending the time of limitation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 9th of February 1911, against an order of Mr. A. Majid, District Judge of Zillah Rajshahye, dated the 15th of November 1910, confirming an order of Babu Bepin Chandra Chatterjee, Munsif of Nattore, dated the 8th of March 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Wahed Hussain for the Appellant.

Babu Krishna Kumar Moitra for the Respondent.

KUTABULLAH SARKAR v. DURGA CHARAN RUDRA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor, from an order of the District Judge, permitting the decree-holder to execute the decree of the 4th August 1901. The first execution proceeding began on the 5th September 1904 ; the second on the 4th January 1908 ; while the third and present application was made by the decree-holder on the 11th August 1909. On these facts, it is urged for the judgment-debtor that the first and second applications to execute the decree were clearly barred. This contention, however, cannot be considered in the absence of findings of fact, and the omission is due to the attitude of the judgment-debtor who refrained from pressing any such objection in the lower Courts. There must have been various proceedings on the successive applications, and certain action taken on the second application has been mentioned at the bar. If that application was in time, the case with which we are now concerned was properly instituted and can continue.

The next contention is that there was an adjustment of the decree some time in the year 1901 ; that the decree-holder fraudulently omitted to certify the same to the Court ; and that the question is one that should have been decided under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Or. XXI, r. 2 of the Code, as now amended, provides that a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded in the manner provided by the foregoing part of the section, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. The omission of the words "as payment or adjustment of the decree" makes it clear that the Court cannot recognise a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified, for any purpose whatsoever, as, for example, to prolong the period of limitation for applying for execution. The judgment-debtor has his remedy under the second clause of r. 2 ; he is at liberty to inform the Court, and so to protect himself from any fraud of the decree-holder. The Appellant however seeks to obtain another remedy, and to have his objection to execution tried out under sec. 47 of the Code. But he cannot be permitted to evade the provisions of Art. 173A of the Limitation Act, and to obtain a decision in a matter which does not strictly come within the scope of sec. 47 because it is a matter which has been specifically provided for in Or. XXI, r. 2. If the contrary view were adopted, it would be open to the judgment-debtor in any similar case to allege fraud on the part of the decree-holder and to have an enquiry made under the general section, for every omission to certify payment may involve either negligence or fraud which in such a case would be an aggravated form of negligence. In the same Or. (XXI) the Legislature has exacted that applications to set aside sales on the ground of fraud came within the scope of r. 90, and so the operation of sec. 47 is excluded by necessary implication.

The view we take in this matter receives support from the decision of Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., in Monmohan Karmokar v. Dwarka Nath Karmokar (1). The judgment-debtor may have his remedy by suit on a plaint properly framed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at 2 gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

CASPERSZ, J. TARA NATH CHAKRA-

1911, VERTY, Appellant,

Judgment, SARKAR, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1882), Sch. III, Art. 3, secs. 184, 5 (5), 20 (7)—Suit by tenant against landlord for recovery of land—Rules of limitation, general and special, onus of proof as to—Character of tenancy, presumption as to—Area less than 100 bighas.

In a suit by a tenant for the recovery of land of which he had been dispossessed by the landlord, the tenant claimed the land as tenure-holder and the Defendants contended that it was an occupancy holding. Neither the character of a tenure-holder nor that of an occupancy raiyat was established by positive evidence. The question being what period of limitation was applicable to the case,

Held, that in the circumstances of the case there was no statutory presumption either way.

That the general rule of limitation in suits for recovery of possession of property was twelve years and that it is upon the party claiming the benefit of a shorter period of limitation to establish that the case fell within the special rule limiting the period to a shorter time.

The Defendants having failed to establish the occupancy character of the holding so as to bring it within the special rule of limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Plaintiff's suit being within time by the general rule, the suit was not barred by limitation.

A suit by a tenant to recover lands from the landlord, of which he alleges he has been dispossessed, is not a proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act within the meaning of cl. (7) of sec. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

There is no provision in cl. (5) of sec. (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that when the area held by a tenant is less than 100 bighas, the tenant is to be presumed a raiyat until the country is shown.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st August 1906 from a decision of Babu Pran Krishna Biswas, Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 25th of June 1906, modifying that of Babu Syama Kanta Nag, Munsif, Faridpur, dated the 31st of March 1905.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri and Babu Baikuntha Nath Dass for the Appellant.

Babu Monmotho Nath Roy for Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Defendants in an action in ejectment. The Plaintiffs Respondents commenced this action for recovery of 14 parcels of land, of which they claimed to be the tenants under the Defendants-Appellants as zemindars. The Defendants conceded that the Plaintiffs were their tenants, but denied their tenancy in respect of the lands in dispute. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part in respect of the plots to which the tenancy right of the Plaintiffs had been established. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the only substantial question of law which has been argued is that the claim is barred by limitation inasmuch as the Plaintiffs were occupancy raiyats, and, according to their own case, had been dispossessed more than two years before the commencement of the suit. The Plaintiffs, on the other hand, have contended that they were tenure-holders, and no question of limitation arose as they had brought the suit within twelve years from the date of dispossession.

The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below has found that the Defendants had failed to prove that the Plaintiffs were occupancy raiyats, and that consequently the special rule of two years limitation could not be applied to the claim. The present appeal was heard by a Division Bench on the 26th April 1909, and on that occasion an order was made under Or. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to enable the lower Court to determine the true character of the tenancy. The Subordinate Judge has now returned the finding that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were tenure-holders as asserted by them. The position, therefore, in substance is that the origin of the tenancy is unknown, and neither the Plaintiffs nor the Defendants have been able to establish their allegation as to the true character of the tenancy.

It is worthy of remark that the provision in cl. (7) of sec. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is of no assistance to the parties. That clause provides that if in any proceeding under the Act, it is proved or admitted that a person holds any land as a raiyat, it shall, as between him and the landlord under whom he holds the land, be presumed, until the contrary is proved or admitted, that he has for twelve years continuously held that land or some part of it as a raiyat. In the first place this suit for ejectment cannot be properly deemed a proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act: in the second place it is neither proved nor admitted that the Plaintiffs hold as raiyats, and consequently no presumption can arise that they are occupancy raiyats. Nor is the presumption laid down in cl. (5) of sec. 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of any use in the solution of the question raised before us. That clause provides that where the area held by a tenant exceeds 100 standard bighas, the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure-holder until the contrary is shown. Here the area held by the tenant does not exceed 100 bighas. Consequently, the statutory presumption is entirely inapplicable. It may be observed here that the clause to which reference has been made does not embody a presumption that where the area held by a tenant is less than 100 bighas, the tenant is to be presumed to be a raiyat until the contrary is shown. The presumption created by the Legislature is purely unilateral, and its scope and applicability cannot be extended beyond its legitimate limits.

The position, therefore, is that the Plaintiffs have been proved to be the tenants of the disputed lands under the Defendants as their landlords who have unlawfully dispossessed them. No information is available as to the origin of the tenancy, and nothing is known about the purposes for which the tenancy was created. The question arises, under these circumstances, whether the general rule of limitation embodied in Art. 142 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act is to be applied, or whether the special rule of limitation laid down in Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to be taken to govern the matter. The learned Counsel for the Defendants-Appellants has contended that as cl. (1) of sec. 184 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, quite as much as sec. 4 of the Limitation Act, makes it obligatory upon the Court to dismiss a suit instituted after the time prescribed for the purpose, and as sec. 50 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, casts the duty upon the Plaintiffs to specify the point of time when the cause of action arose, the burden of proof is upon the Plaintiff to establish the true character of the tenancy and the applicability of the rule of limitation upon which they place reliance. In answer to this contention, it has been argued by the learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs-Respondents, that the onus is upon the Defendants to prove the special circumstances which would abridge the ordinary period of limitation applicable to cases of this description. In our opinion, the contention of the Respondent is well-founded and must prevail.

Art. 142 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act provides that a suit for possession of immoveable property, when the Plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed or has discontinued possession, must be instituted within twelve years from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance. There is no room for controversy that the present suit is one for possession of immoveable property within the meaning of the rule thus laid down. Prima facie, therefore, this is the rule applicable to the matter now before us. The Defendants, however, contend that the period which would otherwise be available to the Plaintiffs has been abridged, because the Plaintiffs are occupancy raiyats, and that they are bound to sue within two years from their dispossession as laid down in Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

That article provides that a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the Plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat must be instituted within two years from the date of dispossession. As the Defendants rely upon the special rule, the burden is obviously upon them to establish the circumstances requisite to make the rule applicable. The Plaintiffs do not claim to recover possession of the land as occupancy raiyats. It may be conceded that if it was established that the Plaintiffs were, as a matter of fact, occupancy raiyats, the mere circumstance that, in their plaint, they claimed the disputed land not as occupancy raiyats but as tenure-holders, would not exclude the operation of Art. 3 of Sch. III because it is a well-settled principle that parties cannot be allowed to evade the just application of statutory provisions on allegations untrue in fact: if the contrary view were taken, an unscrupulous litigant might evade the bar of limitation created by Art. 3 of Sch. III, by an unfounded assertion which would not stand scrutiny. We shall, therefore, assume that Art. 3 would be applicable if it was proved that the Plaintiffs were in reality occupancy raiyats. But they have not been proved to be such: neither the Plaintiffs nor the Defendants are able to prove the true character of the tenancy. Under such circumstances, as the special rule embodied in Art. 3 of Sch. III is not shown to be applicable, we must fall back upon the general rule embodied in Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, which, it cannot be disputed, is by its very terms, applicable to the case. The position that in circumstances like these the burden of proof is upon the party who asserts that the case has been taken out of the general rule and is governed by the special rule, is supported by the principle which underlies the decisions in Mohan Singh v. Conder (1), Danmull v. B. I. S. N. Co. (2) and Mangun Jha v. Dulhin (3). The burden of proof is rightly thrown on the party who claims the protection of the shorter period, because he would fail in his contention if no evidence at all were given on this question on either side (secs. 102 and 103 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872). The wider clause is, by the very generality of its terms, comprehensive enough to govern the matter, and if its operation is sought to be excluded on the ground that the case is covered by a special clause, the party who takes up this position must prove the existence of the special fact which operates as a bar to the suit, except perhaps when the facts are specially within the knowledge of the Plaintiff (sec. 106, Indian Evidence Act, 1872). To put the matter in another way, if there is a conflict between two periods of limitation, one of which, the longer, is applicable to all circumstances, and the other, the shorter, to special circumstances only, the longer term given by the statute to bring the suit ought to be applied, unless there is clear proof of the special circumstance which would make the shorter term applicable [Crum v. Johnson (4)].

The view we take is obviously just and may be defended on first principles if we remember for a moment the object of statute of limitation. We are not now concerned with the conflicting opinions as to the policy which underlies statutes of limitation, whether they are to be strictly interpreted because they encourage un-conscientious defences [Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Quantock v. England (5)], or whether they are to be construed liberally because they are statutes of repose, Dallas, C. J., in Tolson v. Kaye (6), or statutes of peace [Baron Bramwell in Hunter v. Gibbons (7)]. It is sufficient for our present purpose to hold with Lord St. Leonards [Trustees of Dundee Harbour v. Dougall (8)], that "all statutes of limitation have for their object the prevention of the rearing up of claims at great distances of time when evidences are lost, and in all well-regulated countries, the quieting of possession is held an important point of policy" [Luchmee Buxsh v. Runjeet Ram (9), White v. Paruther (10)]. The principle is lucidly explained by Sir Thomas Plumer M. R. in Cholmondeley v. Clinton (11):—"The public have a great interest in having a known limit fixed by law to litigation for the quiet of the community, and that there may be a certain fixed period, after which the possessor may know that his title and right cannot be called in question." In the case before us, the possessor knew that after the expiry of twelve years from his entry, his right could not be called in question. If it was his case that his right ought not to be allowed to be called in question after the expiry of a shorter period, namely, after the lapse of two years from the commencement of his possession, it was for him to prove the special circumstances which alone would support a claim for such special protection. The burden, therefore, would be clearly upon him to establish the facts which would justify a reliance on his part upon the special period of limitation. This he has failed to do. Consequently, in our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has rightly applied the general rule of limitation.

(6) 2 B. L. R. 108 : s. c. 10 W. R. 447 (1868).

MOOKERJEE, J.—The Court is invited in this Rule to consider the legality of an order by which the Subordinate Judge has directed attachment of a debt payable outside its jurisdiction. The circumstances, under which the attachment has been made have not formed the subject of controversy before us. The decree-holder, Opposite party, one Jagannath Marwari, held a decree for money against one Rowland Hill, now deceased. Upon the death of the judgment-debtor, he sought to enforce the decree against his widow Annie Hill, as executrix to the estate of her husband. It appears that Rowland Hill was entitled to obtain a large sum of money from Messrs. Begg, Dunlop & Co. and Messrs. Williamson Magor & Co., two firms of merchants carrying on business in the town of Calcutta. The decree under execution had been made by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, and the application for execution had in the usual course been presented to that Court. The decree-holder next applied for an order of attachment of a sum of Rs. 6,750, out of the amount alleged to be due to the judgment-debtor from the two firms just mentioned. The Subordinate Judge thereupon issued a prohibitory order under r. 46 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 which was served upon the two firms on the 13th August 1910. The firms filed an objection against the prohibitory order, amongst others, on the ground that the Burdwan Court had no jurisdiction to attach the money in their hands, as they carried on business in Calcutta and the debt was also payable outside the jurisdiction of the Court. The Subordinate Judge, on the 19th September 1910, overruled this objection, and held that he had power to issue a prohibitory order, under r. 46, beyond the local limits of his jurisdiction. We are now invited to set aside this order on the ground that the prohibitory order was beyond the competency of the Court and that the Subordinate Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. In support of the Rule, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Abdul Gafur v. Albyn (1), Rango Fairam v. Balkrishna (2) and Sayadkhan v. Davies (3). Reference has also been made to the cases of Moonshee Hossein Ally v. Ashotosh Gangoolly (4) and Parbati Charan v. Panchanand (5). In answer to the Rule, on the other hand, reliance has been placed upon the case of In re Hollick (6). It may be conceded that the observations of the learned Judges who decided the case last-mentioned do tend to support the contention of the decree-holder that it was competent to the Subordinate Judge to issue a prohibitory order upon a person, resident outside the jurisdiction of his Court, restraining him from paying a debt due to the judgment-debtor of the execution-creditor. This view, however, has not been accepted in the other cases upon which reliance is placed by the Petitioner, and in the case of Abdul Gafur v. Albyn (1) the Court declined to follow the decision in In re Hollick (6). Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the decisions mentioned turn upon the construction of the Codes of 1859 and 1882, it is incumbent upon the Court not merely to examine the provisions of the Code of 1908, which alone are applicable to the case before us, but also to consider the question as one of principle.

Sec. 38 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 provides, that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. Sec. 39 specifies the circumstances under which the Court which passed the decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court. Cl. (a) of this section provides that a decree may be transferred if the person against whom the decree has been passed actually and voluntarily resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. Cl. (b) provides that a decree may be transferred if the judgment-debtor has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree, and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the other Court. Cl. (c) deals with the case of a decree for the sale or delivery of immoveable property situated outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. These provisions of sec. 38, read along with those of sec. 39, plainly indicate the acceptance by the Legislature of the general principle that no Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situated entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction. This elementary principle was recognised by a Full Bench of this Court in Prem Chand v. Mokhoda (7). It is needless for the purposes of the present case to formulate the exceptions to this rule: it is sufficient to indicate that in cases of decrees for sale of mortgaged properties an exception has been recognised. Maseyk v. Steel (8), Kartick Nath v. Tilukdhari (9), Gopi Nath v. Doybaki (10), Tincouri v. Shib Chandra (11), Latchman v. Maddan (12) and Jahar v. Kamini Debi (13). An exception has also been recognised by the new Code in cases of attachment of salaries of public officers under r. 48, and of sale of entire estates situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of more than one Court under r. 3 of Or. 21. It is not necessary, however, as just stated, to attempt an exhaustive enumeration of all possible exceptions to the general principle. The sole question for consideration now is, whether the principle should be held inapplicable to the case of attachment of a debt payable outside the jurisdiction of the Court by a person who also resides beyond the local limits of such jurisdiction.

R. 43 of Or. 21 provides the mode of attachment of moveable property, other than agricultural produce, in possession of the judgment-debtor; such attachment must be effected by actual seizure, and it is reasonably plain that the attachment can be so effected only when the property is within the jurisdiction of the Court. R. 46 then provides for the attachment of moveable property not in possession of the judgment-debtor, including a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument. The attachment is to be effected by a written order prohibiting the creditor from recovering the debt, and the debtor from making payment thereof until further orders of the Court. A copy of such order must be affixed on a conspicuous part of the Court-house, and another copy sent to the debtor. It is further provided that a debtor so prohibited may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same. The substance of the procedure, therefore, is that upon the application of the decree-holder the Court records an order which prohibits the judgment-debtor who is the creditor of the debtor from recovering the debt, and also prohibits the debtor from paying the debt to his creditor; a copy of the order is published in the Court house, and another copy is sent for communication to the debtor. I am unable to hold, on principle, that it is competent to a Court to issue such a prohibitory order upon a person resident outside the local limits of its jurisdiction in respect of property also beyond such local limits. If such a person disobeyed the order of the Court and in defiance thereof made the payment, the Court would be powerless to enforce its order by proceedings in contempt. On the other hand, there is no good reason why the decree-holder should not apply for transfer of the decree to the Court within the local limits of which the garnishee, that is, the debtor of the judgment-debtor, resides. Two objections, however, have been suggested to the adoption of such a course. It has been contended in the first place, that the delay which must necessarily take place before an order of transfer could be obtained might prove fatal to the decree-holder who might find that the judgment-debtor had in collusion with his debtor received payment of the debt sought to be attached. The obvious answer is that the procedure of attachment under precepts provided in sec. 46 of the Code of 1908 furnishes a speedy and effective remedy. The object of a precept is to enable a decree-holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. Sec. 46 expressly provides that upon the application of the decree-holder the Court which passed the decree may, whenever it thinks fit, issue a precept to any other Court which would be competent to execute such decree to attach any property belonging to the judgment-debtor and specified in the precept; and the Court to which a precept is so sent shall proceed to attach the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree. This provision plainly indicates that the Legislature did not intend that a Court should directly attach property beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction. It has been argued in the second place that if the contention of the Petitioners prevails, two separate orders would be required in respect of the same matter; that is, an order by the Court which passed the decree upon the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from recovering the debt; and an order by the Court, to which the decree has been transferred for execution upon the debtor of the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from making payment thereof. This in substance was the argument which found favour with the learned Judges who decided the case of In, re Hollick (6). I do not feel pressed by the weight of this contention. The course suggested does not lead to any serious inconvenience. On the other hand, if the prohibitory order is issued by the Court which made the decree to a person beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction, the order may prove infructuous, if it is disobeyed and the Court may find itself powerless to enforce it.

Under these circumstances, we are confirmed in the opinion that it is not competent to a Court, in execution of a decree for money, to attach at the instance of the decree-holder a debt payable to the judgment-debtor by a non-resident outside the jurisdiction. Rule 48 of Or. 21 also tends to support this view. It is well known that under the law as it stood before the Code of 1908 it had been ruled that the salary of a public officer or railway servant could not be attached unless the disbursing officer was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree. Rango v. Balakrishna (2), Sayadkhan v. Davies (3) and Abdul Gafur v. Albryn (1). This led to considerable inconvenience in the execution of decrees and put the decree-holder in many cases to needless expense. In view of the difficulty thus created, the Legislature has provided in r. 48 of Or. 21 a less expensive and, at the same time, a more effective machinery for the execution of decrees against this class of judgment-debtors. Under the law as it now stands, the salary of a public officer or a railway servant or a servant of a local authority may be attached, whether the judgment-debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree. The inference may therefore be legitimately drawn that the Legislature has provided a special rule in the case of certain judgment-debtors because r. 46 does not entitle the execution Court to attach a debt payable to the judgment-debtor by a non-resident outside the jurisdiction of the Court. The view we take of the principle applicable to this class of cases is also supported by the decision in Moonshee Hossein Ally v. Ashotosh Gangooly (4), which was accepted as good law by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Purbati Charan v. Panchanand (5). These cases support the view that a Court could not issue a prohibitory order, under sec 268 of the Code of 1877, out of its own jurisdiction. We may further add that, as pointed by Mr. Justice Banerjee in Abdul Gafur v. Albyn (1), the contrary opinion indicated in In re Hollick (6) is really an obiter dictum, because there the order was made by the Monghyr Court within whose jurisdiction the office of the disbursing officer was held at Jamalpur. With all respect, therefore, for the opinion of the learned Judges who decided that case, we are unable to accept it as well-founded on principle.

It is worthy of note that the view we have adopted is in harmony with the procedure followed both in England and America. In England it is expressly provided in r. 1 of Or. 45 of the Rules of the Supreme Court that an order for attachment of a debt may be made only when the person indebted to the judgment-debtor of the execution-creditor is within the jurisdiction of the Court. The same rule has been adopted in Ireland where also r. 1 of Or. 45 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, Ireland, 1905, provides that before a garnishee order can be obtained it must be shown that the debtor of the judgment-debtor is within the jurisdiction. A similar view had been taken in Ireland even before the Judicature Act, Ireland, 1877. Thus we find that in Martyn v. Kelly (14) it was accepted as settled law, that a debt could not be attached under the garnishee clauses of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1856, unless the garnishee was within the jurisdiction; and that consequently a registered company whose head office was in London was not within the jurisdiction within the meaning of sec. 63 of the Statute, although it had an agent residing in Ireland and transacting its business there. In the American Courts there has been considerable controversy and divergence of judicial opinion upon the question of the situs of a debt for purposes of garnishment proceedings; but it is well-settled that, in the absence of express statutory provision to the contrary, a non-resident of a State cannot be summoned in garnishment proceedings, whether the principal debtor be a resident or non-resident, at least unless he is in possession of property within the State belonging to the principal debtor, or is indebted to him, and such debt is by the terms of the contract to be liquidated within the State. The principle upon which this result is reached, is lucidly explained by Chief Justice Drake in his classical treatise on the Law of Attachment (7th Ed., sec. 474). It is there pointed out that under the custom of London one cannot be charged as garnishee unless he resides within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Lord Mayor. Tamm v. Williams (15), Crosby v. Hetherington (16) and Day v. Paupierre (17). This doctrine was accepted as well-founded on principle in Zingley

v. Bateman (18) and Nye v. Liscomb (19), where the Court observed as follows: "The summoning of a trustee is like a process in rem. A chose in action is thereby arrested and made to answer the debt of the principal. The person entitled by the contract of the supposed trustee is thus summoned by the arrest of this species of effects. These are, however, to be considered for this purpose as local and as remaining at the residence of the debtor or person entrusted for the principal and his rights in this respect are not to be considered as following the debtor to any place where he may be transiently found, to be there taken at the will of a third person within a jurisdiction where neither the original creditor nor debtor resides." In two later cases, Ray v. Underwood (20) and Hart v. Anthony (21), the same doctrine was affirmed, although the Defendant was resident within the jurisdiction of the Court and the garnishee was non-resident. Similar expositions are adopted by Reno in his treatise on "Non-residents" (sec. 147), and by Waples in his monograph on "Situs of Debt" (sec. 161). The question is elaborately discussed in National Fire Insurance Co. v. Chambers (22), where it is explained that the test to be applied is, whether the judgment-debtor, as creditor, could have sued the garnishee as his debtor in the Court in which the execution proceedings have been commenced. In its essential elements, a garnishment proceeding is a proceeding by the Defendant in the suit against the garnishee, in the name and for the benefit of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff is empowered by law to step into the shoes of the garnishee's creditor and acquire his rights, no more and no less. (See In re General Horticultural Co. (23), where a similar test was suggested by Mr. Justice Chitty). Whatever he could do, the Plaintiff decree-holder, under the statutory novation of garnishment, may do as his assignee and attorney in fact, by operation of law. Wherever the garnishee could be sued by the Defendant for the payment, he may be charged as garnishee on account of it: [Mooney v. Buford (24), German Bank v. American Fire Insurance Co. (25), Burlington Ry. Co. v. Thompson (26), Wyeth v. Lang (27), Cross v. Brown (28), Mobile Ry. Co. v. Burnhill (29) and Neufelder v. German Insurance Co. (30)]. If this be adopted as the true criterion to determine the situs of a debt in garnishment, no difficulty is presented in the solution of the problem (Rood on Garnishment, secs. 241-245). From this point of view, it becomes needless to consider, whether the principle upon which the situs of a debt is determined for purposes of garnishment is necessarily identical with what determines the rights of the parties. Nor is it necessary to examine the validity of the rule of law by which a debt like other personal property is deemed for many purposes (such as transmission and succession) to attach to the person of the owner, that is the creditor. The case before us, in which the garnishees are admittedly out of jurisdiction, and the debts due from them are also payable out of jurisdiction, does not present any real difficultly. The Court cannot, in a case of this description, issue a prohibitory order under r. 46 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908. We may add that the principle which underlies the decisions of this Court in Vulcan Iron Works v. Bishumbhur Prosad (31) and Jumna Dass v. Harcharan Dass (32) and of the House of Lords in Carron Iron Co. v. MacLaren (33) also supports this view. The order of the Court below, therefore, must be taken to have been made without jurisdiction.

There are two other points which require a brief consideration. The Subordinate Judge has held that, as in the case of an attachment before judgment, the writ can be issued in respect of properties outside jurisdiction [Noor Mahamed v. Ibrahim (34), Ram Perlapp v. Madho Rao (35), Amara v. Annamala (36)] the same doctrine ought to be applied to cases of attachment in execution proceedings. But apart from the fact that there is weighty authority against this view, Balaram v. Solano (37), Kedar Nath v. Luchmun (38), Krishnasami v. Engel (39), Raja v. Jankibai (40), Dawood v. Moona (41), Punnu v. Sathappa (42), Siva Swami v. Soleman (43), Kin Kin v. Nga Kyaw (44), there is no analogy between the two classes of cases. In the case of an attachment before judgment, the question turns upon the construction of Or. 38, rr. 5 and 6 read with sec. 136. Besides, in the case of an attachment before judgment, the garnishee cannot be required to pay the debt into Court for the benefit of the Plaintiff. Whether, after attachment has been so obtained before judgment, it can subsequently be made available for the benefit of the successful Plaintiff, is a question by no means free from difficulty, and does not require consideration in the present instance. It has also been argued by the learned Vakil for the decree-holder Opposite party, that as on a previous occasion the garnishees did not take any objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to issue a prohibitory order under r. 46, they are not entitled to urge the objection in the present proceedings. There is no substance in this contention. The previous proceeding proved infructuous under circumstances which we need not explain, and it is open to the garnishees to urge the objection they have taken when a fresh attachment is sought in respect of the debts payable by them to the original judgment-debtor.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule must be made absolute, and the order of the Court below discharged. The Petitioners are entitled to their costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THERE IS ADMITTEDLY NO MORE HARD WORKING or deserving body of public servants than the Munsifs of Bengal and Eastern Bengal. And yet it would be impossible to say at this moment that the conditions under which they serve, both as to pay and as to prospects, have ever been at all commensurate with the quality of the work obtained from them. We have repeatedly drawn attention in these columns to the just grievances of this branch of the Provincial Service and we have from time to time also suggested certain remedies, which we believed would go a great way towards ameliorating their condition. The representations made to Government on behalf of Munsifs, whether in Council or through other channels have, however, so far borne no fruit beyond drawing the assurance (the value of which can only be judged by the result) that the matter is under its consideration.

THE JUDICIAL SERVICE OF THE TWO PROVINCES is under the direct supervision and control of the High Court. We can hardly believe that the Government and the High Court have been led to form different estimates of the value of the services rendered to the State by Munsifs and Subordinate Judges, and we may very well assume that no such difference exists. How is it then that the just grievances of the Munsifs and Subordinate Judges in both Provinces have received such slow recognition from Government? It may be that the very fact that the control of the Governments concerned over this branch of the service is indirect is also the reason why such inadequate attention is paid by them to the conditions of this service.

WE DO NOT INDEED FOR ONE MOMENT SUGGEST that the control of the High Court over the service should in any degree be weakened or that of the Government increased. On the contrary we may reasonably expect that if the new Home Member of the Government of India would but give effect to his ideas concerning the legitimate spheres of work of the executive and the judiciary, a more liberal policy would be followed by the Government of India in this respect. Is it, therefore, too much to ask that larger powers should be given to the High Court for re-organising the service? The High Court should not be merely regarded as a consultative body but should be asked to frame definite schemes for the re-organisation of the service and make such suggestions for the improvement of their pay and prospects as would remove a long-standing grievance amongst this most deserving class of public servants.

ADDITIONAL REASONS IN SUPPORT OF OUR PLEA are furnished by the new factor introduced into this problem by the impending separation of Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa from Bengal.

The number of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges who are now posted within this area is respectively 68 and 20. The number in Bengal and Eastern Bengal on the other hand is 245 and 42 respectively. If a division of cadre in the service should follow upon this re-adjustment of the Provincial units, the prospect of promotion amongst the bulk of the Munsifs who will work in the Presidency of Bengal will be very seriously affected whilst that of the few fortunate members who will happen to be posted in Behar will be unexpectedly improved. This state of things would certainly cause considerable heart-burning amongst the bulk of the members of the same service.

THIS ANOMALY WILL, HOWEVER, SURPLY BE avoided if the judicial services of the two Provinces are kept, for purposes of promotion and transfer, under the High Court as it was before the partition of the Eastern Provinces. So far as the administration of justice is concerned they have even after the partition continued to be subject to the judicial superintendence of the High Court. There can therefore be no serious objection to the High Court continuing to exercise the administrative control which it had been exercising before the partition in regard to transfers and other matters in the two sister Provinces.

THE FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE TWO GOVERNMENTS with regard to the service would admit of easy adjustment. As to the claims of the people of Behar, Orissa and Chota Nagpur to appointments in the Provincial Service, such appointments are, we believe, made even now by the High Court with due regard to such considerations and there are hardly any grounds for supposing that they will be overlooked after Behar will have been separated. A complete separation of cadre in the judicial service is therefore quite unnecessary. Such a separation will not only cause stagnation and discontent in the Bengal branch of the service but may ultimately go to affect conditions of recruitment and result in the deterioration of the service as a whole which would be highly prejudicial to public interests. There may be other possible means of adjusting the prospects of the branches of the service in the two Provinces, but judging from the experiment recently tried in Eastern Bengal and Assam, which was not very successful, we hope no fresh experiments on the same lines would be attempted. It would be far more preferable to revert to the old state of things and to treat the whole of the Provincial Judicial Service as one service and to give equal opportunities to all its members.

AS BOTH BEHAR AND BENGAL WILL NOW HAVE A new constitution this will require no surrender of powers on the part of the Governments that are yet to come into existence. The principle of the separation of the executive and judicial functions are now well recognised and decentralization is to be the future policy of the Government of India. It would therefore satisfy public opinion, relieve the executive of an unnecessary burden and meet with the unqualified appreciation of the members of the Provincial Judicial Service if they were placed under the High Court for purposes of transfer and promotion. The Rs. 500 grade which was created for the Munsifs in Eastern Bengal and Assam should be retained, only the number in this grade should be increased so as to give a fair chance to Munsifs to get promoted to this grade at some part of their career. We would further suggest that the Government should also consistently with its proposed policy of decentralization leave the task of re-organising the service and improving its condition and prospects to the High Court. The Hon'ble Judges are naturally more familiar with all questions of judicial administration and the requirements of the judicial service than the Executive Departments of Government. We are sure the High Court may be trusted to perform this duty with due care and circumspection.

ALTHOUGH THE HON'BLE MR. BHUPENDRA NATH Basu's resolution asking for the appointment of a Committee for enquiring into the Police administration had to be withdrawn, the pronouncement that it drew from Sir Reginald Craddock would be read with considerable interest by all who are interested in the proper administration of criminal justice in the country. It is reassuring to find that the Government realises the responsibility of looking over the doings of the Police and admits, what it has at times been reluctant to do, that there are defects in its administration. Sir Reginald Craddock undoubtedly shows a true appreciation of the situation when he points out that one of the chief reasons of the defects in the Police administration lies in the vast amount of temptation that they are exposed to. The Police had the power, says he, "to interfere with the liberty of people not only in their own society but in a much higher society, not only with the liberty of the poor but also with the liberty of the rich." The Hon'ble the Home Member was not quite as ready to acknowledge that these temptations did have their undesirable effect in very many cases. He quoted figures to show that cases of torture and abuse of powers by the Police were not too many. But the number of cases decided is surely not a safe index to go by. So long as the Police continue to exercise the vast powers vested in them and enjoy the opportunities of abusing them, it is not too much to presume that by far the greater number of such cases never see the light.

UPON THESE FACTS PARTLY ADMITTED BY THE Hon'ble Member himself the case for a committee of enquiry would seem to be well-established. For if there are these extensive chances of abuse of power by the Police it could do no harm to have the matter enquired into by a committee for suggestions as to the best method of providing against risks. No doubt we have had a Police commission not very long ago and it may be claimed that the recommendations of the commission have not yet been given a fair trial. Sir R. Craddock also claimed that there has since then been a steady improvement in the Police and that in view of these facts it would be advisable to wait and watch further developments. But there is one important element in the question which seems to have been overlooked in the whole discussion, viz., that since the Police Commission sat the circumstances have very remarkably changed. The change is not to be measured by the number of years but by the vast difference in the mutual attitude of the people and the Police to one another. The Criminal Investigation Department which has grown since the Commission's report by rapid strides has introduced into the consideration of the problem questions of vast magnitude and complexity. They have now to be dealt with and while we are willing to accept the assurances of the Home Member that the Government will attend to the matter we cannot but feel that before dealing with the matters now raised it would have been well to start with a thorough enquiry by a committee like that suggested by Mr. Basu.

MR. BASU'S RESOLUTION FURTHER RAISED THE question of the amendment of the present law relating to confessions. The matter is of vast importance, and while we are glad to be assured that the matter is engaging the attention of the Government, we certainly would have liked to see the matter discussed with more seriousness than the Hon'ble the Law Member thought fit to bestow on it. The law of confessions is one of the most potent instruments of oppression in the hands of the police and the possibilities of an easy solution of difficulties by securing a confession make the police generally very unwilling to take the more arduous course of detecting crimes and proving facts by evidence. While on the one hand the present law leads to abuse and thus works hardship sometimes on innocent people, it tends to demoralise the police and is a bar to the development of genuine detective abilities in them. From every point of view the law of confession at present would seem to be capable of considerable improvement.

CONFESSIONS IN THEMSELVES CAN VERY SELDOM BE voluntary. The cases in which confession is born of remorse must be very rare indeed. In the case of Queen v. Thomson, L. R. (1893) 2 Q. B. 12 at p. 18, Cave, J., threw a great deal of doubt on confessions generally in words which will bear reproduction. "I would add" says his Lordship "that for my part I always suspect these confessions, which are supposed to be the offspring of penitence and remorse and which nevertheless are repudiated by the prisoner at the trial. It is remarkable that it is of very rare occurrence for evidence of a confession to be given when the proof of the prisoner's guilt is otherwise clear and satisfactory; but when it is not clear and satisfactory the prisoner is not unfrequently alleged to have been seized with the desire born of penitence and remorse to supplement it with a confession—a desire which vanishes as soon as he appears in a Court of justice." If this could be said of confessions in England, though in respect of extrajudicial confessions, with how much greater force would the same observations apply to the case of confessions in cases in India where the supposed penitent has passed through the hands of the police.

CONFESSIONS THEREFORE OUGHT TO BE LOOKED upon with the greatest suspicion, and the greatest care should be taken to ascertain that they are voluntary before a judgment of guilt is based on it. It cannot be denied that this is surely not the attitude with which confessions are looked upon in the majority of the cases. Having regard to the fact that cases of true remorse leading to a confession must be very rare indeed and that in a majority of cases confessions must largely be a matter of inducement or coercion though such inducement or coercion may be practically incapable of proof it may be safely said that administration of justice will not be any way affected for the worse by the scope of confessions being considerably restricted. In what way that restriction may be made so as to effectively take away from the police all reasonable temptation to secure a confession by improper means is a matter for anxious consideration. While conceding that the Government is anxious to amend the law along right lines we are disposed to think that they should rather have invited than opposed the proposal of Mr. Basu to assist them in their work by the recommendations of the committee.

WE ARE NOT PARTICULARLY STRUCK BY THE justice or the substance of the Hon'ble Mr. Ali Imam's objections to such a committee. The Hon'ble gentleman seems to be under the impression that to appoint a committee for the purpose would be to abdicate the functions of the Council. On that principle every committee of the Council may be dispensed with. The committee was not to have had any legislative function; its sole work would be to help the Legislature with suggestions. We fail to see how such a reasonable suggestion should have raised up before the mind of the Law Member the spectre of abdication.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE EDGE, IN GIVING HIS DECISION in a case tried before him at the Clerkenwell County Court on 15th December last, said:—

The increase of perjury in the County Court is so alarming that public attention ought to be directed to it. It is a pressing demand. I am saying it as a retiring Judge, after being on the Bench for 23 years, that it is almost impossible to do justice between parties owing to the prevalence of false swearing. It really is shocking. It has been a matter which has placed a very great anxiety upon Judges who have to try cases, and endeavour to do what is right and just between parties. False swearing is increasing in a way that I think the Legislature ought to pay attention to at once. I do not think any one would oppose that greater powers should be placed in the hands of Judges for checking perjury.

AMONGST THE NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS published in this issue will be found some interesting instances of what might constitute contempt of Court. The parties to any proceedings are not at liberty to publish or circulate even amongst friends and relations any note of the proceedings of matters heard in camera. They may communicate to them the result of the hearing but if they circulate any account of the proceedings they are liable to be punished for contempt. This view of the law if enforced except when absolutely necessary for safeguarding public morals may go hard with people who have to clear their character before friends and relations.

THE OTHER CASE OF CONTEMPT, Barnett v. Shaw, (post, p. 98) though equally unusual, will certainly be found re-assuring by the profession. It is not every day that one finds one's opponent in a forensic fight actually taking to the argumentum ad baculum on turning one's back on the Court. But now that we find women up in arms against mankind, it is nothing unusual to find men cultivating feminine forms of chastisement. But the English Courts of justice are apparently alarmed at this prospective inversion of the more amiable qualities of men and women. So where a solicitor threatened to scratch his brother's eyes when the Court had risen, the Court held that any such mode of settlement of their differences out of Court would constitute a grave contempt of His Majesty's Court.

BANKING AND CURRENCY. By Ernest Sykes, B. A. (Oxen), Lecturer on Banking and Currency to the London Chamber of Commerce. Third edition. By Butterworth & Co.; Bell Yard, Temple Bar, London and 8½, Hastings Street, Calcutta. Price Rs. 1-14 nett.

We welcome a new edition of this work. Although this book is intended for students offering themselves for the examinations held by the London Institute of Banking and the London Chamber of Commerce yet it would amply repay legal practitioners the trouble of glancing through this book, especially, the chapters dealing with "The Functions of a Banker," "The Relations of Banker to Customer," "Endorsements," "Revocation of the Customer's Authority," "Bankers and Borrowers." These chapters contain much useful information which solicitors and other lawyers cannot afford to ignore in their daily business dealings either on their own account or that of their client's. For instance we find it stated at p. 147 that "if a cheque is drawn payable to trustees the paying banker requires all trustees to join in endorsing and refuses to accept a per pro endorsement or the endorsement of a single trustee on behalf of the co-trustees." "In the case of executors, however, * * * * an endorsement by a single executor on behalf of the body of the executors is regular and valid." In this edition we find a chapter added on the "Central Gold Reserve." The author has very clearly explained in this chapter the object of the Reserve and also how without the co-operation of the other banks it is impossible for the Bank of England either to regulate the rate of interest or to meet any crisis in the money market brought about either by economic or political crisis of any great magnitude.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Weldon v. The Times Book Company, "Id." Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND FARWELL. 15th December 1911.

Bookseller or librarian—Is it their duty to read books to see if they contain libellous matter before circulation—Liability considered.

This was an appeal in an action in which the Appellant sued the Respondents for damages for alleged libel. The Plaintiff's case was that the Respondents had in their circulating library a copy of a book on Gounod and six copies of another biography which contained libellous statements concerning her. The Court below found that the Defendants were not liable. The Plaintiff's appeal was dismissed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS remarked—

Both books were published in the French language in Paris, and they contained statements which he would assume were clearly libellous against Mrs. Weldon. Each of these books belonged to a series of books on celebrated musicians, and the gentlemen whose names appeared as authors of the books were French scholars of the highest literary distinction, while the publishers in Paris were in the first rank and not likely to publish and distribute doubtful works.

It was said boldly that the Respondents, who were not publishers in the ordinary sense but distributors only, were liable in damages because they had distributed and sold these books, and this although it was admitted that they did not know of anything libellous contained in the books, and although the jury had found that it was not through their own negligence that they did not know, and that the books were not of such a character as to put them on inquiry. The matter had been put to the jury by Mr. Justice Ridley with perfect propriety, but as there had been some argument on the point he would state what he understood the law to be.

It was quite impossible that distributing agents such as the Respondents should be expected to read every book they had. There were some books as to which there might be a duty on the Respondents or other distributing agents to examine them carefully because of their titles or the recognized propensity of their authors to scatter libels abroad. Beyond that the matter could not go. It was impossible to say there was a liability to examine the contents of books like the two in question, which were by authors of high character and related to a distinguished musician who had been dead for over a quarter of a century. There was a book with which the Court was very familiar called "Farwell on Powers." He thought the author was a respectable man, and he had no reason to suspect that he would commit a libel on any one. In his opinion there was no liability on persons selling that book to read it from cover to cover in order to see whether it contained a libel on Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton or himself. That was not an unfair analogy to the present case.

He repudiated the suggestion that there was any liability upon the Respondents to do so in the case of these two books. The principles governing the question had been laid down in Emmens v. Pottle (1885, 16 Q. B. D. 354). There Lord Esher said :—

"The question does not depend on any statute, but on the common law, and, in my opinion, any proposition the result of which would be to show that the common law of England is wholly unreasonable and unjust cannot be part of the common law of England." And Lord Justice Bowen said :—"The jury have found as a fact that the Defendants were innocent carriers of that which they did not know contained libellous matter, and which they had no reason to suppose was likely to contain libellous matter. A newspaper is not like a fire; a man may carry it about without being bound to suppose that it is likely to do an injury. It seems to me that the Defendants are no more liable than any other innocent carrier of an article which he has no reason to suppose likely to be dangerous. But I by no means intend to say that the vendor of a newspaper will not be responsible for a libel contained in it if he knows, or ought to know, that the paper is one which is likely to contain a libel."

Messrs. Smith, K. C., and Hills for the Respondents.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Carl Rosa Opera Company, "Ld." v. Britl. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, BUCKLEY AND KENNEDY. 8th December 1911.

Injunction—Negative restrictive covenant determined with the contract of service.

This was Plaintiff's appeal from an order refusing interlocutory injunction. The Defendant agreed to serve the Plaintiff as principal second violin for a season (with right to renew) and not to perform elsewhere without the Plaintiff's permission. The Plaintiffs gave notice to renew for another season but Defendant gave notice to leave and it was alleged that the Defendant had already entered into an agreement with another Company. The Plaintiffs filed up his place.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal. In the Course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said :—

When two parties had once entered into a contract, it required both parties to bring the contract to an end. If one party expressed the intention to repudiate the contract, the other party might, if he chose, agree that it should be determined, but the contract did not come to an end in consequence of the repudiation by one party unless the other party agreed to its termination.

He did not think this agreement to determine need be expressed in words; it might be expressed by act, and on the evidence before the Court it seemed to him to be clear that the repudiation of this contract of service by the Defendant was accepted by the Plaintiffs, who had engaged another principal second violin. When the Defendant's actual service came to an end, his membership of the Company came to an end, and at the same time the Plaintiffs' right to prevent his playing elsewhere came to an end.

Mr. Dodd for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Mathews for the Respondent.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Taylor v. Wilson. Before THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND AND JUSTICES HAMILTON AND BANKES. 30th November 1911.

Betting Act, 1853—Order convicting a visitor to an Inn for betting, if admissible against Inn-keeper to show that his premises used for betting—Estoppel.

The Appellant who was an innkeeper was charged with allowing his premises to be used for betting in contravention of the Betting Act, 1853. At the trial the prosecutor tendered in evidence against the accused an order convicting another a third person of unlawfully using the said premises for betting. The Appellant objected to the admissibility of the conviction of a third person as evidence, but the Magistrates overruled the objection. The Appellant sought to show that the said premises were not used for betting, and that the conviction of the third person was wrong. The Magistrates however found the Appellant guilty and stated a case for the opinion of the High Court. The learned Judges allowed the appeal and quashed the conviction. In the course of his judgment

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said:—

It was quite plain that Whalley's conviction was not evidence against this Appellant. The Justices frankly said that they held that Whalley's conviction was evidence of betting having taken place, and that the Appellant could not in view of that seek to show that no betting had taken place on the premises on April 29. That amounted to this, that the Appellant was estopped by the Whalley conviction from denying that there had been betting on the premises. The suggestion that because Justices in another case upon what might be other evidence had come to the conclusion that betting had taken place, the same fact ought to be considered to be thereby proved against the present Appellant, was absolutely untenable.

Mr. G. Lord for the Appellant.

Mr. Riby for the Respondent.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Barnett v. Shaw. Before MR. JUSTICE DARLING.

Contempt of Court—Plaintiff's assault upon the Defendant's Solicitor after adjournment.

In the course of the trial of the above suit an incident occurred which was brought to the notice of the Court. After the Court had risen for the adjournment the Plaintiff met the Defendant's solicitor and taking him by the arm abused him and said—"I will scratch your eyes out. I will strike you."

The learned JUDGE held that what took place amounted to a contempt of Court. He observed:—

Mr. Barnett was himself a solicitor, and the conduct complained of affected another solicitor, who was attending Court in pursuance of his duty to his client. As Lord Bowen said in In re Johnson (20 Q. B. D., at p. 74), "The principle is that those who have duties to discharge in a Court of Justice are protected by the law and shielded on their way to the discharge of such duties, while discharging them, and on their return therefrom, in order that such persons may safely have resort to Courts of Justice." The reasoning of that case applied to a case where a solicitor, who was an officer of the Court, was concerned. There was no doubt therefore, that Mr. Barnett had been guilty of a grave contempt, not of his Lordship personally but of the Court of King's Bench.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.—Scott v. Scott. Before MR. JUSTICE BARGRAVE DEANE. 4th December 1911.

This was a motion to commit the opposite party and her solicitors for contempt of Court. There was a petition for nullity that was tried in camera. The Petitioner and the Opposite Party were parties to it. After the decision of the case the Opposite Party secured transcripts of the official shorthand writer's notes of evidence through her solicitors, and communicated them to some of her friends. The Petitioner submitted that it was contempt of Court. It was urged on behalf of the Opposite Party that she was entitled to tell her friends and relations what had passed—what the evidence was—what the truth was—and that it was not publication which alone was forbidden. Reliance was placed on "The Laws of England, Vol. 16 pp. 464-5.

The learned Judge held that it was contempt. He said that the object of trying cases in camera was to protect both parties; necessarily the details in such cases were of a very private character and all that the nearest relations had a right to know was what was the result of the trial. In certain cases there was no fault on either side. In such circumstances it was a gross contempt of Court to publish an account of anything done in Chambers. What had been done in the present case had been done in ignorance.

It must be clearly understood in future that the object of trying these unhappy cases in camera that they should be kept private.

Mr. Bayford for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Barnard, R. C., and Willis for the Opposite Party.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter).

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REV. NOS. 1521 AND 1522 OF 1911. HEM CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS, 2nd Party, Petitioners v. RAM CHANDRA PAL, 1st Party, Opposite Party. 9th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145—Jurisdiction, deciding without hearing a party.

There were two proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. C., between the parties, one of them out of which Rule No. 1521 arose the case had been completed and order was made by the Magistrate though no one appeared on behalf of the second party and in the other proceeding out of which Rule No. 1522 arose, before the Magistrate had delivered his final order, the second party had put in certain petitions in the nature of written statements and his pleader wanted to be heard by the Court with regard to his case, the Magistrate did not entertain the petitions nor heard the pleader but passed his final decision then and there.

Their Lordships observed:—

“The first case had been completed and the order delivered before any one appeared on behalf of the second party. The second party were entirely unrepresented at that hearing and must be taken that they were alone to blame for that and that the Magistrate had full jurisdiction to decide that case upon the documents and evidence produced by the first party. . . . But in the second case it was obviously possible for the Magistrate to take into consideration these written statements and whatever the learned pleader might have to urge. There was no occasion for him to grant any adjournment and he had jurisdiction to decide the matter summarily at that hearing. But when before he had decided it it became possible to hear the second party, he acted without jurisdiction in declining to hear them.”

Babu Sasat Chandra Ray Chowdhury for the Petitioners.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Opposite party.

Rule No. 1522 made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REV. No. 1061 OF 1911. KALIM MIA AND ANOTHER, Petitioners v. KADER ALI, Opposite Party. 15th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 419 and 421—Dismissing the appeal without hearing the Appellant.

This Rule was issued for the re-hearing of an appeal on the ground that the provisions of sec. 421, Cr. P. C., that no appeal presented under sec. 419 should be dismissed unless the Appellant or his pleader has had reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, were not complied with.

Their Lordships in making the Rule absolute observed:—

“No one appears to show cause and no explanation is offered upon this Rule. It must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. The appeal must be re-heard and the Appellants given an opportunity of having their pleader brought in to argue the case.”

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Petitioners.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REVISION No. 69 OF 1912. ABINASH CHANDRA SINGH, 1st Party, Petitioner v. MADAN GOPAL SEIT, 2nd Party, Opposite Party. 16th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 147—Omission to state the source of information in the proceeding—Easement, right of, to be proved.

This Rule was issued on the grounds (1) that the source of information was not disclosed in the proceedings, (2) that it was not found in what way the right of easement had been acquired. (3) That there was no finding that the right, if any, had been exercised within 3 months of the date of the proceeding.

On the first ground, their Lordships held on the authority of Rulings in I. L. R. 32 Cal. 771 and 15 C. W. N. 271, that the proceeding must show the ground of the Magistrate being satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. If a police report or other written information is relied upon, that report or information must be referred to in the proceeding. If the Magistrate acts on oral information, he must himself set out the substance of that information in writing in the proceeding. This matter goes directly to the jurisdiction and cannot be cured by any reference to any information subsequently had. On the second ground their Lordships observed that the Magistrate had to decide not merely the question of user and but the question of right and to find that such right existed. As the Magistrate confined his attention to the question of user, he omitted to exercise jurisdiction as to the existence of the right.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Devendra Narain Bhuttacherjee for the Petitioners.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145—Whether the possession of a person as agent could be declared.

One of the questions for decision in the Rule was whether the Magistrate acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction in declaring possession in favour of a person as agent.

Their Lordships observed :—

"The case of Brown v. Prithi Roy (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 423) is clear authority for the proposition that a person who is in possession of land merely as manager for the actual proprietor could not be made a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 in the presence of the actual proprietors. . . . that he was in possession as agent of the first party would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court."

Damages—Contributory negligence.

It was conceded that the Railway Company was guilty of negligence in leaving the gates of the level crossing open when the accident took place. The lower Appellate Court found that the accident was not brought about solely by Plaintiff's want of caution. It also found that the proximate cause of the accident was the running of the train against the carriage of the Plaintiff and not the running of the carriage across the line, there being obstruction at the time it was passing; and that the last opportunity of avoiding the accident was with the Defendant Company.

Held—That the findings were sufficient to negative such contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff as would disentitle him to damages.

DEBI MANGAL

PROSAD SINGH,

Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

MAHADEO PRASAD

SINGH and others,

Defendants,

Respondents.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Mother's share upon partition, if stridhan—Succession—Stridhan, two senses of.

The share obtained by a Hindu mother upon partition of ancestral property amongst her sons, under the Mitakshara law, does not become her stridhan property descendible to her stridhan heirs. Such share stands on the same footing as property obtained by a woman by inheritance.

CHHIDDU v. NAUBAT (6) overruled.

DEBI MANGAL v. MAHADEO PRASAD (20) reversed.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Allahabad, dated the 20th December 1909, which affirmed the judgment and decree, dated the 14th December 1907, of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur. Both Courts dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was whether immovable property obtained by a Hindu widow on partition of the joint family property among her sons and grandson is her stridhan property and descends as such to her own heirs.

One Gaya Parshad and his three sons formed a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. He died leaving a widow, Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari, and three sons of whom Sheo Pratap Singh died in 1889, leaving a widow and his son, the Plaintiff-Appellant.

In 1894 this Plaintiff, under the guardianship of his mother, instituted a suit for partition of the joint family property. He claimed a one-third share. The said Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari (who was one of the Defendants to the suit) pleaded that the Plaintiff's share was only one-fourth, inasmuch as she too was entitled to a share equally with her sons and grandson. The Court allowed her claim and she accordingly remained in possession of a one-fourth share of the family property during her life.

The said Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari died on the 19th November, 1900. On her death her surviving sons, the Defendants-Respondents, took possession of the entire property, without recognizing the Appellant's title to any portion of it.

The Plaintiff therefore instituted the present suit on the 1st June, 1907, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur. He stated the facts set forth above, and claimed possession of a one-third share of the said property with mesne profits and costs. The Defendants filed their written statements and their main plea was that the property in suit constituted the stridhan of the deceased lady, and in consequence Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 succeeded to it to the exclusion of the Plaintiff.

The learned Subordinate Judge fixed the following issues:—

(1) Whether the property Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari got under the partition decree was her own stridhan or she had only a life-interest in it?

(2) Is the Plaintiff the legal heir of Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari, and has he any interest in the property left by her as against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2?

(6) I. L. R. 24 All. 67 (1901).

(20) I. L. R. 32 All. 253 (1909).

DERI MANGAL PRASAD SINGH v. MAHADEO PRASAD SINGH.

After considering the evidence produced by the parties, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment on the 14th December, 1907. He decided both issues in favour of the Defendants. He held that the said property was stridhan, and that the sons of the said Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari (deceased) succeeded to it as her heirs to the exclusion of the Plaintiff. He accordingly passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

The Plaintiff thereupon appealed against the said decree to the High Court at Allahabad, which delivered its judgment* on the 20th December, 1909. The learned Judges of the said High Court (Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J.) agreed with the view of the Court below, and accordingly made a decree dismissing the appeal with costs.

They held that the appeal was concluded by the decision in the case of Chiddu v. Naubat (6). In the course of their judgment, they said—

"The contention of the learned advocate for the Plaintiff-Appellant in that under a recent ruling of the Privy Council we must hold that the decision in the case of Chhiddu v. Naubat (6), to which we have referred must be treated as overruled. This was a decision of a Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party. It was to the effect that according to the Mitakshara the share which the mother in a joint Hindu family obtains after the death of the father on partition of the joint family property between the mother and the sons, becomes the mother's stridhan which devolves on her death upon her own heirs and not upon the heirs of her husband. The question in the case appears to have been carefully considered and the ruling has been followed in several later cases including the case of Gambhir Singh v. Makraddhuf (7). In this last-mentioned case it was contended that having regard to the ruling of the Privy Council in Sheo Shhankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1), the rulings of this Court must be deemed to be of no authority. The ruling in question is not a ruling upon the point which is now before the Court.

"What their Lordships in that case held was that under the Hindu Law of the Benares School property which a woman has obtained by inheritance from a female is not her stridhan in such a sense, that on her death it passes to her stridhan heirs in the female line to the exclusion of males. This is not the question which is before us. Some of the considerations which arose in that case may have a bearing upon the point before us. The question is by no means free from difficulty as has been pointed out in the case of Chhiddu v. Naubat (6). We think that we ought to abide by that decision unless and until it is reversed by their Lordships of the Privy Council."

Hence this appeal.

Sir E. Richards, K. C. (with him Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé) for the Appellant.—I submit that immoveable property received by a Hindu widow on partition of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara is not her stridhan property so called. Instead of the property passing on her death to her own heirs it reverts to her husband's heirs. Stridhan is defined in Mitakshara, Chap. 2, sec. 11, para. 1. The commentator, Vijnanesvara, there gives the definition of Yajñawalkya. The words "as also any other" are translation of the original आदि (adi). Strictly speaking आदि (adi) means "and the like"—ejusdem generis. It only refers to the property of the same nature as the foregoing, that is, to special gifts made to a woman in the six-fold ways laid down by Manu, Narada and Yajñawalkya. Mayne's Hindu Law (7th Edn.), pp. 822, 823 and 824. The extended meaning which Vijnanesvara gives to stridhan in Mitakshara, Chap. 2, sec. 11, para. 2 is an innovation, and is not borne out by Manu and other text-writers. In any case he does not use the word in a technical sense as woman's peculium. Vide, para. 3. This view is supported by judicial decisions. So far as property acquired by a woman by inheritance is concerned it is now finally settled by this Board that it is not her stridhan. These sections of the Mitakshara were considered and stridhan was construed in its limited and technical sense. Bhugwandeem v. Myna Bae (3), Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram (2), Chotay Lall v. Chunno Lall (4), Mutta Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga Tevar (8), Sheo Shhankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1), Lal Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank (5). Same considerations would equally apply to property acquired by partition. In a joint family a woman has no right to a specific share of the family property. On the death of her husband she inherits his separate property for her life only. If she has a son she does not succeed at all. In all these cases she gets a limited estate. It is unreasonable to hold that she would get an absolute estate if the family property were divided by the sons. The widow of a sonless man takes a limited estate, why should she take an absolute estate if she has a son. Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 837. In reality the share allotted to the mother on partition is by way of provision for her maintenance only. Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 703. Beni Parshad v. Puran Chand (9). Reference was also made to Vyavastha Chandrika, Vol. 2, p. 493 and Vyavahara Mayukha, pp. 93 and 97. The High Court rely on their previous decision in Chhiddu v. Naubat (6) which was based on Mitakshara, Chap. 1, sec. 6, para. 2. That section only deals with division of property on the birth of a posthumous son. It ought to be read with Mitakshara, Chap. 1, sec. 3, para. 8. Stridhan in these sections must mean her peculium.

Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé on the same side.—The Mitakshara as we find it apparently treats the woman owner of property in the same way as man. "An owner is by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure or finding," Chap. 1, sec. 1, para. 12. Vijnanesvara draws the same conclusion in Chap. 2, sec. 1. For the present case property acquired by "seizure or finding" need not be considered for it relates to such moveable things as water, grass, wood and hidden treasure and the like. But the British Courts have not administered the law contained in the existing texts of the Mitakshara. In Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram (2), it was said at p. 173 "we have not the whole Mitakshara. . . . The widow's disabilities, which depend in a great measure upon the notions which the Hindu legislators entertained of the infirmity and necessary dependence of the sex may be dealt with in other parts of the work. It is certain that upon other subjects the Mitakshara cites with approbation Manu, Katyayana, Narada and others upon whose dicta the limitation of the widow's enjoyment of her husband's estate, and of her power over it, chiefly depends." That decision was based mainly on the fundamental principles of the Hindu Law, and not on the existing texts of the Mitakshara. In fact it was opposed to the letter of the texts. It decided that immoveable property acquired by a widow (1) by inheritance, and (2) by purchase did not become her stridhan. It is settled law now that all immoveable property purchased by a woman is not necessarily her stridhan. It was too late now to go back to the existing texts of the Mitakshara and to hold, as the High Court have done, that property acquired by partition is stridhan simply because the Mitakshara says so. The existing texts of the Mitakshara are consistent with one another. The decisions of the British Courts ought also to be consistent in principle. The share allotted on partition is by way of a temporary provision for maintenance only and reverts on her death to the husband's heirs. He cited Buldeo Singh v. Mahabeer Singh (11), Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Jadoo Nath Tewaree (12), Laljeet Singh v. Raj Coomar (13), Hemangini v. Kedar Nath (14).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., Mr. Ross and Mr. A. P. Sen for the Respondents.

Mr. L. DeGruyther.—The law to be administered in the present case is the law of the Mitakshara. The Smritis of Manu and Yajñawalkya were written before 200, A. D.; Mitakshara in 1200, A. D., and the Smriti Chandrika, Vyavahara Mayukha and the Dayabhaga long after the Mitakshara, Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 40. We have nothing to do with the other systems of Hindu Law or with the texts of Manu and Yajñawalkya. It has been laid down by this Board that the Courts have to administer the law as contained in the Mitakshara and not to deduce new propositions of law from doctrines and other a priori reasoning. We must confine ourselves to what we find in the Mitakshara. The definition of stridhan in Mitakshara is unmistakably clear. The Mitakshara expressly negatives the theory that the share given on partition is given for maintenance only. Chap. 2, sec. 1, paras. 32 and 33. The Mitakshara recognizes no distinction between a partition made in father's life-time and that made after his death. In both cases a mother takes "an equal share." Further, the Mitakshara provides in express terms "he obtains after his parents both their portions: his mother's portion however only if there be no daughter." Chap. 1, sec. 6, para. 2. The authority of the Mitakshara has not been cut down by the decision in Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram (2). It was based on practice and judicial decisions. The case of Lal Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank (5) upheld only "the doctrine of reverter." There was no reason for extending the principles applicable to cases of inheritance to a case of partition. Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachelum Chetti (15). Property acquired by purchase or by seizure or by finding was a woman's own property. A Hindu widow can obtain absolute title to property by her adverse possession. Some commentators agree with our view. Jolly : Tagore Law Lecture, pp. 242, 247, Sir G. D. Banerjee, Tagore Law Lecture, 1878 (1896), pp. 314, 320. Chap. I, sec. 7, paras. 1 and 2 show that if no separate property were given to her she would get an equal share. In other words the share given on partition takes the place of separate property. In any case even if she receives the share in lieu of her right of maintenance she gets an absolute estate. It is for the other side to show that the Court decreed a limited estate only in her favour. Maintenance might be the ground of her absolute right. Musammat Doorga v. Musammat Tejoo (16), Nellaikumar v. Marakathammal (17), Bhagirthibai v. Kathnujirav (18). The cases decided under the Dayabhaga law do not help the Appellant. The passages relied upon in Sheo Dyal v. Jadoo Nath (12), Lalljeet Singh v. Raj Coomar Singh (13) were obiter dicta. Phear, J., left the point undecided in Mahabeer Parshad v. Ramyad Singh (19), Hemangini v. Kedar Nath (14), the dictum of Sir R. Couch was obiter. The point decided was quite different. The text relied upon by the High Court seems to have been overlooked by Mr. Mayne.

Mr. Ross followed on the same side.—He submitted that Sir S. Subrahmaniam Ayyar quoted Chhiddu v. Naubat (6) with approval in Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachelum Chetti (15), and pointed out that the decision of the High Court was based upon a specific text of the Mitakshara.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBSON.—The question to be determined in this case is whether immoveable property, obtained by a Hindu widow on partition of the joint family property under the Mitakshara law, is part of her stridhan in the narrow sense of that word, indicating her separate property or peculium which passes on her death to her own heirs; or is merely part of her stridhan in the wider sense in which the word is sometimes used, as indicating any property in which she may have some right of proprietorship.

The property in question originally belonged to one Gaya Parshad who with his three sons formed a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. He died leaving three sons and a widow, Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari. One of his sons, Sheo Partap Singh, died in 1889, leaving a widow and his son, the Plaintiff-Appellant. In 1894, a partition of the joint family property took place at the suit of the Plaintiff under the guardianship of his mother, and in that suit the Court apportioned one-fourth share of the family property to Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari who remained in possession thereof until her death on the 19th November 1900.

The Plaintiff claims possession of one-third of the property thus held by her, on the ground that it passed, under the Mitakshara law, to the heirs of her husband, of whom he is one.

The first two Defendants-Respondents are the two surviving sons of Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari, and their contention is that the property acquired by their mother on the said partition was her stridhan or peculium so as to descend to her heirs.

This raised the further question as to whether the Plaintiff, whose father had predeceased Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari, was one of her heirs or was excluded from her inheritance by her surviving sons. The Subordinate Judge decided both these issues in favour of the Defendants, and that judgment was affirmed by the High Court at Allahabad.

The sections of the Mitakshara dealing with the property of a woman have given rise to much controversy and some conflict of decisions. In Chap. 2, sec. 11, para. 1, of that treatise, Vijnanesvara sets forth Yajnyawalkya's classification or description of woman's property as follows:—

"What was given to a woman by the father, the mother, the husband, or a brother, or received by her at the nuptial fire, or presented to her on her husband's marriage to another wife, as also any other [separate acquisition] is denominated a woman's property."

In para. 2 of the same section, Vijnanesvara repeats in substance the six-fold classification given in para. 1, and then in place of the general words "as also any other" he substitutes a further enumeration as follows:—

"And also property which she may have acquired by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure, or finding, are denominated by Menu and the rest, 'woman's property.'"

This reference to Menu is not borne out by the quotation from that authority given in para. 4 (sec. 11). Menu is there cited as making the same classification of the different kinds of "woman's property" as that above given by Yajnyawalkya, and saying that they "are denominated the six-fold property of a woman."

This six-fold enumeration of the sources of a "woman's property," as given by Yajnyawalkya and Menu, corresponds with the technical or narrow signification of stridhan indicating property which is under her absolute control during life and on her death is descendible to her heirs. Do the same characteristics attach to a woman's property derived from the additional sources specified by Vijnanesvara, viz., inheritance, partition, &c.? The words "any other" with which Yajnyawalkya concluded his enumeration are a translation of the word "adi" or "adya," which, according to Mr. Mayne (Hindu Law, 7th Ed. p. 823) means "and the like." In that view, Yajnyawalkya meant to limit his description of "woman's property," or stridhan, to property acquired in any of the six modes he had just specified, or in any other manner ejusdem generis with those modes. Vijnanesvara's additional enumeration goes beyond that. When read with Yajnyawalkya's description, it constitutes a practically complete statement of the means by which a woman can acquire property rights. Dealing with this extended signification of the term "woman's property" Vijnanesvara says in para. 3 of the same section that it "conforms in its import with its etymology and is not technical." In paras. 2, 3 and 4, therefore, he is speaking of stridhan in the wider sense. In paras. 5, 6 and 7, Vijnanesvara cites the description of "woman's property" given by Katyayana, which does not expressly profess to be exhaustive, but which closely approximates in character to that given by Yajnyawalkya and Menu, and does not include any of the heads (inheritance, partition, &c.) added to the list by Vijnanesvara in para. 2. Then comes para. 8, which gives rise to the difficulty. It runs thus :—"A woman's property has been thus described. The author next propounds the distribution of it. 'Her kinsmen take it if she die without issue.'"

The rule of devolution prescribed by the author (Yajnyawalkya), to whom Vijnanesvara refers, was, so far as that author himself was concerned, no doubt intended to apply only to stridhan in the narrow signification defined in para. 1, and not to the enumeration as expanded by the commentator in the concluding words of para. 2. It is, indeed, possible to read para. 8 as applying only to the more limited enumeration of Yajnyawalkya. When Vijnanesvara says "a woman's property has been thus described," he may have been referring to the description given by his author and by Katyayana, and have intended to confine Yajnyawalkya's rule of devolution to Yajnyawalkya's classification. His language, however, in para. 8, when read with what he says in paras. 2, 3 and 4, is open to the meaning that a woman's property, of whatsoever kind, descends always to her own heirs. It is difficult to adopt the latter construction in view of the undoubted fact that, as Sir Arthur Wilson said in delivering the judgment of their Lordships' Board in Sheo Shhankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1), "most of the old commentators recognise, with regard to the property of a woman, whether called stridhan or by any other name, that there may be room for differences in its line of descent according to the mode of its acquisition."

So far as a woman's acquisition of property by inheritance is concerned the matter is now clearly concluded by authority, and a consideration of the cases decided with regard to that item in Vijnanesvara's additional enumeration will facilitate the task of dealing with the item of "partition" in the same enumeration.

In the case of Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram (2), it was contended that, in the provinces governed by the Mitakshara, the widow's estate in her husband's property was absolute, and that she had full power to dispose of it. In support of that argument reliance was placed on the concluding words of the second paragraph of sec. 11, Chap. 2 of the Mitakshara above dealt with, viz., "also property which she may have acquired by inheritance." Their Lordships, however, rejected the view that those words included such property as part of a woman's stridhan so as to make it descendible to her heirs. They quoted, with approval, the proposition laid down by Sir William Macnaghten in his "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law," Vol. 1, p. 38, where he says :—

"In the Mitakshara, whatever a woman may have acquired, whether by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure, or finding, is denominated woman's property, but it does not constitute her peculium."

It was therefore held that a widow has no power of alienating any immoveable property which she has inherited from her husband, and that, on her death, such property will pass to the next heirs of her deceased husband. Similarly, in Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bae (3), it was held that, by the Hindu law prevailing in Benares (the Western School), no part of the husband's estate, moveable or immoveable, forms portion of his widow's stridhan, and she has no power to alienate the estate inherited from her husband, to the prejudice of his heirs, which, at her death, devolves on them. Sir James Colville, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships' Board, says: "Both the Vivada Chintamani and the Mayukha confine stridhan within the definitions of Menu and Katyayana. They exclude property inherited, and the other acquisitions which are comprehended in the last clause of the paragraph in the Mitakshara, but are excluded by Sir William Macnaghten."

This observation puts partition on the same footing as inheritance, so far as the rights of a widow are concerned.

In Chotay Lall v. Chunno Lall (4), it was held that, under the law of the Mitakshara, a daughter's estate inherited from the father is a limited and restricted estate only and not stridhan, so that upon her death the next heirs of the father succeed thereto.

The cases on the question of a woman's inherited property came under review by their Lordships' Board in Sheo Shhankar Lal v. Debi Sahai (1) before referred to and Lal Sheo Pertab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank (5). The construction of the Mitakshara was again considered, and it was held that, under the Hindu law of the Benares school, property which a woman has taken by inheritance from a female is not her stridhan in such sense that on her death it passes to her stridhan heirs in the female line to the exclusion of males.

Each of these authorities is inconsistent with the wide scope which the Respondents, on their construction of the Mitakshara, seek to give to the definition of stridhan.

The question now arises whether there is any substantial difference in principle between a woman's property acquired by inheritance and that acquired by partition. It is a question attended with some difficulties, especially in the construction of the Mitakshara, whatever view of it may be taken. While a family remains joint a woman has no right under the Mitakshara to a specific share of the family estate. She is only entitled to maintenance, or in due course to her customary inheritance, and if a partition takes place a mother gets a share equal to that of a son. If the share given to a widow on partition is given to her as a substitute for that to which she would be entitled upon inheritance, then, according to the foregoing authorities, it would seem reasonable that it should follow the same rule of descent and revert on her death to her husband's heirs. If, on the other hand, it is given to her by way of provision for her maintenance, it seems equally reasonable that when the necessity for her maintenance has ceased the property should revert to the estate from which it was taken. Of course, the members of a joint family effecting a partition may agree that a portion of the property shall be transferred to the widow by way of absolute gift, as part of her stridhan, so as to constitute a provision for her stridhan heirs; but, in the absence of any such intention, their Lordships do not feel justified in putting property acquired by a widow, on a partition of the joint estate, upon a footing different from that on which property coming to her by way of inheritance has been placed. The contrary view was taken by the High Court at Allahabad in Chhidu v. Naubat (6). The learned Judges in that case laid great stress upon Chap. I, Sec. VI., para. 2, of the Mitakshara. Vijnanesvara there deals with the rights of a son born after the partition, and says that on the demise of his parents he obtains both their portions,—

"His mother's portion, however, only if there be no daughter, for it is declared that 'Daughters share the residue of their mother's property after payment of her debts.'"

Again Chap. I., sec. III., para. 8, runs as follows.—

"It has been declared that sons may part the effects after the death of their father and mother. The author states an exception in regard to the mother's separate property: 'The daughters share the residue of their mother's property, after payment of her debts.'"

This paragraph refers only to the mother's separate property or peculium whatever that may be. But it is by no means certain that either in that paragraph or in sec. VI., para. 2, the property coming to her by way of partition is necessarily included in that peculium.

That there is a distinction in the rules of descent between different kinds of a woman's property, according to the mode in which it has been acquired, is beyond question, but the Mitakshara does not always discriminate between these different kinds of property, and in the doubt that arises as to its precise intent and construction in reference to this point, the principle upon which the cases relating to inheritance have been decided appears to be a safe guide in dealing also with cases of partition.

In this view, it is unnecessary to discuss the second question as to whether the Plaintiff was entitled to share in his grandmother's estate as one of her heirs equally with his uncles.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; the decrees of the Courts below set aside with costs; and in lieu thereof a decree made in favour of the Appellant for the one-third of the share with mesne profits which came to Dulhan Sahibzad Kunwari on partition and was held by her.

Indian Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872), secs. 41 and 46—Marriage between a Christian and a Jewess divorced according to Jewish Law—Registrar refusing to take any steps—Direction from Court to solemnize marriage.

Where a Jewess was divorced according to Jewish law, a Christian desiring to marry her gave notice to the Registrar under the provisions of Act XV of 1872. The Registrar having refused to solemnize the marriage, the Court, on application, ordered the Registrar to receive and publish the notice and, upon compliance with the provisions of sec. 41 of the Act, take all such steps as are necessary for the solemnization of the marriage.

a Christian, and Isabella Landeman, a Jewess.

The application was made by Harold Tucker, under sec. 46 of the Christian Marriages Act, on notice to the Senior Marriage Registrar, and the petition on which the application was made set out the nationality, age, religion of the parties to the intended marriage, the fact that the said Isabella Landeman had been married and divorced according to the Jewish Law and that there was no valid impediment to the applicant's marriage with the said Isabella. After setting out the refusal of the Marriage Registrar to issue the certificate, the petition prayed for a direction to the Marriage Registrar for the issue of the certificate. The reason why the Registrar had refused the certificate did not appear.

The petition was supported by the affidavit of the priest, Solomon Tweuna. After stating the length of the time he has been acting as priest, he set out the manner in which a divorce takes place according to Jewish rites. He stated that he knew Isabella Landeman and had duly divorced her, in the manner described by him. He finally stated that she was according to the Jewish Law free to marry again and that no marriage between a Jew and a Gentile could be solemnised according to Jewish Law.

The Marriage Registrar did not appear, and no oral examination took place in Court.

intention to create permanent tenancy of, if may be presumed.

A presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity: it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principle.

Where lands are debutter, to create a permanent tenancy at a fixed rent under it would be a breach of duty in the shebait and an intention in the shebait to create such tenancy is not therefore presumable.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of May 1909, against a decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 28th of November 1908, reversing a decree of Babu Mohon Lal Ray, Munsif of Alipur, dated the 31st of July 1908.

The facts of the case briefly were as follows:—

The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs to eject the Defendants from a plot of land appertaining to the Plaintiffs' debutter after notice to quit on the allegation that the Defendants were monthly tenants at will. This contention was based on a registered kabuliyat alleged to have been executed by the tenant in which he was described as a "bharatia paying rent monthly." The Defendants denied the genuineness of the kabuliyat and contended that they held the land as permanent tenants the permanent right of occupancy having been acquired under the rent law and by long possession. The first Court decreed the suit on the basis of the kabuliyat.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the kabuliyat was a collusive document executed by one Kasem who held a power-of-attorney from the Defendants. He further found that the Defendants and their predecessors had been holding the land for nearly 70 years at an uniform rate of rent, that they had erected pucca building on the land and that there had been transfers by sale and mortgage which had been recognised by the landlord. After stating these circumstances the lower Appellate Court went on to observe as follows:

"All those facts taken together lead to the irresistible inference of the permanency of the Defendants' tenure. It also appears that the Defendants' tenure was originally an agricultural one and a right occupancy had been acquired in it by the holders of it Upon a consideration of the oral and documentary evidence adduced in this case and also the acts and the conduct of the parties. I arrived at the conclusion that the Defendants' tenancy is a permanent one, that the Plaintiffs are estopped by their acts and conduct from questioning the permanent rights of the Defendants and the Plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the Defendants from the disputed land."

In this view the Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Against this decision the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babus Nil Madhub Bose, Shib Chandra Falit and Surendra Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to eject the Defendants from a piece of land in Kidderpur on the ground that they are monthly tenants to whom due notice to quit has been given. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, has dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit with costs, holding that the Defendants have a permanent tenancy.

From this decree the Plaintiffs have appealed. It cannot be said in the light of the decided cases that there are no materials to justify the lower Appellate Court's view; but it has to be borne in mind that the conclusion rests not on direct proof but on presumption.

The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity: it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principle. It is this that prevents our accepting the view of the lower Appellate Court as final, for it would seem that the property to which the presumption has been applied is debutter.

If it was debutter at the time the tenancy originated, then this would affect the applicability of the presumption, for to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a shebait, and is not, therefore, presumable. Moharanee Shibessoree Debia v. Mothoora Nath Acharyo (1). It should therefore be seen whether at the origin of the tenancy the property had acquired its debutter character, and on this will depend the applicability of the presumption.

In the course of the argument before us the Appellants have relied on the use of the words Bharatia: We cannot pronounce an opinion as to the weight it should carry but it will be for the lower Appellate Court to consider its bearing as one of the factors in the case.

We reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the appeal for re-hearing in the light of the foregoing remarks.

The costs in this Court and those incurred elsewhere up to this stage will abide the result.

Occupancy holding—Sale in execution of decree—Consent of fractional landlord—Sale if legal.

Where a decree-holder's application for sale of an occupancy holding was granted to the extent of a 15½th annas share upon the finding that co-sharer landlords to that extent had consented to the sale,

Held—That in the present state of authorities the order should be maintained, the purchaser purchasing at his peril.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910, against an order of Babu Ashutosh Mitter, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Bogra, dated the 4th of July 1910, confirming an order of Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee, Munsif of Bogra, dated the 29th of January 1910.

SHAKARUDDIN CHOUDRY v. RANI HEMANGINI DRSI.

Babu Priya Sankar Mojumdar for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The decree-holder applied for the sale of a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money decree on the allegation that the landlords had given their consent. The raiyat judgment-debtor objected and the learned Munsif found that the consent was not by all the landlords but by co-sharers to the extent of 15½th annas only and made an order for the sale of that share of the holding. That order has been affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

It has been held that an occupancy holding which is not transferable by custom can be sold with the consent of the landlord. See Ananda Das v. Ratnakar (1). That consent however must be by the whole body of landlords. It is contended that the result of the order of the lower Courts would be a sale of a part of a holding and a consequent sub-division of the holding without the consent of the whole body of landlords. As regards the sale of a part of a holding there is some divergence of opinion and the matter has been referred to a Full Bench in another case. As regards the sub-division of the holding, that would not be a necessary consequence of the sale and the non-consenting landlords would not be bound to recognise the sub-division. It has also been held that the landlord may consent even after the sale, see Dwarka Nath v. Tarini Sankar (2). So that here the non-consenting landlords may give their consent after the sale. In any case the decree-holder takes the risk and in the present state of the law the purchaser will purchase at his peril. We do not think it necessary to interfere and we accordingly dismiss this appeal but without costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170 (3)—Transferee of occupancy holding, if may make deposit—Voidable interest.

A transferee of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom has no interest in his holding and is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to avoid a sale of the holding in execution of the landlord's decree for rent.

To permit such a transferee to make the deposit and thus prevent execution is an irregular exercise of jurisdiction open to revision by the High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

STEPHEN, J.—This matter comes before us on a Second Appeal and on a Rule. The Appellant, who is also the Petitioner in the Rule, is a landlord who is seeking to sell a tenant's holding in execution of a rent-decree. The Respondent purchased the holding from an occupancy raiyat and seeks to defeat the landlord's right by depositing the decretal money in Court under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Appellant contests his right to do this on the ground that the holding is not transferable, as it has now been found it is not, and that the Respondent has not therefore any interest in the holding voidable on the sale. Both the lower Courts have found in the Respondent's favour, and have allowed the deposit to be made. The Appellant now appeals from the decision in the lower Appellate Court, and in case it should be held that no appeal lies has also obtained a Rule calling on the Respondent to show cause why the order accepting the deposit should not be set aside.

Leaving aside for the moment the question whether any appeal lies we have to consider whether the Respondent, that is the applicant, has any interest in the land, and if he has, whether that interest is voidable on the sale.

On the authorities before us I hold that the complainant has no interest in the land. This result, in my opinion, follows from the decisions of this Court in Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (1) and Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (2). The two cases together are certainly an authority for the statement that the transferee of a non-transferable holding is not a representative of the transferer under sec. 244 of the old Code or the owner of immoveable property under sec. 311, and in both cases the point is considered as depending on the question whether he had an interest in the property. It is possible of course that the phrase "having any interest" in sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, might be construed as having a wider application than the "representative" of a party to a suit under sec. 244, or the owner of immoveable property under sec. 311. But in Ishan Chandra v. Beni Madhab (3), the authority on which Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (1) was decided it seems as if the classes of person described in the three sections were all the same, as indeed there is no reason why they should not be.

I should feel no difficulty in following these decisions were it not for the decision of this Court in Hari Das v. Uday Chandra (4), where it was held that the sale of a non-transferable holding is not void but merely voidable by the landlord, a rule that has frequently been followed by this Court in holding that where the landlord is not a party to proceedings arising out of the transfer the question of transferability does not arise. I doubt, however, whether the distinction between void and voidable contracts has not been pushed too far in the case in question. The landlord's rights were not directly concerned in the case in question, and on the facts before it, in order to support the conclusion arrived at, the Court need not have decided more than that the contract was void only. If the landlord recognises a transfer of a non-transferable holding it is probably open to him to recognise it on the footing that it is or is not the subject of an occupancy right, or at least there does not appear to be any authority that it is not. If the "interest" in sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, is read as interest against the landlord, a sense which would bring the section into line with secs. 244 and 311 of the old Code, this would put an end to the distinctions between void and voidable contracts as far as the present case is concerned. That it should be so read I do not say but the possibility of the reading inclines us to follow the two decisions we have followed.

We have also been referred to the case of Omar Ali v. Basiruddeen (5), where it was held that the transferee of a portion of a holding had a right to pay the amount of a decree in a rent suit under sec. 310A of the old Code. I cannot say that this is consistent with the principles on which Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (1) and Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (2) were decided; but the difference between the views expressed does not seem to me to justify a reference.

Under these circumstances, we need not consider the further question whether the applicant had an interest voidable on the sale.

If the applicant had no interest he had no right of appeal from the first decision, and consequently the present Appellant had no such right. But on our findings it appears that the Courts below have prevented the landlord from proceeding with the execution of his decree, at the instance of one who, on the Court's own finding, was a stranger and had no locus standi in the matter. It must be held, therefore, that there has been an irregular exercise of jurisdiction. The appeal is therefore dismissed, but the Rule is made absolute, the orders of both the lower Courts are set aside, and the money deposited by the applicant must be returned to him, and the execution case must proceed according to law.

The Petitioner is entitled to the costs of the Rule which we assess at two gold mohurs, and to his costs in the Courts below.

COXE, J.—Considering the importance of the point and the conflict of judicial opinion upon it I should have preferred to have the case referred to a Full Bench but as my learned colleague does not think that this course is rendered necessary by the decision in Omar Ali v. Basiruddeen (5) and as I agree with his view that the purchaser in this case is not entitled to deposit, I do not press for a reference.

To the cases cited by my learned colleague, I may add that of Thomas Barclay v. Syed Hossain (6). In that case it was held that if the landlord does not dispute the title of the depositor and withdraws the money, he cannot afterwards refuse to recognise the transfer. It is argued that that case has no bearing on the present case, because it does not lay down that the mere drawing of the money would debar the landlord from denying the title of the depositor and in this case the landlord has contested the depositor's right to make the deposit. This argument however is hardly in accordance with the explanation of the decision given in Jugal v. Srinath (7). Moreover both these decisions imply that the landlord can attack successfully the right of a purchaser to make the deposit. If a purchaser of a holding that is not transferable is entitled to deposit the money, what will be the use of the landlord's resisting him, and why should the landlord be estopped from contesting his title because he has refrained from taking action that is bound to be pointless. On the other hand if drawing the money estops the landlord in future, what is he to do, if he desires to exercise his undoubted right of refusing to recognise the transfer. If he draws the money he is bound to recognise the transfer. If he does not, the sale is stopped and he has to go without his rent. It appears to me to follow necessarily from these rulings that the landlord is entitled to resist the deposit and that if he resists it, the purchaser cannot be allowed to make it and save the holding from sale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115, (7) 12 C. L. J. 609 (1910).

Or. XLI, r. 25—Failure by Appellate Court to frame material issue not raised and tried—Material irregularity—Revision by High Court.

A suit for damages against a Steamer Company for loss due to short delivery was decreed by the Munsif who did not frame and try the issue whether notice under sec. 10 of the Carriers Act had been served on the Company, that issue not having been presented to him by the parties. The Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed that decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that service of notice under the said section had not been made out :

Held—That the failure of the Subordinate Judge to frame and try the requisite issue under r. 25, Or. XLI, C. P. C., was in the circumstances a material irregularity which might have led to a failure of justice.

This was a Rule granted on the 5th of June 1911 against the judgment and decree of Babu S. C. Ganguli, Subordinate Judge of Faridpur, dated the 21st of April 1911, decreeing Money Appeal No. 296 of 1910 with costs, setting aside the decree of Babu Bunwari Lal Banerjee, Munsif of Goalundo, dated the 7th of September 1910, and dismissing the suit with costs.

The Plaintiff sued the Defendant Company to recover Rs. 329-14 as. for loss sustained owing it was alleged to Defendant's negligence.

The Plaintiff alleged that his agent made over to the Defendant Carrier Company at Mokameh 353 sacks of dried chillies weighing 344 maunds and 15 seers for delivery to Plaintiff at Goalundo, that the Plaintiff got delivery of 324 maunds only and that Defendant admitted short delivery but alleged that it was due to dryage, that the shortage was in fact due to gross negligence of the Company and that the Plaintiff was entitled to get

RAMJAS AGARWALLA v. INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION & RAILWAY COMPANY, LD.

Rs. 302 as the price of 18 maunds of chillies.

The Defendant alleged that no notice in terms of the Carriers Act had been given by Plaintiff, that the consignor should have been made a party, that Plaintiff did not incur any loss owing to negligence of Defendant's servants, that the Defendant was not liable, as the consignment suffered from inherent defects and was booked at owner's risk, that the bags were old and torn and the loss beyond dryage was incidental to transit and might be due to wear and tear.

The Court of first instance found that no notice was necessary and that Plaintiff was entitled to get the price of 18 maunds of chillies. So the suit was decreed for Rs. 249-4-7.

The Defendant appealed. The point urged in the Appellate Court was whether notice in terms of sec. 10 of the Carriers Act as amended by Act X of 1899 was served on the Defendant Company by the Plaintiff?

The Subordinate Judge after hearing the arguments on both sides found the point in the negative and decreed the appeal.

Against his order the Plaintiff moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Dharendra Lal Khastagir for the Petitioner.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

JENKINS, C. J.—In our opinion the Rule in this case should be made absolute on the short ground that the lower Appellate Court decided the suit on a question of fact which was never in issue between the parties in the Court of first instance, through a misapprehension as to what the law required. The Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court was right in his view that sec. 10 of the Carriers Act of 1865, which was enacted in Act X of 1899, applied to the circumstances of this case. The Munsif, however, did not take that view, nor does it seem to have been presented to him by the parties; and it is clear from the terms of his judgment and the manner in which he formulates the points for determination that this section (sec. 10) was not present to his mind. Now, sec. 10 raises a question of fact; and, had proper issues been settled under Or. XIV, the issue appropriate in the light of that section would have been framed and tried. It was not done, and so the position arose which is contemplated in Or. XLI, r. 25, which deals with the circumstances under which the Appellate Court may frame issues and refer them for trial to the Court whose decree is appealed from. The Appellate Court perceived that the Court of first instance had omitted to frame and try the requisite issue as to the service of notice in writing of the loss or injury, but failed to utilize the procedure contemplated in r. 25 of Or. XLI. In the circumstances of the case, this was a material irregularity in the exercise by the Appellate Court of its jurisdiction—an irregularity which, for ought we can tell, may have led to an injustice in this case. The result is that we must make the Rule absolute, set aside the decree of the Appellate Court, and send back the case to that Court in order that it may frame the requisite issues and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal was preferred.

The costs of this Rule will abide the result, and we assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

Local inspection, power of Magistrate to make—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 3—"Proved"—"Matters before Court"—Omission of the Magistrate to make a note of the local inspection on the spot—Irregularity or illegality—Prejudice.

There are in effect three different kinds of local inspections. (1) Those that are authorised or directed by the Code of Criminal Procedure and which are governed by the rules and limitations imposed by the Code itself. (2) Those which are in the nature of the view by the jury laid down in sec. 293 of the Code. It is not only not objectionable, but in many cases, highly advisable; that a Magistrate trying a criminal case (having the functions of both judge and jury) should view the place in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in the Court. But if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or the other. [IN RE LALJI (3) referred to]. (3) Local inspections, not provided for as above in the Criminal Procedure Code, but which in so far as they conform to the provisions of the Evidence Act cannot also be excluded.

The Evidence Act gives the Court power to adjudge the existence of facts on "matters before it" as well as according as they are deposed to in the evidence. In adjudicating on matters before him, which require proof, the Judge may use his eyes as well as his ears. A Court of Appeal therefore cannot exclude from its consideration the personal observations made by the trying Court at a local investigation.

JOY COOMAR v. BUNDHU LALL (2) followed.

A case cannot be decided merely on an observation made by the Court locally. But if in looking at a place in order to understand the evidence the Magistrate thereby understands that the description of the place given in the evidence is erroneous or false, he is not precluded from holding that the facts as stated by the witnesses who gave that description are not proved and in so holding he does not make himself a witness but acts as a Judge deciding on "matters before him."

BABBON SHAIK v. EMPEROR (1) considered.
GIRISH CHUNDER GHOSH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS (4) distinguished.

It is very desirable that the results of the local investigation should be placed upon record as soon as it is completed. If the facts which the judicial officer considers to be established by the local investigation be impugned, and there is no contemporaneous record of them, the Judge would not be able to act upon them. But where they are not impugned the Appellate Court cannot exclude them from consideration merely because the facts observed were not immediately placed upon record, for it is not a positive rule of law that a note must be placed on the record on the spot.

Where the observations of the Magistrate were not placed on the record on the spot but were embodied in his judgment soon after :

Held—That the Appellate Court was right in refusing to exclude them from its consideration, when the correctness of the observations was not impugned before him and the accused did not appear to have been prejudiced by the irregularity in the matter of recording them.

This was a Rule granted on the 10th of November 1911 against the order of Mr. H. D. Christian, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhabua, dated the 27th of July 1911, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 147, 323/149, I. P. C., and sentencing them (Petitioners Nos. 1—6) to six months' rigorous imprisonment under each section (concurrently) and Petitioners Nos. 7 and 8 to a fine of Rs. 25 under sec. 323, I. P. C., and directing all to execute bonds for Rs. 150 each to keep the peace for 2 years : an appeal from which order was dismissed by Mr. G. J. Monahan, Sessions Judge of Shahabad, on 23rd September 1911.

The facts material to the report will appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarka Nath Mitter and Manindra Nath Banerjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Sirish Chandra Chowdhury for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Shahabad to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioners should not be set aside on the ground that the lower Court inspected the place where the offence is said to have been committed and did not record a note of what he saw.

Now what happened in this case was this ; the defence urged that the sides of the "kote" or mound on which the assault took place are unscaleable and the space was not sufficient to hold so many persons. This being a point on which the Magistrate says he could satisfy himself, he visited the place on the 23rd of July and found, as he puts it, that his trouble for the defence had been wasted ; there was no question of the place being inaccessible, it was merely a slight slope on the south and on the north it was practically on a level with the village, while as for the place of assault it was sufficient to hold twice the number of persons.

The learned Judge in appeal in dealing with this point briefly recapitulated the above finding and says that the Magistrate visited the spot as there were points that could be verified by a local enquiry. Before the Judge it was urged that the Magistrate had made no note at the time of his local inspection. This the Judge says he certainly should have done. However he had embodied the result of his inspection in his judgment which was delivered only four days later and when what he saw must have been fresh in his memory. Thus, in the Judge's opinion, his omission to make a note at the time, though irregular, cannot be said to have caused any failure of justice.

In this we fully agree and the only question we have to consider is whether in all cases the omission to place on the record the result of a local inspection is a fatal error of jurisdiction apart from any prejudice which it may cause to the accused.

We do not find any authority for such a proposition. The case relied on by the learned Vakil who obtained the Rule is that of Babbon Sheik v. Emperor (1). But none of the judgments delivered in that case considers or deals with the ruling in the case of Joy Coomar v. Bundhu Lall (2), though that case was cited in argument for another reason.

That ruling imports a reason for giving evidentiary value to local inspections which seems to have been overlooked in subsequent decisions. What those reasons are we shall deal with later on.

(1) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 840 : s. c. 14 O. W. N. 422 (1910).

(2) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 363 (1882).

ALIAR RAI v. JHINGUR TEWARI.

But what we desire to point out here is that there are in effect three different kinds of local inspections—1st. Those that are authorised or directed by the Code of Criminal Procedure and which are governed by the rules and limitations imposed by the Code itself. 2nd. Those which are in the nature of the view by the jury laid down in sec. 293 of the Code. Magistrates having the functions of both Judge and jury in cases decided by them may in our opinion view the place in any case in order, as the rulings on the point say, to follow or understand the evidence. We are fortified in this opinion by the ruling in In re Lalji (3). It is, as the Judges there say, not only not objectionable, but in many cases highly advisable, that a Magistrate trying a criminal case should himself inspect the scene of the occurrence in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court. But if he does so he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or the other.

This is the same rule which is applied in the Code itself to the inspection by the jury. But there is a third class of local inspections under which we think the present and very many other cases fall and that is the class referred to in the ruling in Joy Coomar's case (2) above-mentioned.

There is express provision for these local investigations in the Code of Civil Procedure but there is nothing that can be deemed to prevent them in the Code of Criminal Procedure and in so far as they conform to the provisions of the law of evidence it is obvious they cannot be excluded.

Now we desire to draw particular attention to what the Judges say as to the evidentiary value of such local inspections. They say "The Judge also appears to have been of opinion that the results of the enquiry conducted by the Munsif in this case could not be considered by him because it was not evidence according to the definition of that word in the Evidence Act. He is perhaps right in this view. The definition of the word 'evidence' as given in the Evidence Act means and includes (1) all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses in relation to matters of fact under enquiry; such statements are called oral evidence; (2) all documents produced for the inspection of the Court: such documents are called documentary evidence. The result of a local enquiry by a presiding Judicial Officer does not come under either of these two heads; but the District Judge has not taken into consideration the definition of the word 'proved' which comes immediately after. It is to this effect:—'a fact is said to be proved when after considering the matters before it the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists.' It would appear therefore that the Legislature intentionally refrained from using the word 'evidence' in this definition, but used instead the words 'matters before it.'" The Judges then proceed to hold that the Appellate Court cannot exclude the personal observations of the lower Court from its consideration. Whether there are good grounds for accepting the results of the local investigation as correct, or rejecting it as incorrect, are matters with which the High Court in second appeal (and we may add also in revision) has nothing to do. It is for the Appellate Court to decide these questions. In this very case the Judges for the first time emphasize the importance of putting upon paper the result of the investigation when completed. "It is very desirable," they say, "that judicial officers conducting local investigations should place upon record the results of their investigations as soon as they are completed, so that the parties may have an opportunity of seeing what the facts are which the judicial officers consider to be established by the local investigations." But where none of those facts are impugned as incorrect the Appellate Court cannot exclude them from his consideration. It would seem to follow that if they are so impugned and there is no contemporaneous record of them the Judge would not be able to act upon them, but it is certainly not a positive rule of law that a note must be placed on the record on the spot. In this case none of the objections that have been taken in the various cases cited in this Court apply. The defence practically said: "The mound itself is our witness. Go and look at it." The Magistrate went and saw that it was a witness against them. This finding was not impugned before the Judge but it was sought to exclude this most relevant and important matter before the Court on the mere technical ground that the observation was not made matter of record on the spot. The Judge considered the point and rightly considered it from only two points of view.—1st, whether the fact observed was correct ;

2nd, whether the defence had been in any way prejudiced and he found that the correctness of the finding was not impugned and that there was no prejudice in the irregularity in omitting to record a note at the time. The present case is clearly not touched by the decision in Babbon Sheikh v. Emperor (1). There are no doubt passages in the judgment of Woodroffe, J., which might seem to imply that the observation of a fact by the Magistrate could not be admitted. But a careful perusal of the judgment as a whole shows that what is meant is that mere observation cannot be allowed to override the necessity of evidence and a case cannot be decided merely on an observation made by the Court locally. If in looking at a place in order to understand the evidence the Magistrate thereby understands that the description of the place given in the evidence is erroneous or false he is certainly not precluded by the laws of evidence from holding that the facts as stated by the witnesses who gave that erroneous or false description are not proved and in so holding he does not make himself a witness but acts as a Judge deciding on matters before him. We have shown that the judicial system in this country of which the Evidence Act is a most important factor gives the Court power to adjudge the existence of facts on matters before it as well as according as they are deposed to in the evidence. To hold otherwise would be in direct conflict with Joy Coomar's case (2), which as far as we know has never been dissented from. Woodroffe, J., clearly shows that the danger to be guarded against is the supersession of all evidence by mere observation and the head-note of the case appears to us to go too far in saying that the Magistrate cannot import into the case matters or facts which he has himself observed, if that is what is intended. But the use of the word 'import' and the words 'other matters' leave it doubtful what is intended. No such words occur in either of the concurrent judgments which govern the decision and the words that do occur are those cited in the next paragraph of the head-note with which we partly agree that a Magistrate cannot import into his judgment matters of opinion and inference based in circumstances not on the record.

The case of Girish Chunder Ghosh v. Queen-Empress (4) is one which, we may observe, has nothing to do with local investigations made after hearing evidence by a trying Magistrate. Upon it is based a contention in this and similar cases that a Magistrate constitutes himself a witness by holding a local inspection in a case in which he is the presiding Judge. The facts of that case clearly show that the District Magistrate who had seen the occurrence and was the best witness for the prosecution constituted himself the Judge for the trial of the case, and the decision was that a witness could not be Judge in the case inasmuch as it is impossible that a Magistrate can be a witness in a case in which he is the sole Judge of law and fact. In other words a man who is a priori a witness to an occurrence cannot assume jurisdiction which he might otherwise have to decide on the facts of that occurrence as a Judge. But as local inspections are recognised by the law and as the Magistrate must make observations of fact in such an inspection and cannot, as Chatterjee, J., points out, fail to believe the testimony of his own senses, it is clear that by making such observations he cannot constitute himself a witness in the case. As long as he is a witness he cannot be a Judge and as long as he is a Judge he cannot be a witness. If he is a witness he ousts his own jurisdiction. If he is a Judge he may adjudicate on all matters before him which require proof, and in doing so he may use his eyes as well as his ears. We do not for one moment desire to minimize the importance of making a note of what is observed at a local inspection nor to in any way appear to condone the introduction either into the report or the judgment of matters of opinion and inference depending on the facts observed. But if the facts observed support or rebut the evidence adduced by either side and cause the Court to understand that that evidence is true or false, inaccurate or exaggerated, then the statement that the facts observed negative or support any of the evidence in the case is not a matter of opinion or inference but a matter of observation and it is in our opinion the duty of the Judge as laid down in Joy Coomas's case (2) to consider the results of such observation, and state them in his judgment. Here the case is clearly one where direct observation explained and cleared up a doubt which had been thrown on the prosecution evidence by the allegations of the defence and there was clearly no impropriety in the course of the inspection nor in the way in which its results were used. The rule must therefore be discharged.

Rule discharged.

MISC. No. 167 OF 1911.

HOLMWOOD, J. | HARBANS SAHAI and ors.,
 SHARFUDDIN, J. | Petitioners,
 1912, | v.
 4, January. | EMPEROR, Opposite

Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 123, 124, 125, 155, 162, 163—Privilege—Departmental enquiry into conduct of Police officers, statements made by witnesses at—Trial of Police officers on charge of taking illegal gratification—Court's duty to send for the statements and allow accused to cross-examine thereon.

Statements made by witnesses in the course of a departmental enquiry into the conduct of Police officers who were subsequently put upon their trial on charges of taking illegal gratification are not privileged under secs. 123, 124 or 125 of the Evidence Act, and the accused are entitled to cross-examine the witnesses under sec. 153 of the Evidence Act on the statements made by them at the departmental enquiry.

EMPRESS v. RAMADHAN MAHARUN (1) followed.

This was a Rule issued upon the Deputy Commissioner of Ranchi to show cause why certain statements made by certain witnesses for the prosecution and recorded by the Police should not be produced at the trial of the Petitioners, then pending before Babu Charu Chandra Mukerjee, Deputy Magistrate, upon charges under sec. 161 of the Indian Penal Code.

The application upon which this Rule was issued was made in the course of the trial of the Petitioners, who were Police officers under orders of suspension, under sec. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, the charges against them being that they had taken illegal gratification from various persons during the investigation of a case of murder and rioting. The prosecution was started as the result of an enquiry held at the instance of the higher Police authorities of the District, at which enquiry statements of a number of witnesses had been taken down. On or about the 19th September 1911, some of the prosecution witnesses in the course of cross-examination admitted that they had made statements before the enquiring officers which were taken down in writing and one witness stated he had affixed his thumb-impression thereto. The accused who had previously endeavoured to obtain copies of the statements from the Police authorities thereupon applied to the Court to call for these documents. The Magistrate forwarded the application to the Superintendent of Police for report. On the 9th November 1911, the report of the Assistant Superintendent of Police was received by the Magistrate and it was in the following terms:—"Begs to inform him that the papers under requisition are departmental enquiry papers and I am not bound to produce the same and as advised by the G. P. (Government Prosecutor?) I decline to do so." Upon this report the Magistrate recorded his order "File," and declined to take further steps for the production of the statements. The accused thereupon moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

The trying Magistrate in the course of his explanation submitted that the case was a non-cognisable one and the statements, if any in fact had been recorded, were recorded in the course of a departmental enquiry, and as such were claimed by the Police to be privileged under secs. 123, 124, 125 of the Evidence Act; that the proper course for the accused was to summon the officer in charge of the records to produce them and that had not been done.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh (with Babu Atulya Charan Bose), for the Petitioner, referred to sec. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which the Court had power to send for the documents. If sec. 162, Cr. P. C., did not apply, secs. 155 (3) and 162 of the Evidence Act would apply. As to the claim of privilege, sec. 123 of the Evidence Act is obviously inapplicable, so is sec. 125 as the statements were taken down after information of the alleged offences had been received and in the course of an investigation as to the truth or otherwise of that information. That section refers to informers and spies, not to witnesses: sec. 124 of the Evidence Act, also, does not apply as the statements of witnesses could not be said to have been made to Police officers in official confidence. No such relation of official confidence exists between higher Police officers and members of the public who may have grounds for complaint against the conduct of subordinate Police officers.

[HOLMWOOD, J., refers to Empress v. Ramadhan Maharum (1)].

That case is entirely in my favour.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—But the Magistrate says you wanted the help of the Court in first getting the documents produced and then to use them or not according as they turned out to be in your favour or against you]

Any such apprehension is met by sec. 163, Evidence Act.

The question that arises upon this Rule is whether the statements made by witnesses in the course of a departmental enquiry into the conduct of Police officers are privileged under secs. 123, 124 or 125 of the Evidence Act, when those witnesses are subsequently examined in a Criminal Court on a charge against the said Police officers of taking illegal gratification, or whether they do not fall within the ordinary rules of evidence as laid down in secs. 155 and 162 of the Evidence Act. It appears to us clear that they are not so privileged, and we are supported in that finding by the decision of the Bombay Court in the case of Empress v. Ramadhan Maharum (1). The reasons which are given by the Judges in that case apply exactly to the present case. In that case the Sessions Judge refused to allow the question to be put to the departmental superior of the accused as to where he got his information, because he was of opinion that the Superintendent was protected by secs. 124 and 125 of the Indian Evidence Act, because he had evidently regarded the communication as made to him in official confidence, more especially as at the time the case was being investigated as an attempted fraud on the public revenue, and the learned Judges of the Bombay Court held that the Sessions Judge was wrong in disallowing the question. Now the reasons which the Sessions Judge erroneously held precluded him from allowing this question are precisely the reasons which have been held by the lower Court in this case to preclude it from sending for the documents in question and putting questions to the witnesses upon them. Because there was a departmental enquiry in the District Superintendent of Police's office therefore the Magistrate thinks that these are either unpublished official records relating to affairs of State, or that they are communications made to the District Superintendent in official confidence, or that they are sources of

WE WONDER WHAT MADE LORD AMPHILL INTERPELLATE the Secretary of State for India regarding the pay and pension of Sir Lawrence Jenkins at the present moment. If the question had been asked directly after he was appointed Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court or soon after his Lordship joined that office, we would have presumed that the question was asked in the usual course to ascertain the conditions and terms of his appointment. But now, that his Lordship's appointment is admitted not only by the legal profession but by the public at large as the best appointment that could have been made to this position of great responsibility and now that none can gainsay the fact that but for Sir Lawrence Jenkins peace and order in Bengal and faith in British justice, which is the strongest tie of attachment between the Sovereign and the subject in this country, would never, perhaps, have been restored, a question of the kind is sure to arouse suspicion in the public mind in Bengal.

LORD AMPHILL IS BY NO MEANS UNPOPULAR amongst the people of this country. He is therefore believed to have been a dupe of somebody in this matter. We suspect that there are some designing men behind the scene who would like to see the judiciary in this country emasculated so that the executive and the police may again have their own way. They are too well aware of the high regard in which the Chief Justice is held in this country for his firm, honest, efficient and fearless discharge of duty both as a Judge and as the head of the judiciary in Bengal. They dare not make any frontal attack on him as that would disclose their hands, their questionable antecedents and also their sinister motives.

SO THIS COVERT ATTACK IS THE WORK OF A secret fraternity of absolutism in India who not very long ago got hold of some credulous member of the House of Commons to seriously enquire in the House whether it was not a fact that a Chief Justice in league with the Executive in India was letting loose political dacoits in Bengal and undermining the Indian constitution and jeopardising the cause of good government in the country. It is these champions of good government again who did not even hesitate to charge the King-Emperor with violating the constitution in India for allaying the unrest and disaffection that had spread over the whole of the country as a direct result of their superior idea of efficient government in India.

WE ARE, THEREFORE, NOT MUCH SURPRISED THAT this fresh attack on the Chief Justice has come in the garb of an enquiry as to the propriety of his being allowed to draw his pension and salary at the same time. As might have been expected the answer given by the Secretary of State has given great satisfaction throughout Bengal and caused no less mortification to those who practised this trick on the unsuspecting Lord Amphyll. Sir Lawrence Jenkins's pension is paid for his past services in another Presidency and his salary is paid for his present services as Chief Justice in Bengal and it is difficult to see how any reasonable man can object to his being entitled to both. Sir John Budd Phear after earning his pension as a Judge of the Calcutta High Court became Chief Justice in Ceylon and he was paid both his pension and salary.

IT IS, THEREFORE, ONLY THE PETTY MEANNESS OF some ill-deposed person that made him put the question in Lord Amphthill's mouth. In reply we would add to what Lord Crewe said that the service of a Judge who can inspire a sense of security in the people and confidence in the King's justice cannot be valued in gold. It is bare truth when we say that for the pacification of this Province it would be incumbent on the Government, both in England and in India, to try to prevail upon the Chief Justice to serve out his full term in Bengal. We shall take this occasion to express the general desire that the high sense of duty that induced his Lordship to undertake the responsibilities of his present office amidst serious public troubles and no less personal inconvenience and worry will make him ignore all these petty annoyances and keep him steadfast to his charge till his Lordship can feel sure that he may safely leave this momentous charge in other hands.

THE FOLLOWING IS REUTER'S SUMMARY OF LORD AMPHILL'S question and Lord Crewe's reply above referred to.

In the House of Lords, Lord Amphthill asked whether Sir Lawrence Jenkins was drawing a pension in connection with his former post as well as full pay at present and also put various other questions arising out of the original question.

Lord Crewe replied to the first question in the affirmative and explained that the rules relating to judicial salaries were statutory rules made by the Secretary of State and were in no way affected by the ordinary pension rules of the Civil Service. As the rules stood in 1899, they did not provide for the suspension of pension where an ex-Judge had been re-appointed to the office. But a rule had since been made empowering the Secretary of State to decide in any future case of the kind whether the salary ought not to be reduced. He did not say that special cases might never occur where a man might not be allowed to receive both his pension and his full salary. There was no rule preventing the return to an official appointment in India of a retired official who had held an appointment on the Council of India. Lord Crewe added that Lords Morley and Minto had both considered Sir Lawrence Jenkins's appointment as the most suitable by virtue of his quite remarkable ability, his exceptional legal knowledge, his judicial experience and his knowledge of India. Lord Crewe declared: "I am of the same opinion. Sir Lawrence Jenkins in no way applied for the post but accepted it in deference to the strong wish of Lord Morley and Lord Minto though the acceptance meant inconvenience and some sacrifice."

Lord Middleton thought that in most cases the pension and salary system would be undesirable but said that the Secretary of State ought to have some latitude.

The subject was then dropped.

THE JUDGMENT OF LORD MACNAGHTEN IN Ragho Prasad v. Lala Mewa Loh, which we report in this issue, may not very improperly be described as a serio-comic commentary on the strange and exaggerated notions of State claims that prevail amongst the executive officials in India and the corresponding scanty respect that they have for civil rights of private parties. When any absurd or preposterous claim is put forward on behalf of the Crown or the Government against private individuals there is not or we might say there has never been a Judge on the English Bench who in espousing the cause of the more humble litigant has brushed aside the extravagant claims of the Crown with so little ceremony and pronounced his disapproval of them in such clear and unequivocal language as Lord Macnaghten.

HIS JUDGMENTS IN SUCH CASES ARE SO BRIMFUL of robust common sense, resplendent with such bold exposition of justice, relieved by such subdued touches of humour that they may truly be described as genuine works of art in legal literature. They are so very free from technique and commonplace legal clap trap that one need not be a lawyer to appreciate and admire them. We shall illustrate below by what light touches his Lordship has disposed of the imaginary conflict between a Crown claim and a private party's obvious legal title which led to a tug of war between the executive and the law Courts in India. The former pulling hard for the Crown caused the opponents to carry their conflict all the way to the Judicial Committee where their Lordships half in amusement and half in disgust observed that their Lordships failed to perceive where the question of law came in in a combat of this character.

LORD MACNAGHTEN AT THE VERY BEGINNING OF the judgment, apparently seriously but not without a vein of sarcasm, describes the suit as one brought by the Plaintiffs "to recover property of which they had been deprived through the intervention of a Government official who attached it and got it sold in order to satisfy a debt due to Government from somebody else." There is a lot of latent humour in his Lordship's statement of the facts of this case which becomes patent to any one who can read between the lines as to how it was that the Plaintiff's property came to be sold for some Court-fee claims accruing to Government out of a pauper suit by wife against husband for her dower. The facts are that a Mahomedan zemindar had mortgaged his property to the Plaintiffs and the latter got a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The wife of the Mahomedan gentleman then filed a suit in forma pauperis against the husband for a promised dower of a lakh of rupees which she claimed to be a first charge on the mortgaged property. The Court found that there was no foundation for any such charge on the mortgaged property and gave a decree to the wife for the recovery of the dower from the husband.

UNDER THE WIFE'S DECREE, WHATEVER MAY BE its worth, she in theory at any rate ceased to be a pauper and the Government in consequence became entitled to recover under the decree first of all the amount due for Court-fees in the wife's suit from the husband. The Collector, however, knowing apparently that the decree against the husband was not worth the paper on which it was written, obtained execution against the mortgaged property and had it sold for the value of Court-fees in the dower suit quite in disregard of the fact that the claim for dower against the property had failed and that the mortgagee had already got a prior decree for sale of the mortgaged property. A Rai Bahadur, as his Lordship calls him, appeared on the scene at the Collector's sale and purchased the property for Rs. 1,529, which, as his Lordship very shrewdly observes, was just enough to pay for the Court-fees in the decreed pauper suit. After this sale the executive officers were convinced that the legal title of the mortgagees and decree-holders could not be allowed to prevail as against that of the Rai Bahadur who purported to purchase the property for satisfaction of a Crown debt.

IT IS AFTER THIS PURCHASE BY THE RAI BAHADUR that all the Plaintiff's troubles began. The mortgagee's decree for sale was sent back at the instance of the Collector to the Civil Court with the remark that "there was no property left for sale under the mortgage decree." To quote their Lordships, "In the Collector's opinion the authorities clearly affirmed 'the principle that the Government takes precedence of other creditors, whether or not they have a lien on the property.'" At the instance of the Civil Court, however, the property was again directed to be sold under the mortgage decree. Upon this the Collector made a reference to the Subordinate Judge as to "whether it was in fact intended that the property should be sold over again." The Subordinate Judge replied "I think when once a decree is passed, it must be executed unless and until it is set aside or it becomes inexecutable by lapse of limitation period." So the mortgage sale took place and the mortgagees purchased the property at the sale.

THE PLAINTIFFS THEN APPLIED TO THE ASSISTANT Collector for the mutation of their names and this officer dismissed their application, to quote again their Lordships, "blaming them for trying to avoid payment of the Government dues 'instead of quietly paying off' the Court-fees and getting the property in satisfaction of their larger debt." On appeal the Collector affirmed his assistant's view with the additional observation that after hearing argument he must confess that he "had not hitherto realised that the position of the Crown in such matters was so strong." The mortgagee purchasers then appealed to the Commissioner who also dismissed the appeal with the observation that he did "not think that any fairer decision could be come to than that at which the Collector arrived." This unanimity in the executive idea of fairness is not very uncommon in India but unfortunately it does not often agree with the ordinary idea of it.

THUS THE ONLY LAWFUL PURCHASER OF THE property after being baffled in obtaining any recognition of his title from the executive officers in three ascending scales of eminence, was obliged again to retrace his steps to the Civil Court to establish his title against the Rai Bahadur. It is worthy of note in this connection that their Lordships seem to suggest that the Plaintiffs should have come before the Civil Court without wasting time in the manner they did. It need hardly be said that the Court of first instance as also the High Court declared in his favour and against the Rai Bahadur. The High Court of Allahabad, it may be out of courtesy to the Government, gave leave to the Rai Bahadur to appeal to the Privy Council. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, to quote their words, "were at a loss to discover what question of law was involved in this case."

THEIR LORDSHIPS THEN WENT ON TO OBSERVE on the first point, (i.e., whether for the Court-fees in the dower suit Government could attach and sell the mortgaged property) "that the claim put forward on behalf of the Government was absurd." Then as regards the prerogative of the Crown, their Lordships observe that "the claim advanced by the Collector on behalf of the Government is a preposterous claim." And finally as regards the whole case their Lordships observe that "the Crown has no more right than a common person to seize A's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from B." It is characteristic of Lord Macnaghten that his Lordship of en interprets the law in such simple form that the justice of it becomes quite self-evident to all. Be one a lawyer or no lawyer, every one reading this judgment will join in his Lordship's conclusion that what he has decided "is not a question of law. It is a question of common justice and, it may be added, of common honesty."

MOTHER'S SHARE ON PARTITION UNDER MITAKSHARA.

The important decision of the Privy Council in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh, reported at p. 409 of our last number, carries to its logical consequence the progressive curtailment of the rights of women under the Mitakshara law which was commenced by the cases of Mussamat Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Balak Ram [11 M. I. A. 139], and Bhugwandeem v. Myna Bae [11 M. I. A. 487], decided by the Privy Council.

It is well-known that the Mitakshara makes no distinction between the so-called woman's peculium and her other property but understands the word stridhana in its derivative sense of property belonging to a woman. The enumerations of stridhanas in Yajnavalkya, Manu, Katyayana, &c., are interpreted by Vijnaneswara as illustrative and not as limiting the meaning of stridhana. [Mitakshara II, sec. xi]. And, as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out in the Ramnaad case, it is wholly beside the point to enquire whether this interpretation was accurate or faithful for it is the law of the Mitakshara and not that of Manu and Yajnavalkya that our Courts have to administer.

In this view of law whatever property came to a woman would be her stridhana no matter whether it was obtained by her by inheritance, partition or by any of the methods of acquiring stridhana enumerated by Katyayana. The effect of this interpretation would not necessarily be to give to the woman absolutely unfettered powers of disposition over any property—these would be subject to certain limitations—but there can be no doubt that it would affect the course of descent of such property.

The Judicial Committee dealt the first blows against this law by the decisions in Thakur Deyhee v. Balak Ram [11 M. I. A. 139], and Bhagwandeem v. Myna Bae [11 M. I. A. 487], where they held that the property inherited by a woman from her husband was not her stridhana and that the word stridhana was to be taken in a technical sense to imply property over which a woman had absolute rights. Subsequently in cases like Chotay Lal v. Chunmoo Lal [L. R. 16 I. A. 15], where a daughter's heritage was held not to be stridhana, the rights of women over other properties were also cut down to the mere life-estate given to widows by the Dayabhaga.

The case of the share taken by a mother on partition of her husband's estate by her sons did not before this come before the Judicial Committee. With reference to this the Calcutta High Court expressed their opinion that it was not stridhana but in the cases of Chiddu v. Naubat, I. L. R. 24 All. 67 and Sripal v. Suraj, I. L. R. 24 All. 82, the Allahabad High Court held such property to be the mother's stridhana according to the Mitakshara. In the case under consideration the Judicial Committee has overruled these decisions and held that even this property is not the woman's stridhana.

Logically, there is no doubt that, starting with the principles laid down in cases like Bhugwandeem

v. Myna Bae, the conclusion arrived at in this case follows. But the attempt of their Lordships in this case to show that this decision may not be wholly inconsistent with the Mitakshara is inconclusive. For one thing it does not seem clear that their Lordships sufficiently had before their mind the fact that according to the Mitakshara there is no technical stridhana. Then, again, even if it be allowable to go back to Manu, Yajnavalkya and Katyayana from Vijnaneswara, their Lordships in considering the bearing of those texts on the subject might well have taken into consideration the historical growth of the idea of woman's property.

In the older texts of Smritis a woman is entirely incapable of holding property. The texts relating to stridhana in their origin only specified the circumstances under which a woman could, with a slight relaxation of the rigour of the old law, be allowed to hold property. There is little doubt that when these were enumerated the widow or daughter had no right to inherit any property at least of a male. In extending the term stridhana to properties which a woman acquired by inheritance (after their right to inheritance had become recognised) Vijnaneswara need not therefore be necessarily understood as making an innovation but rather as carrying the words of text-writers to their logical consequences. When after enumerating some kinds of property the text-writers go on to say "these and others are woman's property" [see Yajn. II, 143], it is possible to say no doubt, that 'and others' imply other things ejusdem generis as Mr. Mayne contends and their Lordships hold in this case. But what is the distinguishing mark of the class which would identify a property as stridhana? It is suggested, in the light of Jimutavahana's explanation, that it is the woman's absolute power of disposal over the property. But, having regard to history it might well be said that the property which would fall within the class would be all property which a woman is allowed to hold—remembering always that in those times the enumeration of Katyayana and Manu very likely exhausted all the properties that a woman might possibly possess.

This view would be strictly consonant to the grammatical meaning of the texts of Manu, Yajnavalkya and Katyayana. In saying "Adyagni &c., are alone the woman's property" [Manu, IX, 194], they should then be understood as implying that she was otherwise what Manu calls her Adhana or incapable of holding property. If this is so, Vijnaneswara's interpretation including property acquired by other means (when such acquisition became possible) in the same class with these special kinds of property is surely consistent with the true spirit of the texts.

Their Lordships find a difficulty in appreciating the Mitakshara position with regard to the devotion of a woman's property. The Mitakshara after describing woman's property as meaning all property acquired by a woman, no matter how, concludes, "a woman's property has been thus described" and then goes on to show the order of inheritance to stridhana. [Mitakshara II, xi 8, seq.]. Their Lordships observe with reference to this passage "When Vijnaneshwara says 'a woman's property has been thus described' he may have been referring to the description given by the author (Yajnavalkya) and Katyayana and have intended to confine Yajnavalkya's rule of devolution to Yajnavalkya's classification." We fail to see how, having regard to the context, that view is tenable and there is no doubt that the right view is what their Lordships refer to later on, viz., that it means that a woman's property of whatever kind descends to her own heirs. Taking the Mitakshara as a whole there is no doubt that that is the meaning of its author. And the argument from the fact of there being different lines of descent for woman's property according to the mode of acquisition, which their Lordships put forward, does not affect the position in the last. Yajnavalkya and following him Vijnaneshwara here lay down only the general rule of succession to a woman's property. If the succession to any particular class of such property is determined by a different rule based on special texts, that would be no argument for taking out any other property from the general law of inheritance where no special rule is laid down by the texts.

No doubt the case of property obtained by inheritance has been settled by judicial decisions. But if, as is submitted, these decisions were based on a wrong interpretation of the law, though the Courts might refuse to interfere with them on the principle of stare decisis their Lordships could surely be justified in refusing to carry the principle further and bringing under the same rule property obtained by a woman upon partition with her sons. Even assuming that the two kinds of property were on exactly the same footing, their Lordships are under no obligation to be always strictly consistent in administering Hindu law. Where the law depends on the interpretation of positive texts it would scarcely be a safe principle to require the Courts to be strictly consistent in all parts of the law they administer. That may possibly lead to the evolution of a body of law which may be artistically superior, but may be that the law thus evolved would not actually be law as it obtains amongst the Hindus.

And it may well be argued that the two cases are not exactly on the same footing. No doubt Vijnaneshwara adds property obtained by partition as well as that obtained by inheritance to Yajnavalkya's enumeration and so far seems to place this class of property on the same footing with the property inherited. But it may be pointed out that according to the Mitakshara the right of property does not arise from partition. [Mitakshara I, i 17, et seq.]. The widow's right must in this view be considered to be an inchoate right existing prior to the partition. It cannot be looked upon as a right by inheritance but as a special property arising by virtue of a special text of law. The idea that it is given in lieu of maintenance cannot also be supported in view of the direct negation by the Mitakshara of such a position. If then it is a special property vested in the widow by a special text of law it stands on a footing distinct from property taken by inheritance. Their Lordships might on this view well have refused to apply to this property the principles which have been laid down for property inherited.

In this view of law there would also be strong reason for holding this particular property to be stridhana. For it is like the properties mentioned in the stridhana texts of Manu, Yajnavalkya, &c., a special creature of positive law distinct from the general kinds of property. This might very well be a good test of stridhana taking it in the technical sense. The test generally laid down, viz., that that is stridhana of which the woman has absolute power of disposing is in fact defining a term by itself. If we ask further, what is the property which a woman has absolute power to dispose of we will very probably be referred to the enumeration of Manu and Yajnavalkya. And if we ask what 'and others' in that enumeration means, we will be referred back to where we started from. There is absolutely no reason why this definition in a circle should be grafted from the Dayabhaga on Mitakshara. In any case, there was nothing to prevent the Judicial Committee from holding that as a special proprietary right given to women by a special text of law this particular right might very well be looked upon as eiusdem generis with the kinds of stridhana enumerated by texts.

There can be no question that any interpretation of the law which would make this property stridhana would not only be consonant with the principles laid down in the Mitakshara but entirely conformable to public policy. The policy of our Courts should be to expand and not to restrict the proprietary rights of women so far as possible. In the history of Hindu law in the midst of a world of uncertainties the progressive evolution of the proprietary rights of women stands out in bold relief. The decisions of the Judicial Committee in the cases referred to have taken a retrograde step and restricted the rights of women to a considerable extent. It would be a pity to think that it should be under the British rule that the progressive evolution of women's rights would not only be stopped but set back. It is surely necessary that in these respects the law should be set right.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Victor v. Victor. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND FARWELL. 11th December 1911.

Contractual obligation of husband to pay maintenance to wife provable in bankruptcy—An order of discharge in bankruptcy—Its effect upon such obligations between husband and wife.

This was an appeal from a decision of Darling, J. The Respondent, a married woman, sued her husband for arrears of maintenance under a covenant in a separation deed. The Defendant pleaded that he was adjudicated a bankrupt and was afterwards discharged and was not therefore liable. The Court below held that the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, did not alter the obligation of a man towards his wife and ruled against him. The Court allowed the appeal. In the course of his judgment the Master of the Rolls said:—

It might suffice to say that he thought that it was not open to the Court to take Mr. Justice Darling's view, having regard to the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Bates (11 Ch. D., 914) and in Ex parte Neal (14 Ch. D., 579). Both those cases arose under separation deeds, and the view of the Court was that, however difficult it might be to measure the liability incurred by the husband, still it was a liability which had to be estimated and, if it could not be estimated in any other way, must be left to a jury to estimate. Mr. Vaughan Williams, who had said everything that could possibly be said on behalf of the Plaintiff, did not really attempt to dispute the Appellant's argument on that point, but he contended that questions of public policy came in, that in both the cases referred to the wife had elected to come in and prove in the bankruptcy, and that the decisions were of no force so far as they purported to bind a wife who did not desire to come in. His Lordship could not follow that contention. It seemed to him that the whole policy of the Bankruptcy Act was that the bankrupt was to get a full discharge from his obligations to pay sums of money, and that the only right of a person who under a contract had a pecuniary claim against the bankrupt was to come in and prove in the bankruptcy. The extent to which that doctrine had been carried was illustrated by the case of Hardy v. Fothersgill (13 App. Cas., 351), in which it was held that a future and contingent liability, however difficult to assess, was provable in bankruptcy.

In the present case he was clearly of opinion that the contractual obligation of the husband was provable in the bankruptcy, and that being so, no action could be maintained by the wife either for arrears or future payments. He on wished to say one word about Linton v. Lint (15 Q. B. D., 239), which was a claim for alimony. That case was entirely different. Alimony was paid under an order of the Divorce Court, which might be varied from time to time. The Court had held by decisions, which were binding on the Court of Appeal, that that was a peculiar liability and had distinguished it from the liability under a separation deed.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLLAND and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No 211 OF 1912. IN THE MATTER OF KUDRUTULLA AND OTHERS, Petitioners. 4th March 1912.

Penal Code, sec. 149—Charge—Necessity setting out the common object—De novo trial Omission, effect of.

This Rule was issued on the grounds inter alia that the charge was defective as no common object was specified therein and that there should have been a de novo trial, when a different Magistrate had to try the case after it had proceeded to some extent before another Magistrate. It appears on the application of the accused the District Magistrate transferred the case to another Magistrate who proceeded to try the case from the point where it was left by the first Magistrate.

Their Lordships observed:—

"The law is clear that as regards the offence of rioting the offence can be legally described by its specific name and the question whether any further particulars are necessary under sec. 22 Cr. P. C., must be a question of discretion according to the circumstances of each case. It has been laid down in numerous rulings of the Court that in cases of rioting the common object should be stated in the charge, but the omission to state it under secs. 143 and 147 do not vitiate a conviction if there is evidence on the record to show it * * * * * We think as a matter of law it is otherwise with charge under sec. 149, I. P. C. There is no specific name for the offence and the fact that any offence is committed in prosecution of the common object is of the essence of the case and there could be no conviction for any offence committed with a different common object. It Therefore in our opinion obligatory to set out the common object in a charge under sec. 149 unless has been already specified in the main charge under sec. 147."

As regards the de novo trial their Lordships served it was a question of prejudice and unless was proved that the accused were prejudiced, the conviction should not be set aside on that ground.

Their Lordships referred to 12 All. 66; 12 C. N. 416; 13 C. W. N. 420; 12 C. W. N. 140; W. R. Cr. 12.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 50 OF 1912. AMO RAI AND OTHERS, Petitioners. 1st March 1912.

Prosecution evidence mostly disbelieved—Whether conviction could be based upon so much as was against the accused.

This Rule was issued on the grounds, firstly, that the judgment of the Appellate Court was not in accordance with law inasmuch as it says that Court had no hesitation in accepting so much of the prosecution evidence as went against the accused and, secondly, that so much of the evidence having been disbelieved it became necessary for the High Court to consider whether there should be any conviction at all in the case.

Their Lordships observed:— * * * "The Magistrate disbelieved the greater part of the evidence and he acted in a wholly unjudicial manner in finding that he has no hesitation in accepting so much of the prosecution evidence as goes against the accused. The evidence which is entirely disbelieved was so extensive that we cannot do not think that there was any just ground for any conviction at all in this case * * *"

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 3 OF 1912. KING EMEMPOR v. KALIMUDI SARDAR AND OTHERS, Accused. 28th February 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 307—Verdict of jury upheld though different view could be taken of the evidence.

This was a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Calcutta who disagreeing with the verdict of "not guilty" of the jury, made a reference to the High Court under sec. 307, Cr. P. C.

Their Lordships observed:—

There were circumstances in the case on which the jury would be justified in entertaining doubts as to the matters connected with the first information. There was grave cause for suspicion and the view taken by the Sessions Judge might conceivably be correct, but still it could not be said that the jury were not justified in their view of the case.

Verdict of the jury upheld and accused acquitted.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 70 OF 1912. SURENDRA MOHAN RAI, Petitioner v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 23rd February 1912.

Arms Act, sec. 14—Using a gun lent by its licensed owner.

This was a case under sec. 14 of the Arms Act.

Their Lordships observed:—

"It appears that he (the Petitioner) was a friend of the owner of the gun, and whether the owner of the gun intended to join him or not in shooting, he certainly must have made over the gun to him to take along in the boat; and the offence which the Petitioner is found to have committed is that he put the guns together and loaded one barrel apparently with a view to shoot birds if any appeared. . . . The law is perfectly clear that no person shall have in his possession or under his control any fire arms except under a license and in the manner and to the extent permitted thereby. Now this particular license does not permit the owner to lend his gun to any other person for the purpose of shooting as some licenses do we understand. A technical offence was therefore committed but we think that a fine of ten rupees would be quite sufficient to act as a warning."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and CARNDUFF, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 95 OF 1910 and RULE No. 4178 OF 1909. SUNDRA MOHINI DEBI, Appellant and Petitioner v. SHIB COOMARI DEBI AND OTHERS, Respondents and Opposite Party. 22nd February 1912.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 311—Decree-holder and judgment-debtor, compomise between—Sale, setting aside of—Auction-purchaser, if necessary party.

A suit was brought by Shib Coomari Debi, who was described in the present Rule as the Opposite Party against other persons, who were also parties to the Rule or against their previous representatives-in-interest, for the recovery of the rent of a certain durputni. Shib Coomari obtained an ex parte decree, and the durputni was sold in satisfaction of that decree on the 12th June 1907, and purchased by the Petitioner in the Rule, Sundra Mohini Debi, who was the wife of the Opposite Party, Jnanendra Nath Chattopadhyaya. On the 21st July 1907, an application was made under sec. 311 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, by Debendra Nath Chattopadhyaya, Opposite Party, and, on the same date, three other judgment-debtors filed a similar application. The three last-mentioned persons also filed an application under sec. 108 of the old Code to have the ex parte decree set aside. On the 4th January 1908, the application came up for disposal, and a petition of compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors was filed, by which the decree-holder consented to the sale being set aside on receipt of the amount decreed. The application under sec. 108 was also dismissed on the same day. These proceedings were taken without notice to the auction-purchaser and the case which was set up by the auction-purchaser, who was the Petitioner in the Rule, was that she was not aware of those proceedings. On the 27th March 1908, the Petitioner put in an application under sec. 312, C. P. C., asking that the sale to her might be confirmed and the sale certificate issued. That application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that the sale, having already been set aside, could not be confirmed. Against that order there was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court, which remanded the case. The Court of first instance again rejected the application and the District Judge dismissed the appeal against that order. The auction-purchaser first applied to the High Court and obtained the Rule. Subsequently she also filed an appeal against the same order.

Held—That no appeal lay.

Held—Also, that the auction-purchaser was not a necessary party to an application under sec. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and CARNDUFF, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1079 OF 1908. MAINDI SARKAR AND ANOTHER, Appellants v. GORACHAND GHOSE AND OTHERS, Respondents. 27th February 1912.

Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 332—Suit for possession of immovable property—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. Arts. 11, 13, 120, 142.

An order was passed in favour of the appellants under sec. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the 7th August 1897, and the present suit was instituted on the 16th December 1905. It was contended that the suit was barred under the provisions of Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, because it was not brought within 6 years from the date of the order passed under sec. 332.

Held—That as the suit was brought by the Plaintiff for possession of immovable property after establishment of title, the limitation was provided by Art. 142 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, and not by Art. 120.

Art. 11, Sch. II of the Limitation Act has application to an order under sec. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the provisions of sec. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit which the Opposite Party had to bring, was a suit to establish his right to the property, and not a suit to set aside the order under sec. 332. Hence Art. 13, Sch. II of the Limitation Act cannot apply.

information which the Police officer cannot be compelled to disclose. Now it cannot be said that any of these sections applies to the statements of these witnesses. Clearly they are not unpublished records relating to any affairs of State. Sec. 123 has been held to apply to the deliberations of the Parliament, proceedings of the Privy Council, communication between public officials in the discharge of public duty and the like, and not even Government remarks with regard to the conduct of public officials have been considered to be strictly privileged, so that the statements made by witnesses before the departmental superior of the accused cannot possibly be considered to be unpublished records relating to any affairs of State. The permission of the District Superintendent was not therefore in any way necessary for the production of these papers; and if any permission had been necessary that permission would have been that of the Inspector-General of Police of the Province and not of any local superior.

Then as regards sec. 124 it cannot be said that when witnesses come before a Police officer and make accusations against one of his subordinates that those communications are made in official confidence so that when the accused is on his trial he cannot ask to know what his accusers say. It seems to us that the public interest would suffer much more by the concealment of these statements than by their disclosure.

Sec. 125 obviously has no application. It is not pretended that those statements were the source from which the District Superintendent obtained his information that any offence had been committed.

The statements not being privileged the Magistrate was bound to call for them under sec. 162 of the Evidence Act, and to have allowed the accused to cross-examine the witnesses under sec. 155 on the statements made whether they were in favour of the accused or against him. As the provisions of sec. 163 clearly entitle the prosecution to make use of them if they turn out to be not in favour of the defence the danger which the Magistrate appears to apprehend in his explanation does not really exist.

The Rule must be made absolute and the lower Court must take steps to have the documents referred to in para. 7 of the petition produced, and the determination of the trial will be postponed until this is done, and the Magistrate has fully considered the effect of the answers made by the witnesses upon cross-examination on these documents, when he should hear the parties and proceed to decide the case in accordance with law. In the meantime the Petitioners will remain on the same bail.

Crown debt, prerogative if any in respect of, if first charge on debtor's property—"Common person's" claim not concurring if to be postponed to claims for Crown debt—Suit by Mahomedan wife in forma pauperis for dower—Court-fees, decree against husband in favour of Government for payment of—Prior mortgage by husband—Crown and mortgagee, priority as between—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 411.

After a mortgagee had obtained his decree for sale, the wife of the mortgagor who was a Mahomedan sued him and the mortgagee in forma pauperis for recovery of a sum of money as her dower, alleging that it was charged on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgage; it was found that there was no charge for the dower and the suit was dismissed as against the mortgagee but decreed against the husband; it was further declared that the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by the wife had she not been allowed to sue as a pauper should be a first charge on the amount decreed to her and also be recoverable from her husband. The Government purported to attach and sell the mortgaged property in execution of that decree and it was purchased by the Appellant. The mortgagee subsequently had the property sold in execution of his decree and purchased it himself:

Held—That Government had no right to attach and sell the property in execution of the decree against the mortgagor, though such interest, if any, as remained in the mortgagor from whom the Court-fees were declared to be recoverable might have been reached by a proper proceeding.

That the first sale was without jurisdiction and passed no title to the Appellant.

That no question of priority of Crown debts arose in the case. It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of common persons concur or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. But the Crown has no more right than a "common person" to seize one man's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from another.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad, dated 2nd December 1908, which affirmed a decree of the Court of Small Causes exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge at Allahabad, dated 19th September 1906.

The suit, which was decreed with costs by the first Court, was brought by the present Respondents as Plaintiffs against Mahabir Prasad Narain Singh, since deceased, and now represented by the Appellants, who are the son, grandsons, and great-grandsons of the deceased Defendant, for possession of certain zemindari shares specified in Sch. A attached to the plaint, and for declaration of title to certain other zemindari shares specified in Sch. B, with mesne profits and interest thereon.

The material facts of the case are as follows:—One Tufail Ali Khan, the original owner of the property in dispute, mortgaged it to the Plaintiffs by four mortgage deeds executed between the years 1891 and 1894, securing the aggregate amount of Rs. 15,000. The Plaintiffs obtained a decree for sale on foot of their mortgages on the 17th December 1895, but before the decree was executed, Mussammat Abhasi Begum, the wife of the mortgagor, instituted a suit in forma pauperis on the 19th December 1896 against her husband, the mortgagor, and the Plaintiffs for sale of the property in dispute under a kabinnama (deed of dower), dated the 20th November 1862, whereby the husband promised to pay the wife a prompt dower of rupees one lakh and one gold mohur, and charged the same on the property in dispute. The Court of first instance found that this deed being unstamped and unregistered was inadmissible in evidence, and created no charge on the property. On these findings it gave a simple money decree against the husband alone, dismissing the suit against the mortgagees. In regard to the Court-fees payable on the plaint, the decree of the Court contained the following order:—"It is further ordered that Rs. 1,450-8-0, the amount of Court-fee due to the Government, shall be the first charge on the amount decreed, and shall also be recoverable from the Defendant, Tufail Ali Khan." This decree was affirmed on appeal by the High Court.

On the 11th December 1897, the Collector of Allahabad on behalf of the Government applied for execution of the decree to recover Rs. 1,450-8-0 "on account of Court-fees due to the Government" by attachment and sale of the zemindari property of the judgment-debtor. In this application Tufail Ali Khan was named as the person against whom the enforcement of the decree was sought, and the details of the property sought to be attached and sold comprised the zemindari shares mortgaged to the Plaintiffs. The property being ancestral, execution of the decree was transferred to the Collector under the provisions of sec. 320 of Act XIV of 1882. The shares specified in the application for execution were sold on the 22nd July 1899, and purchased by Mahabir Prasad Narain Singh. An application was then made by Tufail Ali Khan to the Collector to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in the conduct thereof, and the inadequacy of price. The Plaintiffs' mortgagees were not impleaded as parties to this application, but it appears that the Collector gave them notice and ordered them to appear on the date fixed for hearing. It further appears that the mortgagees did in fact appear by pleader at the hearing. The Collector rejected Tufail Ali Khan's application on the 20th August 1899, holding that there had been no irregularity in the conduct of the sale. As to the mortgagees' claim to priority the Collector observed:—"The ruling in the Collector of Moradabad v. Mohammad Diam Khan (1) clearly affirms the principle that the Government takes precedence of all other creditors, whether or not they have a lien on the property," and added that "Mewa Lal must take what legal steps he can to assert his rights." The sale was accordingly confirmed on the 29th of August 1899, and a certificate of sale issued to Mahabir Prasad Narain Singh on the 19th September 1899. Tufail Ali Khan appealed from the Collector's order of the 20th August 1899, to the Commissioner, who by his order of the 25th October 1899 held that "the sale having taken place in satisfaction of a Crown debt, it took effect against the Plaintiffs' mortgage."

On the 25th November 1899, Mewa Lal and Lachmi Narain applied for sale of the same property in execution of their decree. Mahabir Prasad Narain Singh objected, but his objection was disallowed on the ground that it could not be entertained under sec. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The execution proceedings were transferred to the Collector under sec. 320 of the said Code.

On receipt of the record the Collector made a reference to the Subordinate Judge, asking "whether it was in fact intended that the property should be sold over again?" The Collector observed that "the decree-holders in this case cannot apparently have a prior claim, as Government claims have a priority over others." The Subordinate Judge returned the following reply to the Collector's enquiry on the 21st July 1900 :—

"In reference to the enquiry and observation, I think when once a decree is passed, it must be executed unless and until it is set aside or it becomes inexecutable by lapse of limitation period. It cannot be for the Court to create obstacles on its own motion. The Court is not yet called upon to determine any such point of priority or otherwise. If the actual purchaser, Rai Bahadur Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh, should institute a suit against these decree-holders and obtain a decree from the Civil Court declaring that these several items of property could not be sold in execution of the decree of Mewa Lal and others, then only the execution of the decree of Mewa Lal and others would not proceed. But as yet Rai Bahadur Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh has not even instituted any such suit."

The sale in execution of the decree of Mewa Lal and Lachmi Narain was held on the 20th September 1902, and the decree-holders were declared purchasers. The sale being duly confirmed by the Collector on the 22nd October 1902, a certificate of sale was granted to the purchasers on the 29th October 1902.

Under the previous sale of the 22nd July 1899, Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh had obtained possession of the property in dispute, and his name had been recorded in the revenue papers as owner. After the purchase of the 20th September 1902, Mewa Lal and Lachmi Narain applied to the Assistant Collector for the entry of their own names by expungement of the name of Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh. This application was rejected by the Assistant Collector on the 23rd November 1903, and his order was affirmed on appeal by the Collector on the 11th February 1904, and on revision by the Commissioner on the 30th May 1904. An application to the Commissioner to reconsider his order was rejected on the 14th September 1904. On the 8th May 1906, Mewa Lal and Lachmi Narain instituted the present suit on the ground that "by virtue of purchase made at an auction-sale held on the 22nd of July 1899, the Defendant had only acquired the equity of redemption of Tufail Ali Khan, but it was extinguished on the said property being resold and purchased by the Plaintiffs. The Defendant is in unlawful possession of the zemindari shares specified in Sch. A, and as regards the zemindari share specified in Sch. B, he denies the Plaintiffs' right to it." The defence inter alia was that Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh having purchased the property at a sale held to satisfy a debt of the Crown, purchased it free of all incumbrances; that the whole property having thus passed to the said Mahabir Parshad Narain Singh on the 22nd July 1899, the Plaintiffs purchased nothing at the subsequent sale of the 20th September 1902, and that in any case the suit was barred by the provisions of secs. 244 and 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Judge of the Court of first instance laid down nine issues for trial. He recorded findings on all the issues, and in the result decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. As to the effect of the two sales he held "that the sale to the Defendant did not extinguish the Plaintiffs' prior mortgages; that all he purchased was Tufail Ali Khan's equity of redemption, and that having failed to redeem the property and allowed it to be sold, he could not now claim to keep it as against the Plaintiffs, who were purchasers on a prior mortgage, and that even if a claim of Government for Court-fee be held to be a Crown debt, it did not affect the existing incumbrances upon the debtor's land." As to secs. 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure he found as follows :—

"This suit is not barred by either sec. 13 or 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the Plain'iffs had no reason to object, and did not object to the sale which took place in the Government's claim for Court-fee on the 22nd July 1899. The order of confirmation of the sale, whether by the Collector or the Commissioner, was also passed not against them, but against Tufail Ali Khan, and they as mortgagees were in no sense representatives of the latter."

The Defendants appealed to the High Court at Allahabad. At the hearing of the appeal the two main points argued were, 1st, that the Defendants-Appellants having purchased the property at a sale for the realisation of Court-fees, acquired an absolute title to it discharged of any right which the Plaintiffs, mortgagees, had under their mortgages, and, 2ndly, that the suit was barred by secs. 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the 1st contention the learned Judges (Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J.) dismissing the appeal observed as follows :—

"It appears to us that there is no substance in the contention. The Appellants purchased pendente lite, and in effect purchased nothing, as the mortgagor's equity of redemption passed to the Plaintiffs under the sale made to them by the Court. The appeal is in fact concluded by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dost Muhammad Khan v. Mani Ram (2)."

On the second point also the learned

Chief Justice found against the Defendants-Appellants on the authority of Wilayati Begam v. Nand Kishore (3).

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Ross and Mr. Brown for the Appellants.—The sale, dated the 22nd July 1899, to the Appellants is binding on the Respondents unless and until it is set aside. It was properly confirmed and a certificate in due form was granted, and possession was obtained by the Appellants. The sale could be set aside within one year and the Respondents not having done that the claim is barred by limitation. Malkurjun v. Narhari (4).

The Respondents having taken no steps to set aside the Collector's order of the 29th August 1899 by appeal or otherwise are bound by it. The Respondents were substantially parties to the proceedings before the Collector. Further the Defendants purchased the equity of redemption which was lost when the sale, dated the 22nd July 1899, was held. Sec. 89, Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applies. On the sale being confirmed the equity of redemption was extinguished. Faiyaz Husain v. Prag Narain (5). The sale was not made pendente lite within the meaning of sec. 52, Transfer of Property Act. When the sale was made to the Respondents the Appellants were not upon the record. They held the legal estate and were in possession. These rights could not be taken away from them without being party to the sale proceedings. Sec. 372, Civil Procedure Code, 1882.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad, which affirmed a decree of the Court of Small Causes there exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge.

The suit was brought by the Respondents, Mewa Lal and Lachmin Narain, to recover property of which they had been deprived through the intervention of a Government official who attached it and got it sold in order to satisfy a debt due to Government from somebody else.

The facts are undisputed.

On the 17th of December 1895, the Respondents, who were mortgagees of shares in seven villages belonging to their mortgagor one Tufail Ali Khan, obtained the usual decree for sale. The 17th of April 1896 was the date fixed for payment of principal, interest, and costs which amounted in all to Rs. 19,290-9-6. The mortgagor made default. On the 23rd of April 1896, the mortgagees applied for an order absolute. The order was drawn up on the 16th of May following. On the 24th of March 1897, an application was made for execution of the decree by sale of the mortgaged property, and on the 26th of April 1897 the execution case was transferred to the Collector's Court as the property was ancestral. The decree came into the hands of the sale officer on the 8th of July 1897.

In the meantime, the wife of the mortgagor brought a suit in forma pauperis against her husband, Tufail Ali Khan, and the Respondents, claiming from her husband a lakh of rupees under a contract of dower, and alleging that that sum was charged on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgages, the subject of the decree of the 17th of December 1895. On the 11th of May 1897, the suit was decreed with costs against Tufail Ali Khan, but dismissed with costs as against his mortgagees, and it was ordered that the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by the Plaintiff had she not been allowed to sue as pauper should be the first charge on the amount decreed to the Plaintiff, and should also be recoverable from the Defendant, Tufail Ali Khan.

The order as regards the Court-fees payable to Government was in accordance with the directions of sec. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, as to pauper suits. That section is in the following terms:—

"411. If the Plaintiff succeed in the suit, the Court shall calculate the amount of the Court-fees which would have been paid by the Plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper; and such amount shall be a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit, and shall also be recoverable by the Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, in the same manner as costs of suit are recoverable under this Code."

There was an appeal to the High Court but it was dismissed with costs.

So the Respondents succeeded in preserving the priority of their encumbrances and in maintaining the decree of the 17th of December 1895. With this success all their troubles began. The Collector on behalf of Government applied for and obtained execution of the decree of the 11th of May 1897 not against Tufail Ali Khan against whom the suit was decreed, but against the mortgaged property, in regard to which the suit failed. That execution case was also sent to the Collector's Court. It was received by the Sale Officer, on the 18th of February 1898, more than six months after the receipt of the decree of the 17th of December 1895. However, the Sale Officer fixed one and the same day, the 22nd of July 1899, for sale in both cases. And when the day of sale came he put the property up for sale under the decree of the 11th of May 1897, and it was sold to Rai Bahadur, the father of the Appellants, for Rs. 1,529, an amount just sufficient to satisfy the claim of the Government.

The mortgagees' decree was returned to the Civil Court with a statement that no property was left for sale in connection with that decree. In taking this course the Sale Officer, according to the opinion of the Collector, acted legally. Possibly, said the Collector, he might have put the property up for sale under the mortgagees' decree, "proclaiming at the same time the debt due to Government as an encumbrance to be satisfied by the purchaser," but there was no material irregularity. In the Collector's opinion the authorities clearly affirmed "the principle that the Government takes precedence of all other creditors, whether or not they have a lien on the property."

At the instance of the mortgagees the Civil Court directed that the property should be put up for sale again under the decree of the 17th of December 1895.

Ultimately the mortgagees bought it for Rs. 18,365. They obtained formal possession. But it seems that Rai Bahadur had already obtained possession under his sale certificate. Both parties then exerted themselves to collect rents. Then followed a struggle for mutation of names. The Assistant Collector dismissed an application for that purpose by the mortgagees, blaming them for trying to avoid payment of the Government dues "instead of quietly paying off" the Court-fees and getting the property sold in satisfaction of their large debt. After a learned argument he held that the wording of sec. 411, Civil Procedure Code, was clear that the Government dues were the first charge on the property, and that Rai Bahadur had consequently a preferential claim. Then the mortgagees appealed to the Collector. He took the same view, after argument, though he confessed that he "had not hitherto realised that the position of the Crown in such matters was so strong." Lastly, the mortgagees applied to the Commissioner on second appeal. He, too, rejected their application, in the first instance on reading the record, and then on an application for revision after hearing the parties at considerable length, who "argued as to the equity and legal rights of the case." As to the merits he pronounced no opinion. He thought it essentially a case for the Civil Court. But, he added, that until the question was determined by a competent Court he did "not think that any fairer decision could be come to than that at which the Collector arrived."

So at last the mortgagees betook them to the Civil Court, to which they ought to have applied long before in a regular suit. The Judge of First Instance ordered that the Respondents should be put in possession of the property, and declared that they were the absolute owners. An appeal to the High Court was dismissed with costs. But the learned Judges, after argument, came to the conclusion that there was a substantial question of law involved, and gave leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships are at a loss to discover what question of law is involved in this case. So far as can be gathered from the judgments in the Collector's Court, the validity of the sale to Rai Bahadur was rested on two grounds (1) on the terms of sec. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the decree of the 11th of May 1897, and (2) on the prerogative of the Crown. As to the first point, the claim put forward on behalf of the Government is absurd. The decree of the 11th of May 1897 did not create or purport to create any charge on the mortgaged property in favour of the Government. The Government had no right to attach the property and sell it in execution under that decree, though, of course, such interest, if any, as remained in the mortgagor from whom the Court-fees were declared to be recoverable, might have been reached by a proper proceeding. The order for the first sale was, therefore, without jurisdiction. The sale passed no property to the person declared purchaser. On the second point the claim advanced by the Collector on behalf of the Government is a preposterous claim. It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of "common persons" (to use an old expression) "concur" or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. The Crown has no more right than a "common person" to seize A's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from B. That is not a question of law. It is a matter of common justice, and it may be added, of common honesty.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

No. 41 OF 1911.

RANJIT LAL KARMAKAR
JENKINS, C. J. Defendant, Appellant,
WOODROFFE, J. v.
1912, BIJOY KRISHNA
14, February. KARMAKAR, Plaintiff,
Respondent.

Hindu Law—Bengal school—Adoption—Preferential right to adopt as between senior and junior widows—Anumatipatra—Construction—Simultaneous or successive adoptions.

In Bengal as in Bombay, as between co-widows, the senior, that is to say, she whose marriage was earlier, has the preferential right to adopt; the adoption by a junior widow, though earlier in point of time, is void where she adopted without even seeking the senior widow's consent.

*Where a Hindu executed an anumati-patra as follows :—"In favour of the first wife B. S. and the second wife S. B. * * * I am giving permission that when I shall be no more, each of my two wives shall be at liberty to act according to their own religious tenets by adopting three sons successively, that is one after another."*

Held—That the anumati-patra did not contemplate simultaneous adoption by the widows but successive adoption in accordance with the rules of law.

The proper canon of construction to apply to the instrument is that the Court would consider that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was, if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practised among Hindus.

AKHOY CHANDER BAGCHI v. KALAPAHAR HAJI (1) followed.

This was an appeal preferred by the Defendant from the decree of Stephen, J., sitting on the Original Side, made in favour of the Plaintiff on 17th May 1911.

The facts material to this report appear in the judgment of Stephen, J., which ran as follows :—

STEPHEN, J.—The question I have to decide in this case is which of two adoptions is legal. The facts are simple and, if I accept all the evidence that has been given before me, are as follows:—One Shib Krishna Karmakar, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, and a Sudra by caste, died on the 29th November 1903 leaving two widows, Biraja Sundari, the senior and Sashibala Dasee, the junior. The day before his death he executed an anumatipatra, the translation of which is as follows: "Anumatipatra for taking adopted son is executed to the following effect by Sri Shib Krishna Karmakar, father's name the late Ramkrishna Karmakar, by occupation gold and silversmith, inhabitant of Sabhor, in favour of the first wife Sreemuty Biraja Sundari Dasee and the second wife Shashibala Dasee. I am now ailing, having been attacked with cholera. There is no knowing what may happen to the transient body. I have no son of my loins, although, in the hope of perpetuating the generation, I have married two wives successively, but up till now no son has been born. Consequently by this anumatipatra I am giving permission in writing that when I shall be no more, each of my two wives shall be at liberty to act according to their own religious tenets by adopting three sons successively, that is one after another. It is also permitted that each of my wives shall live in my ancestral dwelling-house with her adopted son. On the other hand, if she goes to live in another place with her adopted son, she shall not have any right to the moveable and immoveable properties to be left by me." Acting under the power conferred on her by this instrument, Shashibala, the younger widow, adopted the Defendant on the 13th April 1905. Biraja Sundari, the elder widow, subsequently, that is, on the 9th March 1908, adopted the Plaintiff, for whom she is acting as next friend in the present suit. This suit is brought to have it declared that the adoption of the Defendant is void and inoperative, and that the Plaintiff has been validly adopted. The Plaintiff has satisfactorily proved that his adoption was performed in a valid and regular manner, and it is not sought to impugn its validity on any ground except that the Defendant had been previously adopted, a point which it is admitted is conclusive if it is substantiated. The Plaintiff does not admit that the earlier adoption was satisfactorily proved, alleging that the circumstances of the adoption are so suspicious that I ought not to accept such evidence as there is of the identity of the adopting woman with Shashibala. He also argues, supposing that the earlier adoption was regular in point of form, the younger widow had no power to adopt till the elder widow had refused to adopt. The Plaintiff bases his legal argument on the decision in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (5). In that case the deceased husband gave no power to adopt, but by the law prevalent in Bombay it was held that a widow had a right to adopt, and the senior widow had a right to adopt without the consent of the junior. This case was followed in Amava v. Mahadgauda (6), and was approved of in Mondakini Dassi v. Adinath Dey (4), where it was held that, when a power was given to two widows to adopt a particular person, the younger widow had power to adopt on the refusal of the elder to do so.

These cases do not, it will be observed, completely cover the present, but they recognise the prior claims of the senior widow in a way that suggests that where two widows have a power to adopt, the general rule is that the senior widow has a right to exercise her power of adoption before the junior one does so. In the text-books it is laid down that the junior widow cannot adopt without the consent of the senior widow, unless the latter is leading an irregular life; see Mayne, para. 118, and West and Bühler, Bk. iii, s. iii, B 3; 16, p. 976. Counsel for the Defendant does not deny that the law is so, as far as Bombay is concerned, but suggests that the law is not the same in Bengal. This contention seems to me to be baseless, particularly in a case like the present, where there seems to be no difference in the classes of the husband and the two widows, for the law laid down in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (5), depends ultimately on the text quoted from Vishnu in Art. XLIX of Book IV of Colebrook's Digest, and perhaps on that quoted from Dackshaiyana, Art. LI, and both of these writers are, I understand, of as much authority in Bengal as they are in Bombay. In addition to this, counsel for the Defendant has not attempted to show me any authority for the rule which he suggests applies, namely, that the first adoption should prevail, whichever widow adopts, a rule the demerits of which I need not discuss.

The result is, that I hold that, apart from the terms of the anumatipatra, the junior widow had no right to adopt before the senior widow had refused to do so.

As to the terms of the anumatipatra, a consideration of their contents only makes the Plaintiff's case stronger. It is to be observed that in the Bombay cases there was no specific authority to adopt. In Bengal, of course, there must be such an authority, and in this case it is the anumatipatra that I have quoted. It is suggested by the Defendant that that instrument gives a power to the two widows to adopt simultaneously, and that, as I understand the argument, the whole deed is therefore bad, as simultaneous adoptions are illegal. The proper construction of the document seems to me, however, to be quite contrary to this view. According to the decision in Akhoy Chunder Bagchi v. Kalapahar Haji (1), which is also the authority for saying that simultaneous adoptions are illegal, as also by the general rules of construction, I must read the anumatipatra as enjoining something in accordance with the law if I can. If it leaves the power to adopt to be decided by the question of which widow adopts first, it may sanction a simultaneous adoption. I therefore hold that it did not have this effect; but left the power of adoption to be exercised according to the general law, and enforced this by indicating which was the senior and which the junior widow: that its effect was to give a power of adoption to the two widows successively, and that under the terms used the junior widow had no power to adopt till the senior widow had exhausted her right or refused to use it. The terms of the document will fully bear this construction; and it probably accords with the testator's intention.

The Defendant appealed.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Mr. I. B. Sen) for the Appellant, submitted that the evidence and the pleadings left no doubt as to the identification of Shashibala as being the person who took the Appellant in adoption on 13th April 1905. The law in Bengal and the law in Bombay are different. In Bengal a widow's right to adopt depends upon the assent of her lord which must be express. In Bombay where the husband died separated from the joint family and the widow herself is the heir or she and a junior widow are heirs, the widow may adopt without express sanction of husband and without the sanction of his kindred. Ramji v. Ghamau (2). In Bombay where there are several widows, the senior alone may adopt without the assent of the junior but the junior cannot without the assent of the senior Padajirav v. Ramrav (3). The reason given in Padajirav v. Ramrav (3) for the senior widow's preferential right is that she is the patni. There is no authority for the proposition that the senior wife alone is patni, even where the senior and the junior belong to the same class. Nor is there any authority for the proposition that a man can have but one patni though several wives. The texts Dacksha in Jaganath's Digest, Book IV, Art. 51, to the effect that "the first is the wife married from a sense of duty; the second promotes sensual gratification; sensible not moral effects proceed from her" cannot apply to the present case of a Sudra-woman, who, as the anumatipatra says, was married from a sense of duty as the first wife turned out barren. The text of Vishnu in Jagannath's Digest, Book IV, Art. 49, as also the text of Yajnavalkya apply only to twice-born castes not to Sudras referred to the religious disability of the Sudra. In Bombay the senior widow's right to adopt is not merely preferential but exclusive. Mondakini v. Adinath (4) shows that in Bengal the senior widow's right to adopt is certainly not exclusive and that the junior widow by adoption against the wishes of the senior where the senior has refused to adopt, can divest the estate of the senior widow. And this though the authority to adopt is merely permissive and never mandatory in the eye of law. The Calcutta decision favours much more than the Bombay decisions the equality of rights of two widows where both are authorised and practically reduces to a nullity the senior widow's option recognised in Bombay, to adopt or not to adopt. The Plaintiff has failed to establish the senior widow's preferential and exclusive right to adopt in Bengal.

The anumatipatra contemplates two adopted sons at the same time. "Each of my wives shall live in my ancestral dwelling-house "with her adopted son" can have but one meaning, namely, that there should be two sons to two mothers, one to each mother. "If she goes to live in another place with her adopted son, she shall not have any right to the moveable and immoveable properties to be left by me" can only mean that Shib Krishna intended that the other adopted son would get the property in such an event. The intention of Shib Krishna was clearly expressed and he contemplated two adopted sons—one by each widow. An authority contemplating simultaneous adoption is invalid.

Mr. B. C. Mitter (with him Mr. N. N. Sircar) was not called on.

JENKINS, C. J.—The Plaintiff, who is the Respondent before us, has brought this suit against the Defendant to have it declared that the alleged adoption of the Defendant is void and inoperative in law. The case was heard before Mr. Justice Stephen who has pronounced a decree in the Plaintiff's favour. From that decree the present appeal has been preferred.

The points urged on behalf of the Defendant are two: first, he says that the document of authority under which the adoption both of the Plaintiff and himself purports to have been made is bad; and, secondly, that if it is good then his adoption and not the Plaintiff's is valid although made by the younger of the two widows of the deceased.

The facts are briefly these: one Shib Krishna Karmakar, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died on the 29th of November 1903, leaving two widows, Biraja Sundari Dasi and Sasibala Dasi, and no son. The day before his death he executed this authority to adopt in favour of his two widows. The junior widow, Sreematy Sasibala Dasi, purports to have adopted the Defendant on the 13th of April 1905, without even seeking the elder widow's consent. The elder widow purports to have adopted the Plaintiff on the 9th of March 1908: and it is in these circumstances that the contentions to which I have referred arise. The argument, by which the Defendant would annihilate his own position, is by contending that the deed of the power of adoption is inoperative. It is, in my opinion, one that cannot succeed. The document was executed under circumstances which may account for certain degrees of vagueness and uncertainty in its terms, and we are entitled to apply to it the canon of construction which has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Akhoy Chunder Bagchi v. Kalapahar Haji (1), where it was said at p. 202, in construing a document then before their Lordships, that they would consider that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was, if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practised amongst Hindus. It appears to me that it is a fair and reasonable interpretation to put on this document to say that it did not contemplate simultaneous adoption by the widows but successive adoption in accordance with the rules of law as now established and as established at the time when this document came into existence. Treating the document as a valid document, was the junior widow entitled to adopt without the consent of the senior widow or without even asking for that consent? Now, it is well-established in the Presidency of Bombay that, as between co-widows, it is the senior, that is to say, she whose marriage was earlier, who has the preferential right to adopt in circumstances like the present. Those decisions rest upon fundamental principles and on views of Hindu life and economy which appear to me to be fully applicable here. Any other view would merely lead to an unseemly scramble for the purpose of performing this solemn act. In my opinion, the decision of Mr. Justice Stephen is correct, and we must dismiss the appeal with costs. The reserved costs will be costs in the appeal.

Guradians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), orders apparently under, made without jurisdiction—Proceedings not had bonâ fide, orders in—Consent obtained by judicial pressure—Judge, no arbitrator.

One D died leaving a minor unmarried daughter by a predeceased wife and three widows. One R with a view to secure the marriage of his son with the girl (so that ultimately the property left by D might pass into the hands of the representatives of his own family) got the maternal grandfather of the girl, who was his servant, to apply for the appointment of himself as the guardian of the property and person of the minor, but no part of D's property had yet vested in her, the widows being according to Hindu law D's heirs. The widows objected to the application, but the District Judge having, owing to a misconception, passed orders directing that unless the widows placed their properties in charge of R he would remove the girl whom they dearly loved from their custody to that of the maternal grandfather, they were induced to grant a lease of the properties to R, after which they were made to present an application for the appointment of themselves as guardians of the person of the girl and they were formally appointed as guardians.

Held—That no guardianship was needed for the protection of the person of the girl and she had no property of which a possible guardian could take charge. The application of the widows for appointment as guardians of her person was not voluntary, and the application of the maternal grandfather was not made bonâ fide, and the orders passed by the Judge were without jurisdiction.

"Orders passed in proceedings so instituted and conducted, even if they were nominally in conformity with statutory provisions could hardly be regarded as invested with the efficacy of legal orders made in bonâ fide judicial proceedings."

That the Judge could not be deemed in this case to have acted as an arbitrator chosen by the parties voluntarily, the ladies having in fact acted under judicial pressure of the highest degree to which they were not as a position to offer effectual and successful resistance, and consequently LEDGARD v. The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This Appeal and Rule are directed against a series of orders under the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890, the validity whereof is assailed on the ground that they were made by the Court below wholly without jurisdiction.

It appears that one Dibakar Bhatta, a wealthy Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, left a daughter Bachhi Sahdei. The mother of this girl, Bunda Koer, who was the fourth wife of Dibakar Bhatta, had predeceased her husband; but her three co-wives Subhadra Koer, Ram Koer and Mahesha Koer, who are the Petitioners and Appellants before us, survived him. The case for these three ladies is that one Ramadin Chowdhury, a man of considerable wealth, who is the Opposite Party in the Rule and Respondent in the appeal, was anxious to secure the marriage of his own son with Bachhi, so that ultimately the estate of Dibakar Bhatta might pass into the hands of the representatives of his own family. The Petitioners assert that Dhajadhari, the maternal grandfather of Bachhi, was a servant of this Ramadin Chowdhury and was set up by him to make an application to the District Judge for appointment of himself as guardian of the person and property of the girl. It is necessary to state at this stage that the girl was possessed of no property ; she had no present interest in the estate left by her father Dibakar Bhatta, and was merely the reversionary heir, entitled to take the estate after the demise of all the three widows. The application of Dhajadhari was promptly opposed by the three widows. But it appears to have been represented to the District Judge in the course of these proceedings that the widows were under the control of two unscrupulous persons and that the life of the girl was in danger. No evidence, however, was taken at any stage of the proceedings and we have no definite information as to the character and antecedents of these persons, or the nature and extent of their influence upon the three ladies. However that may be, the District Judge deemed it imperatively necessary to place the girl in absolutely safe custody. To achieve this object, he thought it essential to remove the widows from the influence and control of those two persons, and concluded that the end might be attained if the ladies could be induced to place all their properties in the hands of Ramadin Chowdhury. With this object in view, the District Judge proceeded to pass a series of orders of an extraordinary character, which cannot possibly be justified under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act. It has not been disputed that it was not competent to the learned Judge to deal in any manner, directly or indirectly, with the estate vested in the ladies. The only matter before him was the question of the appointment of suitable person as guardian of the person of the infant, and also of her property, if, indeed, she had any property at all. The ladies, however, were obdurate, and refused at one stage to place their property in the hands of Ramadin Chowdhury as had been suggested by the District Judge. The learned Judge thereupon preceeded to record in the order-sheet more than one order to the effect that if the widows did not agree to the terms proposed by the Court, the minor, whom they dearly loved, would be taken away from their custody, and placed in the hands of her maternal grandfather who would be appointed guardian of her person. The learned counsel for the Petitioners has described the method pursued by the District Judge as judicial coercion, and there can be no room for reasonable doubt that, although he may have acted from the best of motives, his orders were wholly without authority, and he put pressure upon the widows in a manner never contemplated by the framers of the Guardians and Wards Act. The result was that the widows at last yielded to the pressure of the Judge. A Commissioner was appointed to make an estimate of the assets in their hands. The terms were arranged by the learned Judge himself, and ultimately a lease of the estate in the hands of the widows was granted by them to Ramadin Chowdhury. Finally, the widows were made to present an application for appointment of themselves as guardians of the person of their infant step-daughter. This application was granted and they were formally appointed guardians. But there is no room for reasonable doubt that this application was not voluntarily made ; the widows had throughout protested that the appointment of any guardian in respect of the person and property of Bachhi was wholly needless, and that the application of Dhajadhari in that behalf was not only not made bona fide for the benefit of the infant but had been made at the in stance of Ramadin Chowdhury to enable him to get the girl married to his own son and thus ultimately to seize the estate of Dibakar Bhatta. In this view of the matter, it is clear that the orders of the District Judge cannot be supported. The proceedings, from beginning to end, were a grievous misapplication of the provisions of the Statute. No guardian was needed for the protection of the person of the minor; she had no property of which a possible guardian could take charge. The machinery of the law was set in motion by Ramadin Chowdhury who induced his servant, the maternal grandfather of the infant, to make an application for appointment of himself as her guardian in order that she might be ultimately married to his son. Orders passed in proceedings so instituted and conducted, even if they were nominally in conformity with statutory provisions, could hardly be regarded as invested with the efficacy of legal orders made in bonâ fide judicial proceedings. The orders are wholly without jurisdiction and must be treated as absolutely null and void.

It has been suggested, however, by the learned Vakil who appeared to show cause that the District Judge acted as an arbitrator chosen by the parties and that his decision cannot consequently be challenged by them by way of appeal to this Court. This argument is wholly fallacious. No doubt, as ruled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ledgard v. Bull (1), if the parties have treated a Judge as their arbitrator and have submitted to his decision, even though he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in controversy, his decision is binding upon them as if it were the award of an arbitrator. It is plain, however, that this doctrine cannot possibly be applied to the circumstances of the case before us. The Judge cannot be deemed, by any fiction of law, to have been an arbitrator chosen by the parties voluntarily; the ladies acted under judicial pressure of the highest degree, to which they were not in a position to offer effective and successful resistance. It is difficult to appreciate how, under these circumstances, the orders of the learned Judge can be supported either as proper judicial orders or as the adjudications of an arbitrator to whose judgment the parties have voluntarily submitted the matters in controversy between them.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, and the Rule made absolute. All the orders of the Court below from the 3rd January 1911 to the 8th March 1911 are discharged as made without jurisdiction. The Appellants are entitled to their costs of this Court as also of the Court below from Ramadin Chowdhury who has been at the root of these extraordinary and mischievous proceedings. We assess the hearing-fee in the appeal at five gold mohurs and make no separate order for costs in the Rule.

Appeal allowed.

Rule made absolute.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec 43, sub-sec. (1), (2) and (4), sec. 45, sub-sec. (1)

SAHODRA KOER v. DHAJADHARI GOSAIN.

cl. (a)—Order upon guardian not to marry ward without Court's leave, disobedience of, if punishable, when order without jurisdiction—Order if may be passed when minor a Hindu—Guardian's failure to produce ward in Court—Guardian if may be fined—"Enforcement" of order, meaning of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 39, rr. 1 and 2.

Before proceedings can be taken on account of disobedience of an injunction issued by a Court, it must be ascertained that the Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter in controversy. If the Court had no jurisdiction over or had exceeded its powers in granting an injunction in matters beyond its jurisdiction, the injunction must be treated as absolutely void and the person who has disobeyed it cannot be punished for the alleged offence. There is in this respect a clear distinction between an order erroneously made with jurisdiction and an order made absolutely without jurisdiction.

Sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43 of the Guardians and Wards Act applies to all cases of disobedience of an order passed under sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (2) of that section, whether or not the effect of the disobedience is capable of removal or reparation.

Quære—Whether there is any bar to a District Judge giving directions in an order appointing a guardian of the person of a minor Hindu that the minor should not be married by the guardian without the consent of another relation and without the Court's leave, where the guardian appointed is also the guardian for marriage according to Hindu law.

BAI DIWALI v. MOTI KARSON (1) referred to.

Where it was found that the application upon which the order for appointment of a guardian was made was not made voluntarily :

(1) I. L. R. 22 Bom. 504 (1896).

Held—That the order was without jurisdiction and disobedience on the part of the guardian of the directions relating to the marriage of the minor could not be punished under sec. 43, cl. (4) of the Guardians and Wards Act like disobedience of an injunction.

Cl. (a) of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act does not contemplate orders on the guardian appointed under the Act for the production of the ward, and such a guardian cannot be fined under the section for failing to produce the ward before the Judge when required.

These were appeals preferred on the 20th of July 1911 against the orders of G. J. Manahan, Esq, District Judge of Zillah Sahabad, dated the 11th and 12th of July 1911.

The facts leading up to the proceedings in which the orders which form the subject-matter of these appeals were passed are set out in the judgment in Sahadra Koer v. Ramadin Chowdry, reported at p. 444 of this volume. The circumstances in which the orders under appeal were passed will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—We are invited to set aside two orders made by the Court below on the 11th and the 12th July 1911, under somewhat exceptional circumstances. The first of these orders purports to have been made under sec. 45, sub-sec. (1), cl. 4 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 ; and the second under sec. 43, sub-sec. (4) of the same Statute read with Or. 39, r. 2, sub-r. (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. It appears that the Petitioners before us were appointed guardians of the person of their step-daughter Bachi Sabdei, and at the time the order was made it was directed that the minor should not be married without the consent of her maternal grandfather and without the leave of the Court. The Appellants, it is admitted, have got the girl married in violation of this direction. The learned Judge, when apprised of this event, called upon the Appellants to produce the minor in Court. That order, however, could not be carried out, because at the time the order was made, the girl was with the family of her husband. The learned Judge thereupon proceeded to impose a fine upon the Appellants under sec. 45. He also took proceedings against the Appellants to punish them on account of their disobedience of the original order and ultimately directed that they should be confined in prison for three months. We are now invited to set aside these orders on the ground that they were made without jurisdiction, and cannot be justified either upon the admitted facts or upon recognised legal principles.

SAHODRA KOER v. DHAJADHARI GOSAIN.

In so far as the first order is concerned, it has been argued that the case is not covered by cl. (a) of sub-sec. 1 of sec. 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. That clause provides for two cases; namely, first, the case in which a direction has been given under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 12; and, secondly, the case in which an order has been made under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 25. It is manifest that neither of these sections has any application to the contingency which has happened here. It may further be observed that cl. (a) speaks of a person who has the custody of the minor and fails either to produce him or to do his utmost to compel him to return to the custody of his guardian. It is obvious that in a case under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 12, the person who has the custody of the minor has not yet been appointed guardian, while in a case under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 25, the person against whom the disciplinary action is taken is clearly one other than the guardian to whose custody the minor is to be returned. It is obvious, therefore, that the order of the learned Judge for the production of the minor in Court was not made either under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 12 or sub-sec. (1) of sec. 25. Consequently, sec. 45 has no application, and the order must be set aside as made without jurisdiction.

In so far as the second order is concerned, the learned counsel for the Appellants has contended that it must be set aside on three substantial grounds; namely, first, that this is not a case contemplated by sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43; because the learned Judge could no longer seek to enforce his original order which plainly could not be enforced after the marriage of the minor had taken place; secondly, that the order is bad, because it was not competent to the learned Judge to give any directions to the guardian as regards the marriage of the infant; and, thirdly, that as the proceedings for the appointment of the guardian were in their entirety without jurisdiction a violation of an order made without jurisdiction could not render the Appellants liable to be punished under sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43.

In so far as the first branch of this contention is concerned, we are not prepared to accept it as well-founded. Sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43 provides as follows: "In case of disobedience to an order made under sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (2), the order may be enforced in the same manner as an injunction granted under sec. 492 or sec. 493 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, in a case under sub-sec. (1), as if the ward were the Plaintiff and the guardian were the Defendant, or, in a case under sub-sec. (2), as if the guardian who made the application were the Plaintiff and the other guardian were the Defendant." It has been contended by the learned counsel for the Appellants that this clause applies strictly to cases in which it is possible to enforce the order which has been disobeyed. As a marriage performed in accordance with the rules of Hindu Law cannot be set aside, the order which was originally issued upon the guardians and has been disobeyed by them can no longer be enforced, and consequently they are not liable to be punished in the manner contemplated in cl. (4) of sec. 43. We are not prepared to accept the narrow construction of the word 'enforced' suggested by the learned counsel. If that construction were adopted, the clause would be inoperative in a large class of cases which could not possibly have been intended to be excluded from its operation. In fact, if the term were interpreted as suggested, the clause would be abrogated wherever it might be argued that the order disobeyed could no longer be enforced. For instance, in cases falling under sec. 492 or 493, although the Court may take action by way of attachment of the person and property of the person who has disobeyed the order of the Court, yet he may in the end refuse to carry out the order; that is to say, if he is prepared to suffer the punishment inflicted for disobedience, no one can compel him to carry out the order specifically. In such cases even, it might, on the same principle of interpretation, be contended that the order has not been and cannot be enforced. In the same way, in cases in which an act has been committed in defiance of the order of the Court, even though what has been done is undone, it cannot strictly be said that the order has been enforced. In our opinion, sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43 ought to be read with secs. 492 and 493 of the Code of 1882 or rr. 1 and 2 of Or. 39 of the Code of 1908, and the plain intent of the sub-section is that the same sanction should be applied in the case of disobedience to an order made under sec. 492 or 493 or sub-sec. (3) of sec. 43 as is provided in Or. 39 in cases of disobedience of an injunction issued by a Court. The sub-section is not limited solely to cases where an irremediable mischief has not been done and where, therefore, the status quo ante might be restored; it applies to all cases of disobedience, whether or not the effect of the disobedience is capable of removal or reparation. In our opinion, it was competent to the learned Judge to take action under sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43.

In so far as the second branch of the contention of the learned counsel for the Appellants is concerned, it has been argued that it was not open to the District Judge to give any directions to the guardians relating to the marriage of the infant. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Bai Diwali v. Moti Karson (1). That case admittedly does not expressly decide this point; but a doubt appears to have been expressed by one of the learned Judges, whether a direction of this nature could be given under the Guardians and Wards Act in view of the circumstance that a guardian of the person might in certain cases be different from the person recognized as guardian for marriage under the rules of Hindu Law. [Banerjee on Marriage and Stridhan, 2nd Ed., p. 43.] No doubt, that would be an element for serious consideration in cases where such divergence actually happens. But in a case where the person appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act is also the guardian for marriage under the rules of Hindu Law, the distinction can hardly be maintained on principle. It is not necessary for us, however, to decide this question finally, because we are of opinion that the order of the District Judge must be set aside on the third ground urged by the Appellants.

(1) I. L. R. 22 Bom. 504 (1896).

SAHODRA KOER v. DEHAJDHARI GOSAIN.

In so far as the third ground is concerned, it has been argued that inasmuch as the original order which has been disobeyed was made without jurisdiction, no proceedings can be taken under sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43. In our opinion, this contention is unanswerable. It is well-settled that before proceedings can be taken on account of disobedience of an injunction issued by a Court, it must be ascertained that the Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter in controversy. If the Court has no jurisdiction over the matter or if it has exceeded its powers by granting an injunction in matters beyond its jurisdiction, the injunction must be treated as absolutely void and the person who has disobeyed it cannot be punished for the alleged offence: Lewis v. Peck (2), Exp. Fish (3), Evans v. Pack (4), Savage v. Sternberg (5), High on Injunctions, sec. 1425; Joyce on Injunctions, sec. 246. There is in this respect a clear distinction between an order erroneously made with jurisdiction and an order made absolutely without jurisdiction. [Drewry v. Thacker (6), Russell v. East Ang. Ry. Co. (7), Laws of England, Ed. Halsbury, Vol. VII, sec. 645, Vol. XVII, sec. 622.] The case before us is of the latter description. As we have already explained in our judgment in the appeal against the order for appointment of guardians [Sahadra Koer v. Ramadin Chowdry (8)], the application of the Appellants for appointment of themselves as guardians of the person of their step-daughter was not made voluntarily. No proper judicial proceeding can be instituted upon an application so made and the order for appointment of guardians and the directions given to them relating to the marriage of the infant must, therefore, be deemed as wholly without jurisdiction.

The result is that these appeals will be allowed, the Rule made absolute, and the orders of the Court below discharged.

Appeal allowed.

Rule made absolute.

ABDUL GHANI v. AZIZUL HAQUE.

Husband's apostacy— Wife's right to marry another—Iddat.

A. and I., both Mahomedans of the Hanafi sect, were husband and wife. Some years after their marriage, the husband (A) became a Christian but reverted again to Mahomedanism within a month and a half. The wife (I.) had in the meantime married another man during the Iddat period, Held—That the wife did not commit an offence under sec. 494, I. P. C.

Apostacy from Islam, whether it takes place before or after consummation, dissolves ipso facto the marriage tie of Mahomedans.

There is a consensus of opinion that a woman's marriage during Iddat is illegal and sinful, but still the woman marrying a second time after the apostacy of her former husband and during the period of Iddat, cannot be said to have gone through the form of the second marriage while her legal husband was alive.

Per HOLMWOOD, J.—Whatever view be taken of the uncertain status of the parties during the period of Iddat and however illegal and void under Mahomedan law the second marriage of the woman during the period of Iddat might be, there was no foundation for any charge under sec. 494, I. P. C., against her. The parties to the marriage acted in good faith and even though they were mistaken as to their rights, they could not be made criminally liable under sec. 494, I. P. C.

This was a Rule granted on the 14th of August 1911 against the order of commitment of the Petitioners to the Court of Sessions at Faridpur for trial, passed by Babu Nabo Gopal Ghaki, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gopalgunj, dated the 23rd of June 1911.

The facts material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Hug with Moulvie, Syed Shamsul Huda and Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Petitioners.

Mr. B. K. Acharya with Babu Satyendra Nath Mukerjee for the Opposite Party.

HOLMWOOD, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which is about to be delivered by my learned brother and I entirely agree with him that the marriages of a Mahomedan man and woman is rendered ipso facto void by the apostacy of the former, though there are certain methods as pointed out by my learned brother by which the marriage tie may be renewed.

But what I wish to lay stress upon is that whatever view be taken of the uncertain status of the parties during the period of Iddat and however illegal and void under Mahomedan law the second marriage of the woman during the period of Iddat may be, there is no foundation for any charge under sec. 494, I. P. C., against her. Her second marriage is not void by reason of its taking place during the life of a prior husband but by reason of a special doctrine of the Mahomedan law of Iddat with which the Indian Penal Code has nothing to do.

The parties in this case appear to have acted in good faith on what they believed to be a sound interpretation of a very difficult point of Mahomedan law. Even though they were mistaken the consequences could not be visited upon them in a Criminal Court administering the penal laws against bigamy. The consequence is a purely civil one, namely, the nullity of the second marriage. For these reasons I agree that the commitment of the Petitioners to the Sessions under secs. 494 and 494, I. P. C., must be quashed and the rule made absolute.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is a rule calling on the Magistrate and on the complainant to show cause why the commitment of the Petitioners should not be quashed on the ground that the first marriage has been dissolved.

It appears that one Azizul Haque and Musstt. Jaitan, both Mahomedans of the Hanafi sect, were husband and wife. Some years after marriage the husband, Azizul Haque, became a Christian, but within a month and a half he again reverted to Islam. During the above interval, the woman, Jaitan, married a man named Abdul Aziz, and her father gave her in marriage to the new husband.

The first husband, after his conversion to Islam, complained, with the result that Musstt. Jaitan, her father Abdul Ghani, and her second husband Abdul Aziz have been committed to the Court of Sessions for trial, the first under sec. 494, I. P. C., and the other two for abetment of that offence. On an application by the three accused under sec. 215, C. P. C., to quash the commitment the present rule was granted.

The point of law on which the present application was made is, that as the Mahomedan law does not permit a marriage between a Mahomedan female and a non-Mahomedan male, the marriage tie in the present case was broken on the complainant's conversion to Christianity. It was also contended that in such a case Musstt. Jaitan did not marry Abdul Aziz during the life-time of a husband.

On behalf of the complainant it was urged that inasmuch as Azizul Haque reverted to Islam during the period of Iddat, he could continue his conjugal rights without remarrying Musst. Jaitan, and on his behalf a certain passage from Raddul Muhtar was relied on in order to show that the marriage does not become dissolved instantly the man abandons Islam. We have consulted the original book in Arabic and the context relied upon is :—

الْمَرْتَدُّ إِذَا لَحِقَ بِدَارِ الْحَرْبِ فَطَلَّقَ
إِمْرَأَتَهُ لَا يَقَعُ وَإِنْ عَادَ مُسْلِمًا رَمِيَ
فِي الْعِدَّةِ فَطَلَّقَهَا يَقَعُ -

The translation of this passage is :—If an apostate goes to Darul Harab (an alien country where the laws of Islam are not in force) and arriving there divorces his wife, this divorce will not take place : but if he returns as a Muslim and divorces her during the Iddat period, the divorce will take place (vide, Raddul Mohtar, p. 425, Egypton Edition).

On the strength of the above doctrine it is urged that the marriage tie does not absolutely break during the period of Iddat for otherwise a divorce given by the husband after his return to the faith, would not be effective.

The view, however, of lawyers like the authors of the Hedaya, the Fatawa Alamgiri and some other works unaniously is that apostacy from Islam, whether it takes place before or after consummation dissolves ipso facto the marriage tie.

The after-effects of separation through talaque (divorce) and apostacy are different. There are three forms of talaque namely—kay (طَلَّقَ) without any intention on his part that it should operate as talaque-Ba-in (طلاق بائن) which is the second form of talaque. In Talaque-Rajai the woman has to observe Iddat, but during the period of Iddat if the husband reverts to Islam, he can continue his conjugal rights without a renewal of marriage tie.

(a) Talaque-Rajai (طلاق رجعي) In this talaque, the husband says Tat-luk-to.

ABDUL GHANI v. AZIZUL HAQUE.

(b) Talaque-Ba-in—in this form of talaque, the husband is required to utter the expression (طَلَّقَ) which means—

"I renounce thee" with the intention that it should operate as talaque-Ba-in, the effects of which are that the woman has to observe Iddat, and if the husband relents he can continue his conjugal rights by a renewal of marriage tie. (تَجِدُ يَدَ مَقْد)

(c) Talaque-Mogallaz (طلاق مغالظ)

In this form of talaque, the husband is required to utter the above expression three times or he may say "I give you three talaques." The effects of this form of talaque are that the woman has to observe the Iddat period and she becomes Haram (حرام) that is within prohibited degrees and the husband cannot marry her until she has formed another connection by marriage with another man, co-habitation has taken place with this other husband and the latter has divorced her and she has observed the period of Iddat after her second divorce. The stage of the second divorce is technically called Halalah (حلاله).

From the above it is manifest that in every form of separation caused either by talaque or apostacy, the woman has to observe the period of Iddat. There is consensus of opinions that a woman's marriage during Iddat is illegal but in case of Talaque-Rajai, the husband can continue his conjugal rights without a re-marriage if he relents during the Iddat.

There is a passage in Sharah Wagaya (شرح وقاية) Chapter "Al-Murtud"

(المرتد) p. 377, Lucknow Edition, which also lays down that after apostacy the marriage tie becomes null, but the man can still exercise his right of talaque. The passage referred to is—

وَبَطَلَ لِكَاحُهُ وَدُبُحُهُ وَصَحَّ طَلَاقُهُ -

أَعْلَمُ أَنَّ الزَّكَاحَ وَالذَّبْحَ بِمَا طَلَّانِ إِيَّاهَا -

وَالطَّلَاقُ وَالْإِسْتِيلَانُ صَحِيحَانِ إِيَّاهَا - which means: The Nikah (marriage) of the apostate with his Mahomedan wife becomes Batil (باطل) that is, null, but he can still legally divorce her.

It is clear from the above passage that in spite of the marriage tie having been absolutely broken in consequence of apostacy, the man has still the right, which is vested in him, to divorce his Mahomedan wife. It, no doubt, seems an anomaly that an apostate husband can divorce his Mahomedan wife. The Mahomedan jurists have explained the anomaly; as for example the author of Raddul-Mohtar has explained it in the following passage:—

فَيَقَعُ طَلَاقُهُ عَلَيْهَا فِي الْعِدَّةِ مُسْتَتَبِعًا

فَإِنَّهُ لَمْ يَنْحَرُمْ عَلَيْهَا بَعْدَ الثَّلَاثِ حُرْمَةً

مُغَيَّاةً بِوُطْئِ زَوْجٍ آخَرَ -

the power of divorce in the apostate is for a certain purpose only, namely, if an apostate recites segħa (سيف) the formula three times and thus divorces his wife in the Mogullus (مغل) form of talaque, she becomes Haram to him as stated above in the third form of talaque, that is to say, he cannot continue his conjugal rights with the woman without marriage or with a renewal of marriage without the intervention of a Halala.

On a reference to the different authorities, we are of opinion that Musst. Jaitan's marriage with the complainant became absolutely null at the moment he apostatized and that from the date of his apostacy he was not her husband and that he could re-marry her during the period of Iddat if he reverted to Islam.

We have observed before that during the period of Iddat, a woman cannot marry another husband. In the present case, she is said to have done so. Her marriage with Abdul Aziz is therefore invalid. Her act therefore may be considered as invalid and sinful and according to the Jurists it is the duty of the Kazi to separate them and compel her to observe the Iddat period. In the present case we are not concerned with the question as to whether her second marriage was legal or not according to the Mahomedan Law. We are only concerned with the question as to whether her second marriage, if it can be called a marriage took place during the life-time of a husband. On the authorities discussed above we are of opinion that although her second marriage having taken place during the period of Iddat was not a legal marriage, yet she cannot be said to have gone through the form of the second marriage while her legal husband was alive. For the above reasons we quash the commitment and make the Rule absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NOS. 29 AND 30 OF 1912.

HOLMWOOD, J. SEW KARAN, Petitioner,
SHARFUDDIN, J. v.
1912, THE CORPORATION OF
8, February. CALCUTTA, Opposite Party.

Calcutta Municipal Act (B C., III of 1899), sec. 495—Sale of adulterated food by servant, liability of master—Sale by partner—Liability of co-partner—Sec. 507, "seller," meaning of—Sec. 574.

Sec. 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act like the corresponding section of the English Statute is positive in its prohibition of the sale of adulterated articles and when a servant sells such articles it is the master, firm or the beneficial owner who is liable to punishment and this would be so even when the servant adulterates the articles himself and sells without the knowledge or connivance of the master, firm or owner.

BROWN v. FOOT (1) followed.

Where the person who sells is one of two partners of the firm the conviction of the other partner would be equally legal.

This was a Rule issued on the 9th of January 1912 against an order of Babu Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 13th of November 1911, convicting the Petitioner under secs. $\frac{5}{2} \frac{1}{2}$ of Act III, B. C. of 1899, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 100.

The facts of the case will appear from judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitter with Babu Debendra

SEW KARAN v. THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Chundra Mullick in showing cause.—As to the liability of the master for the act of servants, refers to sec. 6 of the Sale of Foods and Drugs Act, 36 and 39 Vic., c. 63, as amended by subsequent legislation. The provisions of that section are substantially the same as sec. 495 of the Municipal Act. It has been conclusively held in Brown v. Foot (1) the master is liable. It is an absolute prohibition of the Act irrespective of the person who does it and it is not necessary to establish any mens rea.

As to the question whether the accused being a commission agent will in any way alter his position, vide, Ireland v. Livingston (2).

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri with Babu Debdra Narain Bhattacharjee in support of the Rule.—In view of the ruling in Brown v. Foot (1), it cannot be contended that the master is not liable for the act of his servant. But the real question is what is the relationship between the accused and the actual seller, Lal Chand. There is no evidence nor any finding by the Magistrate that he was the servant of accused. On the other hand, the license of the shop shows it was one of partnership and the actual seller was the partner of accused. Hence the prosecution against one of the partners is not maintainable. The Opposite Party could have proceeded against the partnership, vide, Pearks, Gunston and Tee Ltd. v. Ward (3). Further the actual seller could not have been the same man in both shops. The case being a criminal prosecution, the principle of civil liability should not have been extended to this case. In any case there should be remand for a finding, on evidence, as to whether Lal Chand was the servant of the accused. *

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These were two Rules calling upon the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, and the Chairman to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed upon Sew Karan, proprietor, should not be set aside on the ground that he did not sell or cannot be said to have sold the ghee himself and to determine whether sec. 495 of the Calcutta Municipal Act applies to any person other than the actual hand employed in the sale.

Now as regards the first question we can have no doubt on the authority of Brown v. Foot (1), that on the law,—which in England is exactly the same as in this country, indeed sec. 495 appears to have been based entirely on sec. 6 of the English Act,—it has been held that a servant employed by his master to sell any article who adulterates it thereby renders his master liable under the section, although there is no connivance of the master; and non-connivance of the master is no defence; though the entire absence of connivance on his part might in the discretion of the convicting Magistrate be a ground for mitigation of the penalty. Now the ground upon which Mr. Justice Wills proceeds in that case is one which equally covers the case of an agent or a firm because it is not directed as a prohibition against a person but, as Wills, J., says, it imposes a positive prohibition against the sale of adulterated articles. This was the point upon which we had doubt when we issued the Rule owing to the wording of the law both in England distinguish themselves on the High Court Benches, in Bengal their claims have been persistently ignored. It may also be added that now that members of the Provincial Service are being appointed District Judges, it would not be at all difficult occasionally to make a selection from amongst them for the High Court Bench.

BUT IT HAS TO BE CONSIDERED THAT BY THE time a member of the service becomes a District Judge or reaches the highest grade in the Provincial Service, he becomes practically superannuated. Further, if promotion is given by merit and not by seniority, the chances under the existing system are that those officers who are good at showing a larger number of disposals and have little regard for justice, will stand the better chance of preferment. It would be very undesirable to have such men in the High Court. If however recruitment of Subordinate and District Judges is made from the profession as recommended by the Public Service Commission, we may have promising men in these positions in the prime of life, and then selections for High Court Judgeships from amongst them would be quite desirable. We would then be prepared to concede that the presence on the High Court Bench of a Judge, who would combine in him professional as the also judicial experience of a Subordinate and District Judge, would be of considerable assistance in the judicial administration of the Province. He would be in a better position to advise his colleagues than any barrister or civilian judge regarding the wants and shortcomings of the Provincial Service and make suggestions for various improvements both with regard to the service and the more efficient discharge of duties by its members.

MR. C. P. BEACHCROFT, I. C. S., DISTRICT JUDGE, and the Hon'ble Mr. E. P. Chapman, I. C. S., the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal, have been appointed to officiate as Judges of the Calcutta High Court during the absence on leave of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Caspersz and the Hon'ble Justice Sir Richard Harington.

WE PUBLISH IN ANOTHER COLUMN A LETTER from a retired Subordinate Judge regarding the improvement of the prospects of the Provincial Judicial Service. He urges the claims of men of recognised merit in the service to seats on the High Court Bench. He quotes the famous dictum of Lord Selborne in the House of Lords that the judgments of this able body of judicial officers do not suffer in any way in comparison with the judgments of the English Judges in India. He also gives expression to the grievance of this deserving body of public servants that while in the other Presidencies the members of the Provincial Service have been given opportunities to

THE LENGTHS TO WHICH ERRORS MAY GO IF Judges forget their duty mainly to administer the law as it is and are obsessed too much by patriarchal notions of administration are well illustrated by the facts of the two cases, Sahodra Koor v. Ramadin Choudhuri and Sahodra Koor v. Dhajadhari Gossain, reported at pp. 444 and 447, respectively, of our last issue. The dispute in the case arose out of a quarrel over the guardianship of a minor girl who, though she had no present property, was the heir presumptive to property in the hands of her three step-mothers. The maternal grandfather of the girl, at the instigation of a scheming man whose servant he was, applied to be appointed the guardian of the girl. As she had no property the District Judge would very probably have refused to interfere in the matter, or if he did interfere, he would have contented himself with making some reasonable orders with reference strictly to the guardianship. But it was represented to him that the life of the girl was in danger and as the step-mothers were in the hands of two unscrupulous men, whoever they were, there was serious risk of loss to the poor girl.

WE CAN WELL IMAGINE THE RIGHTEOUS INDIGNATION of the learned Judge at all this and his impatience at the limitations which the scope of the case before him laid on the exercise of his beneficent powers for the aid of the poor girl. He made use of the strong attachment of the step-mothers for the girl to secure from them an agreement to lease the property in their hands to Ramadin Choudhury the man who had set the law in motion against them with a view ultimately to secure the property by getting the girl to marry his son. The widows were not even then allowed to have the girl, whom they loved as their child, left to them without further trouble. They were made to apply for the appointment of themselves as guardians of the person of the girl, evidently for no other purpose than that the Court might limit their powers as guardian by ordering that they might not marry their step daughter without the consent of her maternal grandfather who was a tool in the hands of Ramadin.

THE LEARNED JUDGE HAD NOW THE SATISFACTION of seeing the girl and her property secure,—under the thumb of Ramadin Choudhury. But he had no sooner turned his back on the District than the ladies succeeded in baulking the expectations of all persons concerned by marrying the girl to a person who was not Ramadin's son. Proceedings were forthwith taken against the ladies under various sections of the Guardians and Wards Act which were never meant to be applied to a case like this. And these ladies were not only fined but were also ordered to be imprisoned.

THERE CANNOT BE A BETTER CASE FOR ILLUSTRATING the pitfalls of patriarchal administration of justice. Their Lordships Mookerjee and Carnuff, JJ., who had to deal with the extraordinary proceedings of the District Judge in the High Court, spoke with all the reserve that judicial decorum demanded when they observed, "The proceedings, from beginning to end, were a grievous misapplication of the provisions of the Statute." Their Lordships show in the course of their judgment how utterly foreign to the spirit and letter of the law the whole of the proceedings were. We need not doubt that the learned District Judge who passed the first set of orders acted with the best of motives. Nor need we say that he did not know the limitations that the law imposed on him in the work. But the overpowering sense of the impending injury and a too keen desire to play the part of a protector to an orphan girl led him astray from the path which he in his function as Judge was bound to follow. But this case is one of the many illustrations of how patriarchal ideas in the administration of justice, and more so in the exercise of executive functions, is often likely to make Judges and Magistrates merely tools in the hands of designing persons. The less sentimental and unimaginative course of administering the law as it is laid down in the Statutes is more often than not a surer way of doing good to the people than zealous beneficence.

THE LAW RELATING TO HOMESTEADS OF RAIYATS IN BENGAL.

The law relating to homesteads of raiyats in Bengal is contained in sec. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which lays down that "when a raiyat holds his homestead otherwise than as part of his holding as a raiyat, the incidents of his tenancy of the homestead shall be governed by local custom or usage, and subject to local custom or usage by the provisions of this Act (Bengal Tenancy Act) applicable to land held by a raiyat." From a perusal of this section it would seem to apply only to those homesteads of raiyats which they hold with other agricultural holdings under the same landlords. As the term "raiyat" is correlative with "landlord," sec. 182 would not seem to have any application to those homesteads which are held by the raiyats independently of their agricultural holdings and the landlords of which are different from the landlords of their other agricultural holdings. But from the recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court it would appear that the section applies to all homesteads held by raiyats. In Kripa Nath v. Sheikh Anu, 10 C. W. N. 944 : s. C. 4 C. L. J. 332, it has been held that in order to make the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to the homestead of a raiyat held by him otherwise than as a part of his holding it is not required by sec. 182 of the Act that the raiyat in occupation of the homestead should be a raiyat in the village in which the homestead land is situate, nor is it necessary for him to be a raiyat under the same landlord as the landlord of his homestead land. (See also Protap v. Biseshwar, 9 C. W. N. 416).

In the recent case of Golam Moula v. Abdool, 13 C. L. J. 255, it has been held that when a tenant is a settled raiyat of a village having a right of occupancy in some agricultural land in the village any homestead land which he holds in the same village otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyat must, in the absence of any local custom or usage to the contrary, be regarded as held by him in accordance with the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to land held by a raiyat and he must be held to have a right of occupancy in the homestead land under sec. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In delivering judgment in this case Rampini, J., observed "It is quite clear that the Defendant is a raiyat not in respect of the land in dispute, but in respect of the agricultural land which he holds in the village; thus it is clear that the land in dispute is homestead land held otherwise than as part of the Defendant's holding as a raiyat; no allegation of local custom or usage is made by either of the parties; and, therefore, it follows that the land in suit must be regarded as held by the Defendant in accordance with the provisions of the Tenancy Act applicable to land held by a raiyat. Therefore even though the Defendant is not a raiyat in respect of his bastoo land in dispute between the parties, still under sec. 182, the provisions of this Act applicable to land held by a raiyat are applicable to this particular piece of land in suit; in other words he has under sec. 21 a right of occupancy in this piece of bastoo land as well as in the agricultural land in the village of which he is a settled-raiyat."

From the above observations it is quite clear that all the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to land held by a raiyat are also applicable to homesteads of raiyats in Bengal provided they are not overridden by local custom or usage.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

SIR,—I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your championing the cause of the voiceless and friendless Provincial Judiciary. The High Court has power to remove some of the grievances of the service without reference to Government. But the District Judges of the Indian Civil Service who do not as a rule try original civil suits and have no occasion to know what sort of work the Munsifs and Subordinate Judges are called upon to perform, practically rule the destinies of the Provincial Judicial Service. Undue importance is given to figures, so that those who have a knack of shirking work pass for meritorious officers. Vacations and holidays are selected for transfers, so that Munsifs and Subordinate Judges are deprived of the "joining time" to which they are entitled under the Civil Service Regulations. In making transfers from one station to another, the merits of an officer are hardly taken into account. These and other grievances, the High Court may very well redress if they like.

It is high time that there should be a representative of the Provincial Judiciary on the Bench of the High Court. As early as the year 1861, they were found qualified for appointments on the High Court Bench. The Public Service Commission after an exhaustive inquiry strongly recommended the recruitment of Judges on the Bench of the High Court from the judicial branch of the Provincial service and from Vakils. Effect has been given to their recommendation in Madras, Bombay and the North Western Provinces, but the pledge given fifty years ago remains till unredeemed in Bengal. Lord Selborne said, "I repeat that I have no hesitation in saying that in respect of integrity, of learning, of knowledge, of the soundness and the satisfactory character of the conclusions arrived at the native judgments were as a rule quite as good as those of local English Judges," Hansard's Parliamentary Debate, Vol. 277, pp. 1782-3.

Did not the late illustrious Mr. Justice Ranade come from the Provincial service? Were not Mr. Justice Banerjee of the Allahabad High Court, and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer of Madras, members of the same service? In India, a Judge is a Judge of facts as well as of law. There is no jury trial in civil suits here. It is therefore of the utmost importance that there should be Judges of fact of undoubted merit on the Bench of the High Court. In the interest of the country the Provincial Judiciary should be made as strong and efficient as possible, but can this object be secured unless the best talents are attracted to it? With a member of their own service on the High Court Bench, the Provincial Judiciary would have a vigilant friend to safeguard their interests, and to advise the authorities on the right line to adopt for improving their prospects and removing their various grievances.

Yours truly,
A Retired Sub-Judge.

THE TRIAL OF LORD LOVAT. Notable English Trials Series. By David N. Mackay, Calcutta. Butterworth & Co., (India) Limited. Price Rs. 8-4.

This volume of the Notable English Trials series deals with the trial of Lord Lovat, that fascinating and romantic Highland adventurer who elbowed his way through life by courage as well as by cunning in the troublesome days of Jacobite invasion of England. The story brought out in the course of the narration is an interesting episode in the history of Great Britain in those unsettled though romantic time. To the student of the history of law and legal procedure it is of interest as displaying methods of trial and rules of procedure and evidence which have now long become obsolete. Lord Lovat was impeached by the House of Commons at the bar of the House of Lords. The Managers were distinguished men among whom were Lord Coke, Sir William Young, Sir Dudley Ryder, the Attorney-General, and Murray, who was to be the famous Lord Mansfield. Lord Hardwicke, one of the greatest names in the history of English law, was the Lord High Steward. A trial in which these men participated is bound to be of surpassing interest to the student of law and he will not be disappointed on a perusal of the story as told in this volume.

Among the peculiarities of procedure that strikes one in the story is the fact that though in these impeachments the prisoner was assigned counsel and solicitors to assist him in all matters of law, they had not the liberty to assist in matters of fact or examine or cross-examine witnesses. This privilege was not given to Lord Lovat's counsel though he pleaded his infirmity and inability to cross-examine. Sir William Young who was one of the Managers was so much impressed with the hardship of this rule, that shortly after the trial, he got the House of Commons to grant impeached persons the liberty to have full use of counsel. In noting this fact the editor quotes the just remark of Horace Walpole, "Thank God, we are a better-natured age than that of William III and have relinquished a savage privilege with a good grace."

Lord Lovat tried to take advantage of a salutary provision of a Statute of those times providing that no person should be capable of giving evidence in the Jacobite cases "against any person by whose attainder, conviction or forfeiture any benefit shall or may accrue to such witness or witnesses." His attempt introduces us to a handicap provided by artificial rules of evidence against the efficient use of this and similar defences. A witness who was objected to on this ground was not sworn in chief but was examined upon a voire dire, a special form of oath. Even after a witness had been sworn in chief, he might be examined on the point as to whether he had any interest in the conviction. But the result of the examination of the witness himself on that point was to shut out all evidence to prove that in fact the witness had such interest though he denied it on a voire dire. Such evidence could no doubt be given in the course of the defence in any case to shake the credit of the witness but it could not be used to exclude the evidence altogether under the Statute.

The whole volume is brimful of similar points of interest and will surely repay perusal to the student of law. The editor has enriched the volume with a succinct historical introduction giving the life history of Simon Lord Lovat and copious historical, legal and biographical notes. The volume is on the whole well worthy of its predecessors and we are sure that the legal as well as the lay public will watch the whole series with interest.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Alexander. Before JUSTICES BRAY, HAMILTON AND LUSH. 23rd January 1912.

Plea of "Guilty" set aside and conviction quashed—Plea made under misdirection of law.

This was an appeal from a conviction and sentence for abduction. The story for the prosecution was that the girl who had been sent to a home left the home with the object of returning to her parents' home. On her way she called on the Appellant and told him that she was afraid of going to her parents. The Appellant thereupon kept her with him for several days. At the trial the prisoner pleaded guilty, but on the present appeal it was contended on his behalf that the plea was made because of the trying Magistrate's misdirection on a point of law. The following was the statement of the law which he relied upon as being a misdirection. Mr. Commissioner Rentoul, addressing the prisoner after the girl had given evidence, said, "She has given quite sufficient evidence to prove the case against you. She is quite friendly disposed to you. There is no doubt about that at all; but at the same time, what she has told, and truthfully told, means your having taken the girl out of the custody of her parents."

The prisoner.—"She distinctly told me, 'I do not want to go home.'"

Mr. Commissioner Rentoul.—"That does not matter. You might have handed her over to the parents. That is a different matter altogether. It is your keeping her secretly—preventing them from knowing. If you had put her in the best hotel in London and had not called on her yourself it would not have mattered."

The Court quashed the conviction. In the course of his judgment Mr. JUSTICE BRAY said—

In the opinion of the Court there had been a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act. The first question which they had to ask themselves was, would the jury upon the evidence as it stood have been likely to convict the prisoner? In the opinion of the Court the jury would not have been likely to do so. Therefore, apart from the prisoner's plea of "Guilty," prima facie there had been a miscarriage of justice.

They must also ask themselves the further question, "Did the prisoner in fact really plead guilty to have taken this girl out of the possession of her parents?" In their opinion he did not, because the Commissioner did not direct him properly on the question of law. There had been a good deal said by him, the general effect of which seemed to be that he would have to tell the jury that what the prisoner was setting up was no defence to the charge, and that upon the evidence before them the jury would have to find him guilty. He did not think that that was taking an unfair view of what was said. But the last observations made by the Commissioner were clearly wrong.

The plea of the prisoner amounted to an admission that he had merely kept the girl with him and had prevented her parents from knowing where she was. He did not plead guilty to the offence of taking her out of the possession of her parents.

Mr. Attenborough for the Appellant.

Mr. Humphreys for the Crown.

Conviction quashed.

COURT OF APPEAL—Monkton v. The Gramophone Company, Ltd. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 24th January 1912.

Copyright of a musical composition—Statutory rights; rights at Common Law not protected after publication.

This was an appeal from decision of Joyce, J. The Plaintiff-Appellant was the author of the words and music of a composition. On each copy of the publication of the composition was the following notice:—"Public performance of all or any part of the work strictly forbidden. . . . The right of public performance upon or by means of any mechanical instrument is strictly reserved."

He sued the Defendants who were manufacturers and sellers of gramophones for a declaration that he was exclusively entitled to make or authorize the making of gramophone records of the musical composition. It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that he possessed the common law right to prevent any one using his work to his detriment, and that publication of the composition did not interfere with his rights. The Court affirmed the decision of the Court below and in the course of his judgment dismissing the appeal the Master of the Rolls said:—

It was not a case of the rights of the Plaintiff before publication. That was the vital distinction. Then let them consider what the proposition was. It followed from it, as was frankly admitted by Mr. Shearman, that at the end of the statutory term of protection any member of the public might give a performance of the play in which the song was introduced, but that the song could not be sung in private. That seemed extravagant and absurd. But had the law ever recognized any property in an idea expressed not in language but in some form of notation after it had once been made public? The judgments of Lord Camden in Donaldson v. Beckett (4 Burr., 2,408) and of Lord Brougham in Jefferys v. Boosey (4 H. of L. Cas., 815) seemed to make it unanswerable that the right which the Plaintiff was seeking to assert was one which at common law, with which alone the Court had to do, did not exist. The case seemed so clearly covered by authority that it would not be open to the Court to take any other view.

Reference had been made to Millar v. Taylor (4 Burr., 2,395), the decision in which was to some extent in favour of the Plaintiff's contention, but that case had been overruled by Donaldson v. Beckett (supra). Then had followed the cases of Jefferys v. Boosey (supra) and of Caird v. Sime (12 A. C., 326) in the House of Lords. Then there was the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mansell v. Valley Printing Company (1908, 2 Ch., 441). He would not read his own judgment in that case, but Lord Justice Farwell said at p. 447, "All his (the author's) rights at common law are limited until and cease upon publication."

Messrs. Shearman, K. C., and Weatherly for the Appellant.

Messrs Danckwerts, K. C., and Macglivray for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Paine. Before MR. JUSTICE WARRINGTON. 23rd January 1912.

Solicitor's professional charges for friendly talks.

This case raised a peculiar question between a solicitor and his client. The solicitor and his client were friendly neighbours, and the solicitor was employed by the client for certain business. Being friends they used to visit one another and to smoke and to talk over various matters. On some of these visits the client mentioned that he wished to purchase some land and to make some investments. The Solicitor arranged for the land from another client of his, and also advised him about the investments. For these services the solicitor made a charge which was allowed by the taxing master.

MR. JUSTICE WARRINGTON set it aside. He said that on all questions as to the retainer of a solicitor he was guided by the words of Vice-Chancellor Turner in Crossley v. Crowther (9 Hare, 384), who laid down that where there was a conflict as to the authority between the solicitor and client, without further evidence, weight must be given to the affidavit against, rather than to the affidavit of the solicitor.

As regarded the purchase of land, for all the client knew to the contrary, the work was being done by the solicitor in a friendly way, knowing that he had a client with land for sale and that the other client was minded to buy some land. This client positively denied that he gave any instructions to the solicitor to do business as such in regard to the matter, and the Court could not draw any inference of retainer. As to the investments, advising about investments and making them for clients was not solicitors' business; though where a solicitor was retained to act generally for a client, he might properly give advice as to investments and charge for it. But here the solicitor merely did certain specified pieces of business; and the positive denials of the client that he gave the solicitor a retainer must be accepted.

Mr. Tomlin for the Appellant.

Mr. Neilson for the Respondent.

Appealable case—Leave to appeal to Privy Council refused by High Court because vakil did not appear with fresh vakalatnama—Special leave given.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the following circumstances:—

The Petitioners' father, Lala Ramanuj Dyal (since deceased), instituted the present Suit No. 174 of 1908 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut for recovery of a debt due on a mortgage bond, dated the 3rd June 1895. The principal Defendant to the said suit was the said Respondent, Mussammat Taj Begum. The Plaintiff prayed for payment of Rs. 36,000 with costs and interest pendente lite and for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property in default of payment.

Mussammat Taj Begum alone defended the suit and the remaining Defendants three of whom were transferees from her did not appear.

After considering evidence produced by the parties the Additional Judge of Meerut who tried the suit delivered judgment on the 12th January 1909. He allowed the Plaintiffs' claim to the extent of Rs. 22,995 odd against the principal Defendant and passed a decree accordingly.

Both parties appealed against the said decree to the High Court of Judicature for the North Western Provinces at Allahabad. The High Court delivered judgment on the 2nd December 1910 and allowed the principal Defendant's appeal, dismissing that of the Plaintiff. In the result the High Court made a decree dismissing the whole suit with costs.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, a vakil on the Rolls of the said High Court, prosecuted the said appeals on behalf of the Plaintiff under a vakalatnama (power-of-attorney) executed by the Plaintiff.

Dissatisfied with the said decree of the High Court the Plaintiff, Ramanuj Dyal (since deceased), desired to appeal against it to His Majesty in Council. He therefore presented a petition to the High Court under the provisions of Or. 45, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) through the said vakil, Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala. He prayed for a certificate that the case fulfilled the requirements of sec. 110 of the said Code of Civil Procedure, that is, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance and of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was over Rs. 10,000.

The High Court (RICHARDS, C. J., and TUDBALL, J.) rejected the said petition by an order, dated the 30th June 1911, in terms following:—"Upon reading the office report and considering the terms of the vakalatnama of Mr. G. L. Agarwala on the present record we are of opinion that he had no authority to make the application. For very many years it has been the practice to file fresh vakalatnama giving authority to present such applications as these: and we think that they ought not to be made without the authority of the client evidenced by a clear vakalatnama. This application is accordingly rejected."

Hence this petition.

Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Petitioners submitted that the Court below was wrong in refusing to grant the certificate. Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala was competent to make the application he did. The point was expressly decided as far back as 1867 in Shah Mukhun Lal v. Sreekishen Singh, 8 Suth W. R. 92. Sec. 18 of Act VIII of 1859 was substantially the same as Or. 3, r. 4. No fresh vakalatnama was necessary. In any case Petitioners were entitled as of right to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships granted special leave.

1912,	SAYAD ALAMSAHEB valad

Special leave to appeal—Question relating to right of worship amongst Sunni Mahomedans.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal made under the following circumstances:—

The Petitioner claimed to be the hereditary Kazi and Khatib of Gadag a town in the Presidency of Bombay and as such Khatib the sole right to conduct certain religious services including the preaching of a Khutba or sermon at the Idga or public praying place in Gadag at the two great Mahomedan Ids or festivals falling in the months of Ramzan and Jilhoja of every year.

After the holding of such services it is customary for members of the congregation to make money offerings to the Khatib at a neighbouring place.

On or about the 15th of December 1902, the Petitioner filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gadag against the Respondent charging in effect that the Respondent had on the 4th of March 1902, being the occasion of one of the said festivals, held and conducted a Khutba service in Gadag at a place which was contiguous to the said Idga and had thus invaded the exclusive right of the Plaintiff to hold such service and deprived him of offerings which he would otherwise have received and praying for an injunction against the Respondent and Rs. 20 as damages.

The Petitioner's suit having been dismissed by the said Subordinate Judge he appealed to the District Court of Dharwar.

The following amongst other issues were raised in the said appeal viz.:

Is the Plaintiff the Khatib of Gadag?

If so, Has he as Khatib the sole right to read the Khutba at the Idga on the occasion specified in the plaint?

If so, has the Defendant infringed that right?

The District Judge found all the said issues in the affirmative and granted the Petitioner an injunction restraining the Respondent from conducting the Id service publicly on either of the two said festivals at any place within the revenue limits of the village of Gadag and also awarded the Petitioner the damages claimed and costs.

The Respondent filed a second appeal in the High Court of Bombay which was heard by Mr. Justice Chandravarkar and Mr. Justice Heaton who by their decree, dated the 19th of August 1909, in effect set aside the decree of the District Court granting the Petitioner in lieu thereof an injunction only restraining the Respondent from reading the Khutba at any time at the Idga on the said two festivals in opposition to the Petitioner's right and ordering each party to pay their own costs throughout.

The reasons given by the learned Judges in their judgment for setting aside the decree of the District Court were as follows.

"The District Judge has gone in his decree further than he was warranted by the jurisdiction given to a Court by law in such cases, the decree which he has passed entitled the plaintiff to prevent the Defendant from reading the Khutba or holding religious services at any other place besides the Idga within the limits of Gadag. Such a decree has the effect of giving the Plaintiff a monopoly of the right in question in the town of Gadag and depriving other Mahomedans thereof of the liberty to read the Khutba and preach. So large a right given to the Plaintiff interferes with the freedom of religious worship of the class of His Majesty subjects in Gadag affected by it, besides that it is supported by no evidence. It is urged that the Plaintiff's sanad gives it, but that sanad is not binding upon others and the right in question is not in the nature of a franchise. Such a decree as the District Judge has given would virtually compel the members of the Mahomedan community to confine themselves to the religious services of the Plaintiff. That would be interference on the part of the Court with the rights of each subject of His Majesty to perform his worship and attend religious services at any place and at any time he likes."

On the 27th of September 1910, the Petitioner applied for a review of the said judgment which was granted on the ground (as stated in the judgment of the Court) that it was doubtful whether the injunction granted would prevent precisely the same kind of infringement of the Petitioner's right as that which had given occasion to the suit.

On the 28th of July 1910 upon rehearing the said appeal on this point the High Court in effect confirmed its previous decree only inserting therein after the word "Idga" the words "which is the public place referred in the suit." Permission to appeal against the said decree of the High Court having been refused the present petition was filed.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes (with him Dr. A. Majid) for the Petitioner submitted that the appeal raised a question of great importance to Sunni Mahomedans. The High Court did not give full force to the rights of the Khatib.

Their Lordships granted special leave.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REVISION No. 230 OF 1912. JHARU SHEIKH, Petitioner v. NAGUDDI SHEIKH, Opposite Party. 8th March 1912.

Charge in a summary trial must be definite—Misjoinder.

This Rule was for setting aside a conviction on the ground that the Magistrate did not amend the charge under secs. 457 and 380, I. P. C., before convicting the Petitioner under sec. 456, I. P. C.

Their Lordships observed:—

"We think that there can be no doubt on the authorities that the charge under sec. 456 of entering the house with an object not specified but which is presumed to be criminal cannot be sustained when the person is being tried for the specific charge of theft in a dwelling-house and house-breaking with intent to commit theft. It is obvious he must be seriously prejudiced by not knowing what really is the charge against him. Although it is not necessary under sec. 456 to specify any particular offence, when such particular offence is specified under sec. 457, it is incompetent in our opinion to convict of house-breaking with some other intent. . . . We would remark with reference to the explanation of the learned Magistrate that he is wholly in error in supposing that because the case is tried summarily that a charge under the Penal Code is not necessary. No formal charge need be drawn up but the accused must be called upon to answer to the particulars of the offence charged, whether the proceeding be summary or otherwise. . . . The same rules of law as apply to charges in warrant cases must apply to the particulars set out in sec. 263 in a summary record.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 448 AND 546 OF 1909. BILAS CHANDRA MOOKHOPADHYA v. AKSHOY KUMAR DAS SARKAR AND OTHERS. Heard, 7th March 1912. Judgment, 11th March 1912.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 144—Adverse possession—Sale of share of estate—Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), sec. 54.

Taluk Hari Narain was originally one-property.

It was subsequently divided into three separate taluks, Taluka Hari Narain Touji No. 75, Taluka Gauripriya, Touji No. 76, Taluka Rampria, Touji No. 77. These three taluks lay to the east, north and west of a Government khas mehal named Uddamdi No. 37. There was a river named Gaontia between the khas mehal and those taluks. The river shifted northwards and cut away the lands of the three taluks and as the river receded these diluviated lands reformed and the present suit was in respect of lands reformed in situ of the three taluks 75, 76 and 77.

The Government khas mehal No. 37 was from time to time settled temporarily with the proprietors of the three taluks until 1885 when it was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by one Bango Chandra as the benamdar of the contesting Defendants who in return for his services gave him an one anna share in the purchase. The possession of the contesting Defendants became adverse to the owners of taluks 75, 76 and 77 in respect of the disputed lands which they claimed as parts of their newly purchased mehal, khas mehal No. 37, from the year 1885. The residuary share of Taluk Hari Narain No. 75 was sold for arrears of revenue in 1892 and purchased by the predecessor in title of the Plaintiffs who subsequently purchased the entire taluks Gauripriya and Rampria in 1894.

The present suit was brought just within 12 years of the purchase of the residuary share of Taluka Hari Narain by the predecessor in title of the Plaintiffs and the main question in the appeal was whether the suit so far as that taluk was concerned was barred by limitation. The sale (revenue) was under sec. 54 of Act XI of 1859.

Held, that the purchaser of a share purchased the share and not the right, title and interest of the defaulter.

The purchaser under sec. 54 was not a person claiming from or through the defaulter. Subject to the restrictions imposed by the Statute, each of them purchased the property sold by the Collector and claimed under a permanent title not derived from the defaulter but obtained adversely to him. In a suit for possession by him, when he was not in possession after his purchase, the Defendant must show that his possession was adverse to him for more than 12 years.

SEW KARAN v. THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

and in India, the section saying "no person shall sell," but it appears to be settled law that the prohibition is positive as we have seen against the sale of adulterated articles, and any person who is legally responsible for such a sale comes within the section.

But it has been argued that this Sew Karan is only a commission agent for certain producers of ghee up-country, that he collects ghee and other things from them; and as they sell in Calcutta at certain shops which go in the name of Lal Chand Sew Karan the Health Officer appears to have taken proceeding against Lal Chand Sew Karan, and we see that the license for wholesale dealers in ghee at No. 2, Ram Kumar Rakhit's Lane and for selling ghee at No. 9, Ram Kumar Rakhit's Lane is Lal Chand Sew Karan. The Magistrate however treated the case as if Lal Chand was the servant of Sew Karan, and the finding on the evidence is that Lal Chand was the hand that actually sold the ghee to the Inspector. On the view we take of the law, if Lal Chand and Sew Karan are partners, they are both responsible for everything which is sold in their name at shops bearing both their names; and if they are master and servant it is clear on the English authorities that the master is liable for the act of his servant.

We do not think it necessary to go further into the question of what their precise relations are. It is sufficient to say that Lal Chand did not appear in the lower Court and that the conviction in both the cases has been held against Sew Karan.

There are two matters in the Act itself which convince us that the Legislature intended that the beneficial owner of the article should be responsible for its purity.

For when the Health Officer goes to make enquiries about food exposed for sale there is the provision in sec. 507 that he can compel the seller to give him enough as is reasonably requisite for analysis and that this quantity shall be divided into three parts to be then and there separated and the Chairman forthwith will notify to the seller or his agent selling the article his intention to have the same analysed. Now it is clear that in this passage the word "seller" means the owner of the shop or the person who has license to sell goods or who carries on business through his servant or agent and he is contrasted with the agent actually selling the article. This is one point which convinces us of the intention of the Legislature. Then we turn to the condition of punishment under sec. 574. We find that the fine which may be imposed is Rs. 100 for the first offence and Rs. 500 for any subsequent offences. Now it is perfectly clear that this must have reference to the master and not to the servant, because it would not be always the same servant who would be in the shop selling the article and by changing his servant every week a dishonest proprietor could continue to sell adulterated goods without incurring any further penalty.

We, therefore, think taking the view that the Magistrate took, that Lal Chand was the seller or agent and Sew Karan, the owner or principal, that the convictions are right; or taking the view which has been urged upon us by the learned Counsel for the defence who obtained the Rule that they were partners the convictions will be equally right.

The Rules are therefore discharged.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 118—Suit by reversioner to recover possession on death of female owner from person alleged to have been adopted by her—Mahomedan law, adoption if permitted by—Family custom against alienation by female who has got property by gift from sonless father—What evidence relevant.

Omission to bring within the period prescribed by Art. 118 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (of 1877), a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid or never in fact took place, is no bar to a suit by the reversioner for recovery of possession upon the death of the female limited owner.

THAKUR TRIBHUWAN BAHADUR SINGH
v. RAJA RAMESHAR BAKHSI SINGH (1)
followed.

Under the general Mahomedan Law an adoption cannot be made, and if made will not carry with it any right of inheritance.

Held, on the evidence, that the alleged family custom, viz., that a female could take only a life interest in property which had come to her by gift from her sonless father and had no power to alienate it by a gift in her life-time was not only not proved but disproved in this case.

Evidence of a custom limiting the right of a widow in her deceased husband's property was not evidence from which the custom alleged could be inferred. Nor was evidence that a Muhammedan father had been prevented by some local custom from giving the bulk of his property to one of his sons, evidence which had any bearing on the issue as to the existence of the alleged custom.

This was an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated the 18th April 1906, reversing the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 13th January 1902, decreeing Plaintiffs' claim.

The Plaintiffs claimed possession of the property in suit on the ground that they were the reversionary heirs of Mussammat Zainab who died in May 1899. The Defendant pleaded that Mussammat Zainab was absolute owner; that she and her husband adopted him and made a gift of the property to him and put him in possession in 1888; that mutation was effected in Defendant's favour with the full knowledge of the Plaintiffs; and that subsequently, in 1895, the Plaintiffs partitioned some of the land with him and treated him as owner.

The parties were Sheikh Ansaris. The property was originally owned by Muhammad Ali Sher. On his death his estate was divided equally between his three sons Muhammad Sarwar Khan, Alamgir Khan and Jahangir Khan. Jahangir had a daughter, Mussammat Maryam, who was married to Alamgir's youngest son, Sarfraz, and to her Jahangir gifted by deed in 1832 the whole of his property in lieu of the dower of her mother. Mussammat Maryam during her life-time made a gift of this property to her husband Sarfraz.

After the death of Mussammat Maryam, Jahangir's brother's sons, Bahadur Khan, Muhammad Said and Saraj-ud-din (father of the Plaintiffs), sought to recover the property from Sarfraz. Sarfraz thereupon instituted proceedings and on the 16th May 1849 obtained a judgment in his favour. Only one of the Defendants Bahadur Khan appealed. His appeal was dismissed on the 3rd August 1849.

Subsequently, viz., in 1851, Sarfraz executed a deed of gift whereby he conveyed the whole of his own property inherited from his father Alamgir together with the property received from his wife, to his daughter Mussammat Zainab (who was married to his sister's son, Baghe Khan) in lieu of her mother's dower. Mussammat Zainab took possession as absolute owner.

On the death of Sarfraz in or about 1853, Saraj-ud-din, father of the Plaintiffs, brought a suit for possession on the ground that as Sarfraz had died sonless the property passed to his collaterals. The Court on the 25th June 1859 dismissed the claim. On appeal the judgment of the first Court was affirmed. The collaterals made a further appeal to the Commissioner who by his judgment, dated the 25th February 1860, dismissed the appeal and affirmed the judgments of the Courts below.

On the 3rd May 1888 Baghe Khan and Zainab by deed, gifted the whole of the property in suit along with certain other property to the Defendant. This deed was duly registered and the Defendant was placed in possession and mutation was effected.

Mussammat Zainab died on the 4th May 1899. The present suit was filed on the 11th May 1900, the Plaintiffs claiming possession of the property on the following grounds: The property being ancestral Mussammat Zainab had only a life interest and that on her death it devolved on the Plaintiffs, the reversionary heirs; that the Defendant had unlawfully taken possession of the property on Mussammat Zainab's death and had his name wrongly entered in the official papers as her adopted son; that Mussammat Zainab did not effect any settlement in favour of the Defendant, nor did she ever adopt him, nor was she competent either in law or by custom to transfer the property in suit or to make an adoption and that such transfer is null and void as against Plaintiffs, the reversionary heirs. The Defendant denied the alleged custom and relied on the said deed of gift.

On the pleadings the District Judge framed the following issues:—

(1) Whether Sarfraz Khan made the gift in favour of Mussammat Zainab in lieu of her mother's dower, or in consequence of her being his daughter?

(2) Whether by law or custom Mussammat Zainab had, under the gift in question, become an absolute owner so as to have a right of alienation of property, or whether she, in case of her being childless, had only a life interest in the said property, and whether it was to revert to her reversioners on her death?

(3) Whether Mussammat Zainab adopted the Defendant, and whether she was competent to do so?

(4) Whether the settlement of the property in dispute effected by Mussammat Zainab in favour of the Defendant was lawful?

(5) Whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to the property in dispute? If so, what improvements has the Defendant made by building and repairing houses and by planting trees and a garden, and whether he is entitled to compensation therefor?

(6) Whether the present suit is within time or not, having regard to denial of adoption and the fact of possession?

MUHAMMAD UMAR KHAN v. MUHAMMAD NIAZ-UD-DIN KHAN.

After recording evidence both oral and documentary the District Judge delivered judgment on the 13th January 1902. He found that whether the property came to Mussammat Zainab by way of payment of a dower or not the gift was merely for her life; that the property not being self-acquired was ancestral in her hands and that having no customary or other power of alienation her gift to the Defendant was void. He also found that the adoption of the Defendant became known to the Plaintiffs in 1888 but inasmuch as the adoption of the Defendant as heir to the ancestral property of Musammat Zainab was "inherently invalid and ipso facto void," Art. 118 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act was inapplicable, and the suit was therefor within time.

The Plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree for possession with costs.

Against the said judgment and decree of the District Judge the Defendant appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab. The appeal was heard before a Division Bench of the said Court (Johnstone and Rattigan, JJ.) and judgment delivered on the 18th April 1906. In their judgment the learned Judges find that by their silence after their objections in the mutation proceedings of 1888 and their actions in regard to the partitions in 1895 and 1896 the Plaintiffs acquiesced in the Defendant's possession and were now estopped from denying the Defendant's title; that the factum of the adoption by Mussammat Zainab was proved and that it became known to the Plaintiffs at latest in 1888, that such adoption was not "inherently invalid" and that the suit was barred by Art. 118.

The Chief Court accordingly allowed the appeal and passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs. Hence this appeal.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Abdul Majid for the Appellants.—The Chief Court is wrong in applying Art. 118, Sch. II, Limitation Act, 1877. Under the Limitation Act of 1871 a suit to set aside an adoption covered suits for possession and for declaration that an adoption was invalid. The Chief Court appears to have relied on authorities under that Act. But the subsequent Act of 1877 is in different terms. Suits covered by Arts. 118 and 119 are declaratory suits brought under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The present suit is a suit for possession and Art. 141, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877 applies. It is not obligatory to obtain a declaratory decree before suing for possession. The decision in Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (1) is conclusive. It distinguished the case of Jagadamba Chowdhurani v. Dakhina Mohan (2). Under Art. 91, Limitation Act, 1877, a reversioner has the option of bringing a suit to set aside a deed of alienation made by a Hindu widow or of instituting a suit for possession after her death. Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (3). Similar considerations apply to the present suit.

As to estoppel by acquiescence it is a question of fact.

It was not raised in the written statement and was not put in issue nor was it discussed before the Court of first instance. The Chief Court erred in allowing the plea to be raised for the first time at the hearing of the appeal. Further the facts and evidence on the record do not establish any acquiescence on the Plaintiffs' part precluding them from maintaining their claim. The parties are not governed by the Mahomedan law. The evidence shows that the parties are ordinary agriculturists and are consequently governed by the customary law. The contention that the parties being Moslems Mahomedan law applies cannot be supported. Even the Defendant relies upon custom inasmuch as he bases his claim upon adoption which is repugnant to Mahomedan law. The previous litigation between the present basti and others shows that Mahomedan law has never been applied and customary law has been applied. The custom that in the family of the parties a female could take only a life-interest in the ancestral property given to her by her sonless father and that she had no power to alienate such property was proved by the evidence. Reference was made to Hijju v. Nur Mahomed (4), Mahomed v. Jaffir Khan (5), Lehna v. Thakri (6), [cf. Changhatta v. Mohkam Din (7) and Gulam Bhikh v. Massania (8)], *Miran Bakhsh v. District Gazetteer (1904), Vol. XIV. A., p. 96.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. O'Gorman for the Respondent.—There is no such thing as the territorial customary law of the Punjab. There are many tribes or races and the customary law is the customary law of those races. It is for the Plaintiffs to prove the custom. The Plaintiffs are not agriculturists and are not a tribe to which the customary law of the Punjab applies. The Sheikh Ansaris are not governed by the so-called Punjab Customary Law. If they have adopted certain peculiar customs in place of the strict Mahomedan law such rules must be proved. Plaintiffs have failed to prove that where a daughter receives by an absolute deed of gift her father's property she only takes a life estate. There is not a single instance of such custom applicable to the parties. The cases cited by the other side refer to other tribes such as Jats, etc. There is no adoption in the sense of Hindu law among the Mahomedans. By adoption in the present case is meant a nomination of an heir made to strengthen the deed of gift. Partitions effected in 1895 and 1896 showed conclusively that the Plaintiffs acquiesced in adoption and the rights of the Defendant and they were now estopped from questioning them. The greater portion of the property in suit belonged to Jahangir. He gifted it to his daughter Maryam by deed. She made oral gift in her life-time to her husband. The husband's suit in 1849 was decided in his favour. If the daughter's estate was only an estate for life as contended by the Plaintiffs the husband's possession was adverse and property in his hands was self-acquired and not ancestral. As to the evidentiary value of a wajib-ul-urs reference was made to Baden Powell's Land Systems of India (1892), Vol. 2, Bk. 3, Pt. IV, p. 566.

MUHAMMAD UMAR KHAN v. MUHAMMAD NIAZ-UD-DIN KHAN.

reversing the decree of the District Judge of Jullundur, dated the 13th of January 1902, which had decreed the Plaintiff's claim.

The Plaintiffs brought this suit on the 11th of May 1900 to obtain possession of certain immoveable property, lands and houses, in Basti Danishmandan, in the Punjab, which they claimed as their ancestral property. In their plaint they alleged that the property in question had been held for her life by Mussammat Zainab, by virtue of a gift made to her by her father Sarfraz Khan, an uncle of the Plaintiffs, and that on her death on the 4th of May 1899 the right of inheritance in the property devolved upon them as reversionary heirs. They also alleged in their plaint that Mussammat Zainab had not, in fact, transferred the property to the Defendant, and that if she had transferred the property to him such transfer was, by law, according to the custom of the tribe to which the parties belong, and the Riway-i-Am, null and void as against the Plaintiffs as reversionary heirs.

The Defendant by his pleadings alleged title as owner in himself by gift from Mussammat Zainab, alleged that Mussammat Zainab was entitled to the full estate in the property in question and not merely to an estate for her life, that the Plaintiffs had any right to the estate, denied that the property was ancestral, denied that any law or tribal custom existed which made the gift to the Defendant unlawful or void, and amongst other things alleged that he had been adopted as her son by Mussammat Zainab.

The parties to the suit are Sheikh Ansaris of a Pathan tribe of Punjab Muhammadans. The Defendant is in possession of the property in dispute under a gift from Mussammat Zainab made to him in her life-time. The Plaintiffs' case, the only case on which they could have succeeded, is that, according to a custom which they alleged to be existing and binding in their family, no woman could take by gift more than a mere interest for her life without any power of alienation in any ancestral property of the family, and consequently that the gift by Mussammat Zainab to the Defendant was void. Many issues, some of which, in the view which their Lordships take of this case, were immaterial or irrelevant, were raised by the parties, and much evidence was recorded. The District Judge of Jullundur gave the Plaintiffs a decree for possession. From that decree the Defendant appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab. The Judges in the Chief Court mainly directed their attention to a question of acquiescence, which their Lordships consider did not arise on the facts, and to the alleged adoption of the Defendant by Mussammat Zainab, which was an immaterial issue, and having apparently, although somewhat uncertainly, found that Mussammat Zainab had adopted the Defendant, they applied Art. 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, to the case, allowed the appeal, and dismissed the suit with costs.

Although their Lordships consider that the question of an adoption was an immaterial issue they think it advisable to say that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Art. 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid, or never, in fact, took place, is no bar to a suit like this for possession of property. Their Lordships need only refer to Thakur Tirbhawan Bahadur Singh v.

MUHAMMAD UMAR KHAN v. MUHAMMAD NIAZ-UD-DIN KHAN.

Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (1). Under the General Muhammadan Law an adoption cannot be made; an adoption, if made in fact by a Muhammadan, could carry with it no right of inheritance.

It may be further observed that, even if an adoption by a Muhammadan was permissible by any valid custom in the Punjab, the Chief Court found that it had not been proved that the parties to the suit belonged to a family to which the Punjab agricultural or other similar restrictive customs must be presumed to apply.

In order to understand the material evidence in this case it is necessary to refer to the pedigree of the Plaintiffs. Muhammad Ali Sher, the common ancestor of the Plaintiffs and Mussammat Zainab, had three sons, one of whom, Jehangir Khan, had by his wife, Mussamat Fatima, a daughter, Mussammat Maryam, who married her cousin, Sarfraz Khan. Alamgir, another son of Muhammad Ali Sher, had three sons, one of whom was Sarfraz Khan, who married his cousin Mussammat Maryam; another son of Alamgir was Shahbaz Khan; and the other son of Alamgir was Seraj-ud-Din, otherwise called Seraj-ud-Din Khan, who was the father of the Plaintiffs. Another son of Muhammad Ali Sher was Sarwar Khan, who had two sons, one of whom was Muhammad Said; the other son of Sarwar Khan was Muhammad Bahadur Khan. Sarfraz Khan had by his wife Mussammat Maryam, a daughter Mussammat Zainab, who married Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din alias Baghe Khan. The Defendant is a son of Jamal-ud-Din, who was a son of a sister of Sarfraz Khan. Jamal-ud-Din Khan was a brother of Mohy-ud-Din alias Baghe Khan.

On the 3rd Ramzan 1248 A. H., Jehangir Khan, by his deed of gift, gave to his daughter Mussammat Maryam, wife of Sarfraz Khan, absolutely all his one-third share of the property of his ancestors which had fallen to his lot according to law, in lieu of the dower of her mother Mussammat Fatima. Mussammat Maryam obtained possession of the property which had been given to her by her father Jehangir Khan, and remained in possession for 15 years, when she gave that property to her husband Sarfraz Khan, who took possession on her death. Mussammat Maryam died in 1846 or 1847. After her death Sarfraz Khan's right to the possession of the property which had come to him from Mussammat Maryam was challenged by Muhammad Said Khan and Muhammad Bahadur Khan, sons of Sarwar Khan, and Sheraz-ud-Din Khan, the father of the Plaintiffs, who contested the alienation to Sarfraz Khan, alleging that by custom daughters had no right of succession. Sarfraz Khan brought a suit for maintenance of possession in the Court of the Deputy Collector against Muhammad Bahadur Khan, Muhammad Said Khan, and Sheraz-ud-Din. In that case Sheraz-ud-Din Shahbaz Khan, and Muhammad Bahadur Khan, proved that Mussammat Maryam had been in possession of the property, and had, through the agency of her husband Sarfraz Khan and his brother Sheraz-ud-Din, received the rents of the land together with zemindari dues, and had paid the Government revenue. In that case Muhammad Said Khan testified to the facts of the gift and delivery of possession to Mussammat Maryam, and Sheraz-ud-din admitted that a deed of gift had been executed and that possession had been delivered to Mussammat Maryam.

MUHAMMAD UMAR KHAN v. MUHAMMAD NIAZ-UD-DIN KHAN.

Several other witnesses, including the marginal witnesses to the deed of gift, proved that the property had remained in the possession of Mussammat Maryam for her life-time, and had, after her death, passed to Sarfraz Khan, her husband. On the 16th of May 1849, the Deputy Collector ordered that a decree for Sarfraz Khan's claim be passed to the effect that Sarfraz Khan should retain possession of the land then in suit. From that order of the Deputy Collector Muhammad Bahadur Khan appealed to the Settlement Officer, who, on the 3rd of August 1849, dismissed the appeal, holding that the inquiry before the Deputy Collector had established Sarfraz Khan's possession, occupation of, and title to the land, and that if Muhammad Bahadur Khan had any claim to the land he was at liberty to lodge a suit in a Civil Court. No suit was brought in a Civil Court to contest the right or title of Sarfraz Khan to the land which had come to him from Mussammat Maryam. The facts above referred to afford, in their Lordships' opinion, strong evidence that there was no custom applying to this family which limited the estate in ancestral lands which came to a daughter by gift to a mere life estate, and which prevented a daughter alienating such lands by gift in her life-time.

On the 15th of December 1851 Sarfraz Khan, who was then in possession of the lands which had come to him by gift from his wife Mussammat Maryam, and was also in possession of his own third share of three shares in the ancestral property which had come to him by lot according to law, made a deed of gift by which he gave to his daughter, Mussammat Zainab, absolutely his entire property of every kind, and gave her possession. To that deed Shahbaz Khan, son of Alamgir, was one of the witnesses. Sarfraz Khan died on the 10th of May 1852, and on that day the Patwari of Basti Danishmandan, on enquiry of Mussammat Zainab, was directed by her to enter the entire share of Sarfraz Khan, which had come to her, in the official papers in the name of her husband, Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, whose name was accordingly entered on the 10th of May 1852. In or about 1859 Muhammad Bahadur Khan and Muhammad Said Khan brought a suit in the Revenue Court of the extra Assistant Commissioner of Jullundur against Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, in which they claim possession of the lands which had come through Mussammat Maryam and Sarfraz Khan to Mussammat Zainab. The Plaintiffs in that suit alleged that Sarfraz Khan had not executed the deed of gift in favour of Mussammat Zainab; that the property in suit could not have passed through his wife, Mussammat Zainab to Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, and that as Sarfraz Khan had died without a son the property had vested in them, Muhammad Bahadur Khan and Muhammad Said. In that suit the Patwari of Basti Danishmandan was examined as a witness, and in reply to the question—"In Basti Danishmandan what custom prevails in respect of an estate left by a sonless proprietor?" said—

"The following custom prevails:—The estate of a proprietor dying childless goes to his daughters. Should he make a gift of his property during his life-time in favour of his daughters, they succeed to their father's estate. If he does not make a gift in favour of his daughters during his life-time, his brothers and brother's sons succeed to his estate."

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din gave evidence in that suit; he claimed no title in himself; he said that his wife Mussammat Zainab was the proprietor, and that she had full authority to have her own name inserted in the official papers or to allow the entry in his name to stand. Many other witnesses were examined in that suit, and on the 25th of June 1859 the extra Assistant Commissioner of Jullundur dismissed the suit. From that order dismissing the suit Muhammad Siraj-ud-Din (Sheraz-ud-Din Khan), who had apparently come into the suit as a Plaintiff, Muhammad Bahadur Khan, and Muhammad Said Khan, appealed to the Deputy Commissioner, who on the 31st of December 1859 rejected the appeal, but holding that as Mussammat Zainab alone was the proprietor, directed that her name should be entered in the column of owners. From the order rejecting their appeal Muhammad Seraj-ud-Din (Sheraj-ud-Din Khan), Muhammad Bahadur Khan, and Muhammad Said Khan, appealed to the Commissioner of Jullundur, who on the 25th of February 1860 dismissed their appeal.

On the 6th of May 1887, Baghe Khan (Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din) executed a deed in which he stated that he had adopted Niaz-ud-Din when he was two years old and that he and his wife had brought him up. Niaz-ud-Din, who is mentioned in the deed, is Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan, the Defendant in this suit.

On the 22nd of May 1888, Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din Khan and his wife Mussammat Zainab executed a deed of settlement by which Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din gave certain property of his Basti Danishmandan, which is not in dispute in this suit, to Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan, and Mussammat Zainab gave to Niaz-ud-Din Khan the property which is in dispute in this suit. In that deed it is stated that Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan had been placed in possession. An application was made to enter the name of the Defendant, Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan, in the column of proprietors in respect of the property in dispute in this suit, and Mussammat Zainab having stated to the Tahsildar that Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan was in possession, and no objector appearing, the Tahsildar sanctioned the mutation of names, and the name of Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan was accordingly entered in the column of proprietors.

In 1895 and in 1896 the principal lands which had been held in unpartitioned shares by Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan, Muhammad Umar Khan, and Muhammad Pirdad Khan, were by agreement between them partitioned, each having allotted to him lands which represented his share. Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din's shares in the partition represented shares which had come to him by the gift of Mussammat Zainab. Mussammat Zainab was then alive; she died on the 4th of May 1899.

Their Lordships consider that these partition proceedings between Mahammad Umar Khan, Muhammad Pirdad Khan, and Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan, who were the original parties to this suit, afford very strong evidence in favour of Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din, who is the Defendant in the suit, and Respondent in this appeal. The evidence which was given on behalf of the Plaintiffs to prove that a custom existed and applied to this family, by which a female could take only a life interest in the ancestral property which had come to her by gift from her sonless father, and had in such property no power to alienate it by a gift in her life-time, was of the most shadowy description and failed to prove the custom alleged by them. Evidence as to the limited rights by custom of a widow in her deceased husband's property was not evidence from which the custom alleged by the Plaintiffs in this suit could be inferred. Nor was evidence that a Muhammadan father had been prevented by some local custom from giving the bulk of his property to one of his sons, evidence which had any bearing on the issue in this case. The evidence, to which reference has been made by their Lordships, relating to the devolution of Jehangir Khan's share to Mussammat Zainab, is entirely inconsistent with the existence of the custom which has been alleged by the Plaintiffs.

Their Lordships find that not only have the Plaintiffs failed to prove the custom alleged by them, but the alleged custom has been disproved. They also find that Mussammat Zainab had a full proprietary estate in the property in dispute, and that she made a valid gift of that property to the Defendant.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab dismissing the suit of the Plaintiffs should be affirmed and this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint-family property—Acquisition by joint labour of co-parceners—Exclusion of a member—Suit for partition—Limitation.

Where Plaintiff sued as a co-parcener for partition of his share in joint-family property and the defence was that the Plaintiff's father was expelled from the family for misconduct and that his share in the family property was given to him in 1874, and it was proved that the Plaintiff who in 1874 was a child and left the family with his father and mother, re-appeared in the village in 1889 on his father's death and was then recognised as a member of the family and was not excluded till within 5 or 6 years of the suit when there was exclusion from commensality but no partition of the family property, Held—That the defence failed and the Plaintiff's suit should succeed.

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 4th April, 1907, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 23rd June, 1904.

The principal questions for determination on the present appeal were whether the Appellants and the Respondents constituted a joint undivided Hindu family within the meaning of the Mitakshara Law—and whether the suit was barred by limitation.

The following represents the pedigree of the family :—

The facts giving rise to the litigation shortly stated were as follows :—Pokhan was the founder of the fortunes of the family. Pokhan obtained service with Rai Makhnial, Zemindar, and in 1864 he induced the zemindar to also employ his sons, Jiaran and Chet, in the management of the zemindari. By taking leases and lending money he had, in the year 1874, acquired property of the value of Rs. 12,000 or 15,000. His sons lived with him.

In the month of October, 1874, Jiaran was alleged to have left the family house, in the village of Miar, with his wife and son Loke Narayan, Respondent, and went to live with his father-in-law Kirat at a village called Makhriawan. He died about the year 1880. The Appellants asserted that on his departure he received a proportionate share in the property then held by Pokhan, whether in law entitled to it or not, and that from that time he ceased to be a member of the joint family, or entitled to any further or other share in the family property. Loke Narayan returned to Miar in 1889 and he and his sons instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna.

The Plaintiff alleged that Jiaran was a member of a joint undivided family with Pokhan and his other sons, and remained as such till the date of his death, and that Loke Narayan and his sons continued to be joint members of the family till the date of the institution of this suit. The relief sought was separate possession by partition of a one-third share in all the properties set out in schedules annexed to the Plaintiff.

The Defendants, Chet Singh, his son, and the son of Gopal, who had died prior to suit, filed a written statement in defence. Their main pleas were that the property in possession of Pokhan at the time of Jiaran's separation in 1874, was not joint property of which Jiaran could claim a share by partition, that if it were, Jiaran had in fact separated, and ceased to be a member of the joint family, that on such separation he had received his share in the property with the result that he no longer had a claim on the remainder of the estate, or on the properties subsequently acquired by the remaining members of the family. It was also urged that the suit was barred by limitation, and that in any event only a portion of the properties specified in the schedule to the plaintiff constituted the joint-family property.

On these pleadings the Subordinate Judge fixed several issues of which the following are material :—

"Is the suit barred by limitation ?

"Was Jiaran separated by his father in 1281, as alleged by the Defendants, and did he and his family continue to live and have all along lived separately from the Defendants as alleged by them ?

"Did the Plaintiffs or their ancestors Jiaran and the Defendants and Pokhan hold and acquire the properties in suit as co-parcenary properties forming a joint family ?

JEOLAL MAHTON v. LOKE NARAYAN MAHTON.

"Whether the properties in suit except the properties Nos. XXXXX, which were acquired after the alleged separation of Jiamam are the exclusive properties of the Defendants as alleged by them, and whether the property that was acquired before that alleged separation of Jiamam came to be the exclusive property of the Defendants on account of that separation ?

"Have the Defendants treated and dealt with the properties they claim exclusively as their exclusive properties, the Plaintiffs not having asserted their claim thereto ? Are the Plaintiffs by their conduct estopped from claiming those properties ?

"What reliefs, if any, the Plaintiffs are entitled to."

After recording evidence, both oral and documentary, the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 23rd June 1904.

He held that Pokhan had no ancestral property except a straw thatched hut, and nothing which formed the nucleus of the after-acquired properties, that Pokhan and his sons, Jiamam and Chet Singh, had been earning members of a joint family, and that their acquisitions were joint properties up to the expulsion and exclusion of Jiamam, which he held took place in 1281, B. S. (1874), that in those joint properties the Plaintiff (Respondent) No. 1 took no interest on his birth they not being ancestral ; that the fact of Jiamam's expulsion and exclusion had been known to the said Plaintiffs for more than 12 years prior to suit ; that the possession of the properties by the Defendants (Appellants) had been adverse for more than 12 years, and that therefore the suit was barred by limitation.

As regards the factum of the expulsion and exclusion of and the separation from Jiamam, he believed the evidence of the Defendant No. 1, Chet Singh and his witnesses, and he disbelieved the story told by the Plaintiff (Respondent) No. 1, and his witnesses in this connection.

He held that from and after his expulsion, Jiamam ceased to be a member of the joint family, and that the Plaintiffs and Defendants thereafter lived separate from each other in every respect.

He held that the subsequent purchase by the Plaintiff (Respondent No. 1) of the share in Pariawna jointly with Chet Singh instead of proving that the family was joint proved the contrary. Having decided the third and fourth issues in favour of the Defendants, it was not necessary for him to deal with the other issues at length, and he accordingly made a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

Against the said judgment and decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Calcutta, while the Defendants (Appellants) filed cross-objections against certain of the findings in the judgment.

On the 4th April, 1907, the High Court (Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ.) delivered judgment on the said appeal, and made a decree reversing the decree of the lower Court, declaring the Plaintiffs' (Respondents') right to and directing a partition of the disputed properties with costs.

The High Court held as facts beyond doubt that Pokhan had no inherited ancestral estate, that whatever was acquired by him and his sons was by their joint labour and up to the disappearance of Jiamam in 1281 was joint family property ; that Pokhan originally managed the family affairs, and subsequently on his becoming too old, Chet Singh, Defendant No. 1, did so. In the course of their judgment they said :—

"This is the only notice of exclusion that we can find as against Loke Narayan and as it was only 5 years before suit it could not operate as a bar to his suit for a partition. In the case of Hari v. Maruti (1), it was held that even if the Defendant had been in possession of the property 15 years, still under Art. 127, Act XV of 1877, time would not run against the Plaintiff until his exclusion (if he was excluded) had become known to him. This view has been uniformly followed in the Bombay High Court, see Dinkar Sadashiv v. Bhikaji Sadashiv (2), Krishnabai v. Khangowda (3) and Jivanbhat v. Anibhat (4). The case of Ram Chandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (5) is in no way against this view, since in that case there had been admittedly partition 30 years before and the Plaintiff set up a special case of the reservation of a certain house from that partition and as that house had been in Defendant's sole possession ever since, the onus lay very heavily on the Plaintiff to show that he had preserved his own right. We may also note the cases of Das v. Maya Das (6) and Moro v. Keso (7) and Ganpat Rao v. Vinayak (8). In a very recent ruling, Ganesh Dutt Thakur v. Jewach Thakoorain (9), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have held that cesser of commensality is an element in determining whether there has been a partition or not, but it is not conclusive. After pointing out that the evidence in that case on both sides was, as in the present case, very voluminous, very conflicting, and for the most part unsatisfactory, their Lordships go on to say that cesser of commensality being established, it is necessary to consider whether the evidence in other respects supports or negatives the theory that the cesser in this case was adopted with a view to partition in the legal sense of the word. Having found that there was no exclusion of Jiamam in 1281, F. S., and no partition made in his favour and that Loke Narayan returned to Meyar in 1295, and set up in the family house under circumstances which lead us to suppose that he was recognised as a member of the family, and that he and Chet Singh did deal with certain properties as if they were joint, it seems to us impossible to hold that the Plaintiffs' suit for partition is barred unless it can be shown that some time between his return in 1295 and the 8th August, 1890, which would be equivalent to Bhadra, 1397, his exclusion from the family property became known to him.

"Having given the whole evidence our most careful attention, we are compelled to find that there has been no partition of the ancestral property the nucleus of which was acquired by Pokhan Mahton and contributed to as earning members of the family by Jiamam, Plaintiff's father, and Chet Singh Mahton, Defendant, and that there has been no exclusion set up against Loke Narayan at any rate till five or six years ago when there appears to have been exclusion from commensality but no partition of the family property."

They accordingly made a decree reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K.C., and Mr. Dunne submitted that the conclusions at which the Subordinate Judge had arrived were right. The circumstances under which Jiamam left Meyar in 1874 operated in Hindu law as a separation from the family.

He never returned to the family house, and clearly showed an intention to separate. Mere intention to separate on the part of a member operates as partition of the Hindu joint family. Parbati v. Naunihal Singh (10).

Mr. Bhugwandin Dube (attended at delivery of judgment) for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This case was heard ex parte. The suit was brought by one Loke Narayan Mahton and his three sons as members of a joint undivided Hindu family under the Mitakshara Law, asking for a declaration that they were entitled to one-third share of the family property, and for an order for partition on that footing. The defence was that Jiamram Mahton, Loke Narayan's father, who was the son of Pokhan Mahton, was expelled from the family in 1874 in consequence of some scandalous conduct which brought upon him the displeasure of the Zemindar in whose service the family were employed—that on his expulsion there was a partition so far as he was concerned, and he then received his share of the family property which had been all acquired in the service of the Zemindar by Pokhan and his sons, and that thereupon Jiamram disappeared with his wife and his son, Loke Narayan, who was a mere child at the time, and so his connection with the family came to an end. It was also contended that the Plaintiffs' claim was barred by the law of limitation.

The suit was dismissed with costs in the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge of Patna. On appeal to the High Court at Calcutta this judgment was reversed and a decree was pronounced in favour of the Plaintiffs.

The evidence is very voluminous and very contradictory. The oral testimony on both sides seems to be even more than usually untrustworthy. After a most elaborate and careful review of the whole case, from which nothing of importance appears to be omitted, and to which nothing can be usefully added, the learned Judges of the High Court came to the conclusion that the case set up of Jiamram's expulsion in 1874 and the alleged partition of the family property on that occasion failed completely. Then they proceeded to consider the position of affairs when Loke Narayan reappeared in 1889 after his father's death and took up his abode in the village where the surviving members of the family lived. The view of the Court was that he was then recognised as a member of the family, and that no case of exclusion from the joint property could be made out against him till five or six years before suit, when there appeared to have been exclusion from commensality but no partition of the family property.

The case was very fully and very ably presented to this Board by the learned Counsel for the Appellants, but their Lordships are not satisfied that there is any ground for disturbing the judgment of the High Court.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

JURISDICTION.]

SALIMULLA.

High Seas, murder by a British Indian on a British vessel bound for Calcutta—Jurisdiction of Calcutta High Court, Criminal Sessions—Substantive law applicable, English or British Indian—Sec. 684, Merchant Shipping Act (57 and 58 Vict., c. 60)—Sec. 3, Colonial Act (37 and 38 Vict., c. 27)—Sec. 4, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

The High Court of Calcutta at the Court of Criminal Sessions has jurisdiction under sec. 684 of the Merchant Shipping Act (57 and 58 Vict., c. 60) to try a British Indian who is charged with committing murder on a British vessel in the Red Sea when the accused has been brought to Calcutta, no matter how he may have been brought there.

When the offence was committed in the High Seas the substantive law applicable to the case is the English law.

The fact that the accused is a British Indian does not make any difference in the applicability of the English substantive law.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHEIK ABDUL RAHMAN (1) dissented from.

Sec. 3 of the Colonial Act (37 and 38 Vict., c. 27) does not deal with the trial of case but with the sentence after conviction, the statute adapting the local machinery for punishment to the English definition of crime.

It is possible to give sec. 4 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) a construction which is not inconsistent with the English Statute, but in any case it could not affect the specific Statute of Parliament.

This is a case in which one Salimulla, a fireman on board the British Ship S. S.

(1) I. L. R. 14 Bom. 227 (1889).

Clan Lamont, was charged with the murder on the High seas of one William McCrae, the second engineer of the vessel.

Mr. S. A. Ashgar for the defence contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case. The offence was alleged to have been committed on the high seas (Red Sea) and the vessel touched at Perim where certain proceedings were taken against the accused. The vessel also touched at Tuticorin, from where the accused was brought to Calcutta by train. The accused ought to have been tried at either of these places and not in Calcutta. Submitted that the accused is an Indian and if he has committed an offence on the high seas he must be tried by the substantive laws of the country, and under the Criminal Procedure Code. [Queen-Empress v. Barton (3), Queen-Empress v. Gunning (4)]. The following cases were cited: King-Emperor v. Chief Officer of "S. S. Mushtar" (2) and Queen-Empress v. Sheik Abdool Rahman (1). Submitted that the charges should be framed under the Indian Penal Code in accordance with these two Bombay cases.

Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Crown submitted that he relied on the Statute 57 and 58 Vict., c. 60, secs. 684 and 686, and amendment of the Indian Penal Code (1898), sec. 4. Statutes 37 and 38 Vict., c. 27, sec. 3. The English Act must apply in this case and the charges must be framed under the English Statutes.

WOODROFFE, J.—Learned Counsel for the accused, before the charge was read, contended, firstly, that this Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, and, secondly, that if it had, the Penal Code and not the English law was the substantive law applicable. The first contention is based on the fact that after the offence the ship touched at the ports of Perim, Aden and Tuticorin. Assuming for the sake of argument (though I do not consider the point) that the accused might have been tried at any of those places, sec. 684 of the Merchant Shipping Act (57 and 58 Vict., c. 60) provides for jurisdiction in any place in which the offender or person complained against, may be. The accused is now here, however he may have come here, (though it is to be noted that this port was that of the destination of the ship) and I hold therefore that this Court has jurisdiction to try him. Learned Counsel's argument on the second contention assumes that the question he now raises could not have arisen prior to the Colonial Jurisdiction Act (37 and 38 Vict., c. 27, sec. 3) and that even after that Act English law would be applicable if the accused had been by nationality British. The accused who is a British subject is however an Indian native of Sylhet. Learned Counsel therefore contends that so far as such subjects the law was altered by the Colonial Jurisdiction Act and he relies upon the decisions of the Bombay High Court reported in Queen-Empress v. Sheik Abdool Rahman (1) and King-Emperor v. Chief of "S. S. Mushtar" (2). His contention is that the substantive law varies with the nationality of the accused. The correctness of the Bombay decision, Queen-Empress v. Sheik Abdool Rahman (1), has been doubted by M. Mayne in his Criminal Law of India (3rd Ed., sec. 76) for reasons with which I agree. As he states, and I agree, sec. 3 of the Colonial Act does not deal with the trial of the case but with the sentence after conviction, the Statute adapting the local machinery for punishment to the English definition of crime. Moreover the very terms of sec. 3 is against the contention now raised in so far as it provides for the case of an offence which is not punishable by the law of the Colony in which the trial takes place. This negatives the view that the law governing the offence is the substantive law of the Colony. Sec. 686 of 57 and 58 Vict., c. 94, speaks of British subject which includes an Indian subject. Reference has been made to sec. 4 of the Penal Code. It is possible to give the section a construction which is not inconsistent with the English Statute but in any case it could not, (assuming that the Indian Legislature had jurisdiction in this matter) affect the Specific Statute of Parliament. I hold therefore that the substantive law applicable to the case is the English law and that the charge has been rightly framed in this respect. The accused will therefore be called upon to plead to the charge and the trial will proceed.

Specific Relief Act, sec. 45 and proviso (c)—Mandamus, issue of, by High Court against public officer for non-performance of statutory duty—Election roll, preparation of—The Calcutta Municipal Act (B. C., III of 1899), Sch. IV, r. 8—Time, place and officer for lodging notice of claim an objection to voter's list as provided by the Act, if may be varied.

Where the Calcutta Municipal Act, Sch. IV, r. 8, provides that the notice of any claims or objections to the voter's list should be lodged with the Chairman on or before the 1st of January and some persons instead of filing such notice of claims before the duly authorised Deputy Chairman, who kept the Election Department open on that day, left the notice of claims on the 1st of January with the Secretary to the Corporation in his private residence and then on the 2nd of January they took the papers from the Secretary and filed them with the Deputy Chairman :

Held—That the requirement under the Act had not been satisfied and the Deputy Chairman had no authority to extend the time to the 2nd of January and allow the claim.

The omission of a statutory officer to perform the public duties as to the settlement of election roll in the manner provided by the Act amounts to doing or forbearing to do something not consonant to right and justice and it is within the jurisdiction of the High Court to issue an order in the form of a mandamus on the officer under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Mr. H. D. Bose and Mr. N. Sircar) for Mr. R. C. Sen.

Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation.

Mr. S. R. Das for Mr. Cohen.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule granted under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act calling upon Mr. S. L. Maddox, Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation, to show cause why he should not prepare and publish a revised list of voters for Ward No. 13 of the Municipal town of Calcutta under Sch. 10 of the Calcutta Municipal Act by rejecting the claims, objections and applications filed by Mr. I. J. Cohen, Commissioner of the said Ward No. 13, on the 2nd day of January 1912, and by giving effect to the claims, objections and applications filed by Mr. Romesh Chandra Sen as if the said claims, objections and applications filed by the said Mr. I. J. Cohen were not filed at all, and why he should not pay the costs of and incidental to this application.

Now the Rules for preparation and publication are contained in Sch. IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899. Rule 8 provides that every person who claims to have his name inserted in the list as being qualified under any of the clauses of sec. 37, or who claims to be entitled to more votes than are allotted to him in the list must give notice of his claim on or before the first day of the succeeding month of January.

The point in dispute which arises in this case is as follows : The Chairman delegated all his duties to the Deputy Chairman, Mr. Goode. Sec. 18 provides that the Chairman has the power to delegate his powers. The Deputy Chairman says quite frankly that the office was kept open not only on the 1st January but also on the 2nd and he said quite frankly that in settling all the lists of voters he did not consider whether the claims were lodged on the 1st or 2nd. It is quite obvious to my mind that there is nothing in the Act to suggest that the Chairman can extend the time beyond the 1st January for lodging claims or objections. The point is that Mr. I. J. Cohen took these claims on the 1st January not to the Election Department, but to the private residence of the Secretary to the Corporation who happens to live in the same building as the Corporation keeps its office. However that may be, the place where the papers were lodged by Mr. I. J. Cohen was not the office of the Corporation, but the private residence of the Secretary to the Corporation, the Chairman having appointed a certain place known as the Election Department as the office for taking work with reference to the election of the Corporation and that office was open on the 1st January. The order of Mr. Goode, the Deputy Chairman, is as follows :—"It is admitted that Messrs. I. J. Cohen and D. G. Cohen, Commissioners of the Calcutta Corporation, made over a number of applications to Mr. Mukherjee, Secretary to the Corporation, on the evening between 5 and 6 on the 1st January asking him to receive them as the Election Department was closed. Mr. Mukherjee received the applications and placed them in a box in his office. The box was not locked. Next day about noon Messrs. Cohen came to Mr. Mukherjee who sent a Chaprasi with them taking the applications to the Election Department. The first point is that there is nothing to show that the Secretary to the Corporation is the proper person with whom to lodge the election papers. The person directed by Sch. IV to carry into effect preparations and publications of the Municipal Election Roll is a separate Municipal authority as defined in the Act, namely, the Chairman of the Corporation, and the duties are cast upon the Chairman, and not upon any other authority to carry into effect the provisions of Sch. IV. Moreover the evidence seems to establish that the Election office remained open on the 1st January till 9 P.M. Then the next point is that the next day about noon Messrs. Cohen came to the Secretary and took these papers to the Election Department. It seems to me that on the ordinary reading of English language the papers were not lodged in the Election Department by the Secretary but by Mr. Cohen on the 2nd. In my opinion whether they were lodged for safe custody, or with a view to be lodged in time on the 1st, the lodging with the Secretary was not a proper lodging as required by the terms of the Act unless it is shown that the Chairman of the Corporation had authorized the private residence of the Secretary to the Corporation as a place where the claims could be lodged. The Chairman of the Corporation has a private residence of his own. If it were necessary to lodge the papers with the Chairman when the Election office was closed, there was nothing to prevent Mr. Cohen going to the Chairman and lodging the papers with him. I think the more probable story is that these papers were left with the Secretary on the night of the 1st and Mr. Cohen came the next day and took them to the Election officer, and in fact the papers were lodged in the Election office on the 2nd by this gentleman. Then the only question is, ought this Court to issue an order in the form of mandamus. The representation made by the Chairman of the Corporation is that he really does not know if he has performed his statutory duties or not. The Chairman does not oppose the rule being made absolute. Mr. Das raises the point that under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, proviso (c), it has not been shown that in the opinion of the Court such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice. If the omission of a statutory officer to perform his public duties as to the settlement of the Election Roll in the manner provided by the Act is not forbearing to do something that is consonant to right and justice, I do not know what is. There can be no standard of right and justice, except to see whether the public officer has properly performed the duties cast upon him by the statute or not. It seems to me, on the representation of the Corporation, there is no option but for the Court to make this Rule absolute, and direct the Chairman to act in accordance with the terms of the rule. The point on which the Corporation has asked for a direction is as to whether these papers lodged with Mr. Mukherjee on the first were properly lodged. I am of opinion that if the facts are as stated in Mr. Goode's order, then these claims, objections and applications were not properly lodged. They were lodged by Mr. Cohen in the Election office on the 2nd January. I accordingly make the Rule absolute.

With regard to costs, the Chairman has acted in good faith. He delegated his duties to a junior officer who kept the office open on the 2nd and 3rd. This appears to have been a slip and I do not therefore order the Chairman to pay the costs. As against Mr. Das's client he came here and fought the Rule but has failed. That being so, I think the ordinary rule must apply. I direct Mr. Das's client to pay the applicant's costs of the Rule.

RADHA KANT CHUCKERBUTTY v. RAMANANDA SHAHA.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of CHITTY, J.

The appeal came on for hearing in the first instance before Chitty and Coxe, JJ., who delivered the following dissentient judgments :—

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by Radha Kanta Chuckerbutty, Defendant No. 6, in a mortgage suit against the decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, making him liable under the mortgage. One Maniram, or Maun Kaibarto, husband of Defendant No. 1, by a kobala, dated 27th Aswin 1307 (13 Oct. 1900), mortgaged 8 kanis 13 gundas 3 karas of land, in which he held raiyati rights, to the Plaintiff to secure Rs. 400 and interest at Re. 1-14 per cent. per mensem. Maniram died without having paid off the mortgage or any part of it. His widow, Defendant No. 1, transferred some portion of the land to Defendant No. 2, who again sold to Defendant No. 3. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are puisne mortgagees of those portions. By a kobala, dated and registered on 27th Pous 1313 (11th January 1907), Defendant No. 1 with the consent of the landlord sold plots 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 of the lands in suit, measuring between 4 and 5 kanis, to Defendant No. 6. This suit was filed by Plaintiff on 12th January 1907. Defendant No. 6 was not at first made a party. After the institution of the suit, namely, on 13th Magh 1313 (27th January 1907) the Defendant No. 6 took a fresh settlement from the landlord of the land which he had purchased from Defendant No. 1, and a pottah and kabuliyat at an enhanced rent were exchanged. Defendant No. 6 was added as a party Defendant on 5th February 1907, and, with Defendant No. 3, contested the suit.

The only points for our determination are : (1) whether Defendant No. 6 was a proper and necessary party to the suit, and (2) whether he is estopped from pleading the invalidity of the mortgage on the ground that the raiyati right of Maniram was not transferable. The District Judge decided against him on both points and Defendant No. 6 has appealed. As to the first point, the Appellant's pleader relied on the case of Jaggiswar v. Bhudan (13), but in my opinion this is a very different case. There it was held that a third party who is in no way connected with the mortgage and who claims adversely to both mortgagor and mortgagee cannot be made a party to a suit on the mortgage in order to try the question of his title. Here Defendant No. 6 admittedly acquired a title to the land in question in the first instance from the mortgagor but claims to have exchanged it for something better by subsequently taking a fresh settlement from the landlord. The question whether he can be allowed to do this is a question properly arising for determination in the mortgage suit, and he was therefore rightly made a party Defendant. The next question is whether he is estopped as a representative of the mortgagor from denying the validity of the mortgage, in other words can he now be allowed as against the mortgagee to relinquish the title which he derived from the mortgagor and set up the title subsequently acquired from the landlord. The learned pleader for the Appellant cited the case of Agarwal Bibi v. Panaula (14), but in my opinion that case has really no bearing on the present question. The question seems to me one to be decided on general principles of equity. Defendant No. 6 having previously obtained the landlord's consent purchased a portion of this holding from

(14) 14 C. W. N. 779 (1910).

RADHA KANT CHUCKERBUTTY v. RAMANANDA SHAHA.

Defendant No. 1, he clearly derived his title to what he purchased from Defendant No. 1 alone and not, as has been argued, from Defendant No. 1 and the landlord together. The whole title to what Defendant No. 6 purchased was in Defendant No. 1, and the fact that the landlord's consent was necessary before she could part with it does not mean that the title was derived in part from the landlord.

Defendant No. 6, therefore, took what he purchased subject to the liabilities which Defendant No. 1 or her husband had incurred, that is to say, he took subject to the mortgage. If the suit had then been brought against him, he could not have denied the validity of the mortgage. Can he subsequently throw off that title and acquire a new one for the obvious purpose, of defeating the mortgagee's claim? I am of opinion that it would be inequitable to allow him to do so, and it would certainly open the door to fraud in a large number of cases.

The case of Krishna Lal v. Bhairab Chandra (1), Second Appeal No. 35 of 1904, was brought to our notice. The facts of that case appear to be very different from the present. There the contesting Defendant had purchased the right, title and interest of the mortgagor at an execution sale. If the occupancy holding was not transferable by custom, he took no interest in it by his purchase. That appears to me very different from the present case of a voluntary transfer by the mortgagor made with the landlord's consent previously obtained. Here Defendant No. 6 obtained a perfectly good title by his purchase from the mortgagor with the landlord's consent subject only to the mortgage. There could be no possible object in his obtaining a fresh settlement from the landlord at an enhanced rent except to defeat or endeavour to defeat the claims of the mortgagees. This he ought not to be allowed to do. I would dismiss the appeal with costs. Hearing-fee 2 gold mohurs for each hearing.

As my learned colleague is of a different opinion, the case must be laid before the Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge.

COXE, J.—I think that this appeal ought to be allowed. The land to which it relates was purchased by the Appellant on the 9th January 1907 with the landlord's consent, and on the 27th January 1907 the Appellant obtained a settlement from the landlord at an enhanced rent and payment of a premium. The land formed part of a holding which had been mortgaged to the Plaintiff without the landlord's consent by the husband of the vendor of the Appellant. The Plaintiff sued upon the mortgage on the 12th January 1907, not making the Appellant a party. But as the other Defendants objected, the Plaintiff made the Appellant a party on the 6th February 1907. It is found that the holding was not transferable without the landlord's consent and that the sale to the Appellant was effected bona fide for consideration.

The question for decision is whether under these circumstances the Appellant is estopped from pleading that the holding was not transferable without the landlord's consent. That it was not so transferable is laid down in numerous rulings of which the last is Agarjan v. Panaula (14). The mortgagee took nothing by his purchase and all that has to be decided is whether the Appellant is entitled to say so. Now if he had purchased the holding in execution of a money-deed, at which no title whatever would have passed and the judgment-debtors' interest would, in the eye of the law, have continued to subsist. [Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Nath (15)], and had subsequently taken a settlement, he would have been entitled to raise the plea that the holding was not transferable by the judgment-debtor without the landlord's consent [Krishna Lal v. Bhairab Chandra (1)]. It seems anomalous that a person acquiring title in such a manner should practically get the property free of encumbrances while one who regularly purchases according to the law with the landlord's consent should be bound by all that the original tenant debtor has unlawfully done.

Doubtless there is authority that a tenant who mortgages his property without the landlord's consent is estopped from afterwards pleading that it is not transferable. The learned Judges who decided the case of Agarjan Bibi v. Fanaulla (14) guarded themselves from expressing an opinion on this point and it has been strenuously argued in this case that there can be no estoppel against the law of the land. If it be assumed that the transferee knows the custom of the country that holdings are not transferable without consent then, it is said, he cannot be misled by the statement of the tenant that his holding is so transferable. But undoubtedly there is plenty of authority from the opposite view and I am not prepared now to question that authority.

But I do not think that the principle of estoppel should be extended to purchasers with the landlord's consent. If a man wants land which he knows to be not transferable without the landlord's consent and buys it with the landlord's consent, I do not see why he should be bound by previous transfers without consent, which he had every reason at the time of his purchase for believing or indeed knowing to be invalid. He is not, I think, a mere representative of the tenant within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act but something more than that. Two persons, the landlord and the tenant, had to join in giving him his title and he does not derive his title exclusively from either but from both. So far as he derives it from the landlord, he is not, in my opinion, the representative of the tenant and is entitled to question the tenant's alienations.

Taking this view, I would allow the appeal and restore the Munsif's decision.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHATTERJEE, J.—An occupancy-holding, which has been found to be not transferable without the consent of the landlord, was mortgaged to the Plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 who is the heir of the mortgagor sold a part of this holding to Defendant No. 6 with the consent of the landlord who subsequently gave a fresh lease to Defendant No. 6 at an enhanced rent. On a suit being brought on the mortgage the Defendant No. 6 pleaded that the mortgage was void as the holding mortgaged was not transferable without the consent of the landlord and no such consent had been obtained. There being a difference of opinion as to whether Defendant No. 6 was estopped from pleading the non-transferability of the holding the question has been referred to me under sec. 98 of the Civil Procedure Code. I shall in this judgment call Defendant No. 1 the mortgagor and the Defendant No. 6 the Appellant.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the Appellant that there can be no estoppel against a Statute and as an occupancy-holding is not transferable under the Bengal Tenancy Act there can be no estoppel from pleading what the Statute provides. The Statute however does not provide either that these holdings are transferable or not transferable, but leaves the question to be decided by local usage or custom. See secs. 178 and 183. The existence or otherwise of the custom or usage is a fact to be pleaded and proved and I do not think that the principle relied on has any application to the present case. It is next contended that the purchaser is not a representative of the mortgagor within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act, as he has derived his title practically from the landlord alone without whose consent the sale would have passed nothing. The landlord alone could not however have given him a title. Any grant by the landlord alone during the subsistence of the tenancy of the mortgagor could not entitle him to the possession of the holding. There is some controversy in the books as to whether a sale of a portion of an occupancy-holding confers any title on the purchaser, and the matter is under consideration by the Full Bench. I would however take it for granted that the mortgagor alone could not confer any title and neither could the landlord by his own act and without the concurrence of the mortgagor. The two therefore joined to pass such title as the Appellant has acquired. In this view the Appellant has derived some title from the mortgagor although he has acquired an additional title from the landlord, and to that extent at least he must be considered a representative of the mortgagor. The mortgagor was bound by his deed of mortgage not to assert against the mortgagee that he had no right to mortgage and the Appellant who derived his title at least in part from the mortgagor cannot be allowed to make a like assertion.

Against this view of the law the learned Vakil for the Appellant has relied on two cases (1) an unreported decision of Ghosh and Pratt, JJ, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 35 of 1904, Krishna Lal Shaha v. Bhairab Chandra Dey (1), and (2) a decision of Rampini, Offg. C. J, and Ryves, J., in Ishwardhary Singh v. Bibi Sahebzadi (2). In the first case an execution purchaser of the interest of the mortgagor in an occupancy-holding who after his purchase obtained recognition from the landlord was held to be not estopped from pleading the non-transferability of the holding to a suit by the mortgagee on his mortgage bond: the learned Judges said that the Defendant No. 2 (the auction-purchaser of the holding) stood on a higher ground independent of the purchase and could not therefore be estopped from raising the plea of non-transferability. In the second case the landlord himself purchased a mortgaged holding in execution of a money decree and then took the plea in a suit by the mortgagee on his mortgage and was held entitled to do so.

(2) 12 C. W. N. 720 (1908).

RADHA KANT CHUCKERBUTTY v. RAMANANDA SEHAHA.

I do not think it would be right to distinguish these cases as cases of purchase by auction-sale; for although there were some cases in the books [see Purbhulal v. Mylne (3), Gour Sunder v. Ham Chandra (4), Bashi Chandra v. Enayet Ali (5)], which held on the authority of certain dicta of the Judicial Committee [see Anundamoyee v. Dhonendra Chandra (6), Dinendra Nath v. Ram Kumar (7)], that estoppels binding upon the judgment-debtor were not binding upon the auction-purchaser, the matter has been finally set at rest by the Judicial Committee itself in the case of Mozaffer Husain v. Kishori Mohun Roy (8), in which their Lordships held that the auction-purchaser was bound by an estoppel which bound the person whose right, title and interest he purchased. There is however a material distinction and that is that in neither of these cases, the mortgagor co-operated with the purchaser for creating a title in derogation of the mortgage. This upon general principles of equity the mortgagor should not be allowed to do and there is ample authority for this. I may refer in this connection to the case of Doe v. Stone (9), in which it was held that it was not open to a person who has derived title from a mortgagor to set up against the claim of the mortgagee a title which the mortgagor himself could not set up. In the case of Doe v. Vickers (10), a mortgagor of a leasehold property suffered an ejectment and took a fresh lease; he was not allowed to set up this new lease against the claim of the mortgagee. In the case of Hughes v. Howard (11), the mortgagor in collusion with the lessor and the second mortgagee incurred a forfeiture of the mortgaged leasehold and took a fresh lease from the landlord but was not allowed to set up this lease in answer to the suit of the mortgagee. The case of Debendra Nath v. Abdul Samed (12) may also be referred to as supporting this conclusion.

In the result, therefore, I agree with Mr. Justice Chitty and hold that the Appellant, the Defendant No. 6, is estopped from raising the plea of non-transferability.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE REPORT OF THE PRISONERS' AID SOCIETY which held its annual meeting on Thursday last is more encouraging than that of last year. Last year the Society helped 53 persons of whom seventeen were Europeans and the rest Indians. The list of the persons aided by the Society shows considerable courage in the workers as the large majority of the discharged prisoners who came under the influence of the Society were long-term prisoners with more than one previous conviction. It is encouraging to find that there has been no appreciable number of cases where persons aided by the Society have been convicted during the period while they continued there.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF THE SOCIETY'S UNDERTAKING, though rather brighter than it was last year, was not quite so good as we should like it to be. Then, its attempt to extend its operations from the making of flat files, &c., "to a rather better class of work," has not been successful. Its endeavours to secure private work by canvassers has deplorably failed and the Society has had mainly to depend on Government work. We expect that the Society will profit by its experiences of the past and next year we hope to find more work placed at its disposal.

WE LEARN FROM THE REPORT THAT A MOST interesting experiment is being tried under the auspices of the Society which, if successful, may be followed up with considerable benefit in future. The report says:—

Our friends may perhaps remember the case of Benimadhab Chatterji, a man who was sentenced in December 1910 to 10 years' imprisonment for pocketpicking, after having spent about 23 years in jail under nine convictions. Our case about him was that if we had been able to keep him in work he would not have committed the offence of which he was convicted. Sir Edward Baker favoured the idea of making an experiment in this case, and through the kindness of Sir William Duke he was released on the day of Delhi Durbar. The Society has undertaken to make good any depredations he may commit during the next two years up to a moderate amount, and special efforts are being made to supply him with work, or at least with wages. The result is that we have backed our belief in the principles on which the society is founded to an extent that we can in fact afford. But so far it seems as if our money was safe if only we can pay him real wages.

WE TOOK OCCASION TO POINT OUT IN CONNECTION with the debate on Mr. Dadabhoy's motion in the Supreme Council relating to financial assistance to discharged prisoners that it would be very useful to utilise the Society for the purpose of making a beginning in the modern reformed methods of treatment of discharged prisoners. The Society's report takes the same view and observes:

The subject of the treatment of prisoners in jails and the possibility of rendering them assistance on their discharge was recently discussed by the Imperial Legislative Council on the motion of Mr. Dadabhoy. The practical effect of the discussion seems to be reserved for a future date. All we need say is that if the Government of India, or that of Bengal, or any local authorities can, between them, manage to give us a few thousand rupees worth of work that we can do on their own terms, we can undertake to turn a certain number of habitual offenders into men who, from the point of view of the criminal law, may be considered honest.

We hope that the Government will give further consideration to this matter and see its way to begin a new experiment with the assistance of the Society. The Society has within the past few years been able to give a good account of itself and its work in the past, moderate though it be, bears rich promises for the future. We hope that with the daily increasing public support that it is getting and a great deal more of active co-operation of the Government the Society may gradually change the course of the administration of the criminal law in this city and eventually in all Bengal.

LEGALITY OF GOVERNMENT PROCLAMATION IN RESPECT OF BEHAR, ORISSA AND ASSAM.

While thoroughly approving of the administrative changes in respect of Bengal, Behar, Orissa and Assam as announced by His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor at the Delhi Coronation Durbar, we must express our doubts as to the legality of the Proclamation issued by the Government of India on the 22nd of March last and published in the Gazette of India of the following date for bringing about these changes.

We are glad since then to have the Secretary of State's assurance in the House of Lords that a Bill will be introduced in Parliament after Easter recess for giving statutory sanction to the administrative changes. In view of such Parliamentary legislation we would venture to point out in what respect the Proclamations of the Government of India seem to us to conflict with the existing provisions of Parliamentary Statutes so that the grounds covered by the Proclamations may be validated by Parliamentary Statute.

DECLARATION CONSTITUTING GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL.

As regards the Declaration in the said Notification of the 22nd of March last, to the effect that the Secretary of State in Council has been pleased to declare that the Governor-General of India shall no longer be Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and that a separate Governor shall be appointed for that Presidency, it will be observed that it is strictly in accordance with sec. 16 of the Government of India Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 95) and therefore thoroughly legal.

But it would be interesting to consider the statutory consequences of this Declaration on Behar and Orissa. Sec. 15 of the Government of India Act of 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. c. 95) suspends the provision for the creation of the North Western Provinces into a Presidency. But sec. 16 expressly reserves the power of appointing a Governor for the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and provides that a Lieutenant-Governor may be appointed for this Presidency, i.e., in the words of the Statute "of such part of the territories under the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal as for the time being may not be under the Lieutenant-Governor of the said N. W. Provinces." Thus it would seem that now that a Governor has been appointed he will as a matter of course be the Governor for Bengal, Behar, Orissa and Assam. Sec. 16 expressly refers to 3 and 4 Will. IV c. 85 as defining the authority and manner in which the Governor of this Presidency is to be appointed. Referring to sec. 56 of 3 and 4 Will. IV c. 85, we find it expressly provided that the Executive Government of Fort William in Bengal shall be administered by a Governor and three Councillors. So it might be said that the Governor in Council of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal is under the Declaration of the Secretary of State in Council the lawfully constituted executive of the Presidency; and since the Secretary of State in Council has been under 21 and 22 Vict. c. 106 (Government of India Act of 1858) vested with the power of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control and has in lawful exercise of such powers appointed Lord Carmichael as the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal His Excellency the Governor in Council is the only executive authority over the territories comprised in that Presidency.

We shall next examine whether the Governor-General in Council has any powers to limit the authority of the said Governor in Council territorially or otherwise by proclamation. We shall consider first the Proclamation of the Governor-General in Council which purports to constitute the new Province of Behar and Orissa under the India Councils Act of 1861. Sec. 17 of 16 and 17 Vict. c. 95 empowers the Court of Directors and the Board of Control (now Secretary of State in Council) to create a new Presidency and also a Lieutenant-Governorship in addition to the Lieutenant-Governorships of Bengal and North Western Provinces. But these powers are given subject to the proviso that "such appointments as are hereinbefore authorised, to be continued and made for the territories now and heretofore under the said Presidency of Fort William." So it saves the Governor's authority and until his appointment that of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Further, it makes it clear that the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor referred to in this section must be for territories other than those comprised in this Presidency. As a matter of fact Sir John Lawrence was in 1859 appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab under this section and the power was exhausted (see Ilbert, 2nd Ed., pp. 192-3; note to Digest, Art. 55).

In any other view the Secretary of State in Council might have appointed a Lieutenant-Governor of Behar and Orissa under this section. But the fact that he has not so done and that the Governor-General in Council purports to constitute the new Province of Behar and Orissa under the Indian Councils Act of 1861 also go to support the above view.

PROCLAMATION RELATING TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORSHIP OF BEHAR AND ORISSA.

In view of the saving clause in sec. 17 of the Act of 1853 we entertain serious doubts whether it is competent for the Governor-General in Council to carve out Behar and Orissa from the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and create them into a Province with a Lieutenant-Governor under the India Councils Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67). Turning to sec. 22 of the latter we are confronted with fresh difficulty; for we find it expressly provided by sec. 22 that the Governor-General in Council is not competent to make any laws or regulations affecting any of the provisions of 3 and 4 Will IV, c. 85; 16 and 17 Vict., c. 95 and 17 and 18 Vict., c. 77. We have pointed out above the limitations imposed by the Government of India Acts of 1833, (3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85) and 1853, (16 and 17 Vict. c. 95) with regard to the establishment of any Lieutenant-Governorship in the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William save and except the one provisionally sanctioned by sec. 16 of the Act of 1853.

We had discussed these limitations at some length with special reference to sec. 4 of 17 and 18 Vict. c. 77 at the time when Eastern Bengal and Assam were constituted into a new Province (See 8 C. W. N. cxxix and 9 C. W. N. cclxvi). We have no desire to repeat the same argument here in connection with Behar and Orissa being constituted into a new Province, especially as the Proclamation in question makes no reference to sec. 4 of the Statute of 1854. It will suffice here to say that in the case of Eastern Bengal and Assam, the Government of India had in 1905, some technical justification in constituting Assam, which at the time had no Legislative Council, into a Province under sec. 46 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861, (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67), and then transferring thereto under sec. 47 the territories in Eastern Bengal from the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. But the same cannot be said with regard to Behar and Orissa.

Behar and Orissa have all along formed an integral part of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William. Sec. 44 of the India Councils Act of 1861 specifically provided for giving it a Legislative Council and in 1862 a Council was constituted for Bengal (including Behar and Orissa) by proclamation as provided for in that section. When the power has once been exercised by the Governor-General in Council it has become extinct or spent in respect of Bengal. So the Governor-General in Council cannot again assume powers under the general provisions of sec. 46 and constitute a new Province within the Bengal Division of the Presidency. As we have pointed out before, secs. 16 and 17 of 16 and 17 Vict. c. 95 and sec. 22 of the Act of 1861 would also stand in the way.

A further difficulty in the way of the Governor-General in Council constituting Behar and Orissa into a separate Province under the Indian Councils Act of 1861 is that there can be no question (See the title and the preamble of the Act and also Ilbert, 2nd Ed., pp. 193 and 195) that the Indian Councils Act of 1861 is intended for creating Legislative Councils where they do not exist and constituting Provinces and Lieutenant-Governorships for the purpose.

Now, since the giving of a Legislative Council to Bengal, Behar and Orissa under sec. 44 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861, the constitution of that Council has been very materially altered by the Indian Councils Act of 1909. This latter is also a Parliamentary statute and when it specifically provides for the constitution of the Legislative Council for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal partly by election and partly by nomination and fixes very different limits and limitations in respect of numbers and of official nominees, how can the Governor-General in Council go back to the Statute of 1861 and create a Province with an obsolete Council and a Lieutenant-Governor within the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William?

After giving the matter our very careful attention we have come to the conclusion that the Parliamentary Statute which is intended to be passed in respect of the administrative changes in Bengal Presidency should specifically provide for the constitution of Behar and Orissa into a separate Province with a Legislative and Executive Council consistently with the India Councils Act of 1909.

PROCLAMATION RELATING TO BOUNDARIES OF THE PRESIDENCY OF FORT WILLIAM IN BENGAL.

The Proclamation of the Government of India fixing the territorial limits of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal purports to be issued under sec. 47 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861, and sec. 4 of the Government of India Act of 1865, (28 and 29 Vict., c. 17). The Indian Councils Act of 1861, as we have seen, cannot have any application to territorial re-distribution in respect of this Presidency. Sec. 4 of the Government of India Act of 1865, would also seem to have no application to a case like the present. It provides no doubt for re-distribution of territories but it is to be noted that the scope of such re-distribution is limited by the section "into and among" Presidencies and Lieutenant-Governorships which are again qualified in the section by the words "for the time being subsisting." The Lieutenant-Governorship of Behar and Orissa was not subsisting, and the Lieutenant-Governorship of Eastern Bengal is supposed to be extinct, so it is difficult to follow how re-distribution as contemplated in the Proclamation can take place under sec. 4 of the Act of 1865, above referred to. The redistribution of boundaries between Bengal, Behar and Orissa made by the Proclamation is, therefore, of very questionable legality.

We would therefore urge on the Government to make provision in the Parliamentary Statute for the abolition of the Lieutenant-Governorship and the Legislative Council in Eastern Bengal and Assam. For although there may be doubt as to whether the Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam was lawfully constituted in 1905, yet it has been given statutory constitution under the India Councils Act of 1909, and the Indian Legislature or Executive is not competent to abolish it.

THE PROCLAMATION RELATING TO ASSAM.

The same may be said with regard to Assam. It was a part and parcel of a Lieutenant-Governorship with a Legislative Council constituted under Parliamentary authority. It is doubtful therefore whether the Proclamation issued by the Governor-General in Council under sec. 3 of the Government of India Act of 1854 (17 and 18 Vict. c. 77) is at all valid. So far back as 1878 the Government of India were advised that the Governor-General in Council had no authority to take away any portion of the territory under the Lieutenant-Governorship with a Council and transfer it to a Chief Commissionership (see Ilbert, 2nd Ed., p. 195; note to Digest, Art. 57). Since the inclusion of Assam in the Indian Councils Act of 1809, it is hardly competent for the Governor-General in Council to suspend or abolish its statutory constitution by a proclamation under the Act of 1854. It would therefore be also absolutely necessary to constitute the Chief Commissionership of Assam with a Council by a Parliamentary Statute.

CONCLUSION.

We would, therefore, suggest that the Parliamentary Statute should provide for the abolition of the Bengal Council and the re-constitution of Executive and Legislative Councils for the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and the Province of Behar and Orissa, which might be consistent with the India Councils Act of 1809 and also validate all the executive acts in Behar and Orissa and Assam that may be done in pursuance and by the authority of the aforesaid Proclamations on and from the 1st of April 1912 to the date of the passing of the Parliamentary Statute.

We would further suggest that the Bengalee-speaking districts should be included in the Bengal Division of the Presidency before or at the time the Parliamentary Statute is passed, because the re-adjustment of boundaries after that would require Royal sanction signified through the Secretary of State for India if an entire zillah or district has to be transferred from one province to another; and in the case of Assam, after the passing of the Parliamentary Statute, it might lead to further complications (see sec. 5 of the Government India Act of 1865).

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

CHANCERY DIVISION. Cuff v. London and County Land and Building Company. Before MR. JUSTICE EVE. 23rd January 1912.

Auditors' statutory right of access to the books of a company—Charge of negligence against them—Apprehension that inspection will disclose Company's evidence.

The Plaintiffs were appointed auditors of the Defendant company. The company discovered some embezzlement by one of its servants, and attributed it to the negligence of the Plaintiffs who denied the liability. They made the present claim to exercise their statutory right of access to the books of the company, and refused to resign. The company objected to the grant of a mandatory order but the learned Judge allowed it. In the course of his judgment he said:—

The appointment of auditors carried with it the obligation to perform certain duties imposed by sec. 113 of the Companies Act, 1908. Mere compliance with the letter of these statutory requirements involved a comparison of the entries in the books with the figures in the balance-sheet, but no one would suggest that the duty of the auditors was limited to ascertaining that the entries in the books were correctly transcribed or summarized in the balance-sheet. As was pointed out by the Court of Appeal, the auditors were bound to inquire and take trouble to ascertain whether the books themselves showed the company's true position, and such investigation must of necessity range over an area which covered accounts, vouchers, invoices, and documents constituting the materials out of which the entries in the books originated. In order to enable them to discharge these duties the auditors were clothed with the powers enumerated in the same section.

Sec. 112 (6) contemplated the possibility of a casual vacancy in the office, but did not in terms empower auditors to resign or the company to remove them, but it was not necessary to consider whether these powers existed, for the auditors declined to resign and the Company had taken no steps to remove them. In these circumstances the auditors were bound to discharge their statutory duties, and in so doing were entitled to exercise the statutory powers conferred upon them. The charges of negligence afforded no sufficient answer to the claim to exercise those powers, nor was there any substance in the objection that the exercise of them would give the auditors an opportunity of ascertaining the evidence on which the Company would rely in any action brought against them, the answers to such objection being, first, that there was in fact no such action pending, and, secondly, that even if there were, the materials to which the auditors claimed to have access would all have to be disclosed to them in such action.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

MUNSHI KALI SHANKAR
SAHAY and others,

Defendants-Appellants, Petitioners,

v.

MAHARAJA PERTAB UDOY

NATH SHAH DEO,

Maharaja of Chota Nagpore, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Privy Council—Special leave—Concurrent findings.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The facts stated in the petition were as follows :—

The Petitioners were Defendants in the present suit, which was instituted by the Plaintiff-Respondent and the main question in issue between the parties was whether the Plaintiff was entitled to resume three villages which were purchased by the Defendants in 1896 at an auction sale held in execution of a decree.

The three villages were the zemindari property of three ladies, Musammatt Khetrani Koer and two others, of whom the last surviving, Khetrani Koer, died on the 19th August 1901.

The said ladies made a default in the payment of Road and Public Works Cesses in respect of the said villages to the Plaintiff-Respondent. The Plaintiff-Respondent thereupon brought a suit against the said ladies and obtained a decree against them on the 30th March 1895.

The said Plaintiff-decree-holder applied for execution of the said decree by attachment and sale of the three villages.

The Court executing the said decree thereupon issued a proclamation of sale under the provisions of Act VIII of 1865 (B. C.) and Act I of 1879 ordering that "the land mentioned above will be sold by auction." The said three villages were accordingly sold and the Petitioners were declared auction-purchasers of the same.

A sale certificate, dated the 6th April 1896, was duly obtained by the Petitioners and on the 10th November 1896 the Court passed an order "to deliver possession to the auction-purchasers over the properties purchased, namely, Mouzahs Koenjara, Dhadhra and Kudarko—the jaigirdari properties of the judgment-debtors" which was done.

On the death of the said Khetrani Koer which occurred on the 19th August 1901 the Plaintiff-Respondent began to dispossess the Petitioners from the said villages on the allegation that the said ladies had only a khori-posh or life tenure for maintenance in the aforesaid villages. The Plaintiff-Respondent alleged that his predecessors in title had made a grant of the said villages to the said ladies for life and that on the death of the last surviving lady the villages reverted to him.

The Petitioners denied the Plaintiff's claim which led to the institution of the present suit on the 9th January 1905 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi. The Plaintiff prayed for hhas possession of the said villages and meane profits and costs on the basis of the title indicated above.

The Petitioners filed a written statement in defence. They pleaded among other things that the Plaintiff was estopped by his conduct in the course of the execution proceedings above-mentioned from denying that the Petitioners were declared purchasers of the said villages, that the claim was barred by limitation, and that the said ladies were not holders of a grant for life only.

The said Subordinate Judge fixed the necessary issues for trial and recorded evidence, oral and documentary, produced by the parties. In support of his case the Plaintiff produced certain Mulki papers of the year 1842 from the office of the Deputy Commissioner. These papers were returns which were made and filed by an agent of the then Maharaja of Chota Nagpore in respect of his zemindari and in which it was stated that the said villages were held by the said ladies under a grant for life only. The Petitioners objected to the said Mulki papers being admitted in evidence but the lower Courts admitted them.

The said Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 31st January 1908. He found that the said ladies had only a life estate in the said villages which were resumable on their death by the Plaintiff Respondent. He also held that the claim was not barred by limitation or by the doctrine of estoppel. He accordingly made a decree for possession in favour of the Plaintiff.

The Petitioners thereupon appealed against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal which delivered judgment on the 24th July 1911. It agreed with the conclusions of the Court below and accordingly made a decree dismissing the appeal with costs.

Dissatisfied with the said decree of the said High Court the Petitioners applied to that Court for leave to appeal against it to His Majesty in Council but the said High Court refused to grant leave by an order, dated the 5th September 1911, in terms following :—

"Inasmuch as the decree of this Court against which an appeal is sought to be preferred affirms the decision of the Court below, we have to be satisfied that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. It appears to me impossible to say that there are any substantial questions of law."

Hence this petition.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé) for the Petitioners submitted that the appeal involved a substantial question of law. The Plaintiff was estopped from denying that the ladies were owners of the villages when the Plaintiff attached them and got them sold in execution of his own decree. The Mulki papers were inadmissible in evidence. The statements therein made by the Plaintiff were not adverse to his interests but in his own favour.

Their Lordships rejected the petition remarking that it was a case of concurrent findings of fact.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1601 OF 1911. CHANDPUR CO., LTD., 1st Party, Petitioners v. MAHARAJA MONINDRA CHANDRA NANDY, 2nd party, Opposite Party. 8th March 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145, passing orders under, without hearing arguments, illegality of.

This Rule was issued calling upon the Magistrate to show cause why the order of the Magistrate under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground that it was made without hearing the arguments of the Petitioners' pleader.

Their Lordships observed :—

"We are clearly of opinion that the explanation of the District Magistrate cannot mean anything else than that, as it was too late for him on that day both to hear arguments and to deliver his decision he thought that it was in his competence not to allow any adjournment for the purpose of argument but to pass orders at once. No doubt the pleader did not say to him "if you cannot hear me at this late hour I must ask for adjournment." That did not justify the Magistrate in declining to hear him altogether and passing orders at once.

The case must be sent back to the learned Magistrate to hear the arguments of the 1st party's pleader and in the meantime the order passed will remain in abeyance. A fresh order will be passed after considering the arguments of the first party. It is within the discretion of the Magistrate to take any evidence that may be offered on the day of rehearing.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 24 OF 1910. PEARY MOHON ROY, Plaintiff, Appellant v. SRIMATI SARAT KUMARI DEBI AND OTHERS, Respondents. 12th March 1912.

Cess Act (IX of 1880), sec. 41—Raiyat, if tenure-holder—Annual value—Cess, ascertainment of.

The suit was for recovery of rent and cesses. So far as a decree for rent was passed in favour of the Plaintiff, no controversy arose, but the dispute was as to the decree in respect of the cesses claimed. The plaint set out in a schedule the arrears of cesses, and from that schedule it appeared that the claim was made in respect of four separate jamas. The decision in the Court of the Munsif, so far as it related to the cesses was adverse to the Plaintiff, inasmuch as it was not shown what was the annual value of each of those four jamas. The Subordinate Judge modified that decree, for it appeared to him that he was entitled to utilise the valuation roll filed on behalf of the Plaintiff, and marked Ex. I which showed the annual value of the lands as Rs. 1,290-6 as. and the total amount of rent payable by the Defendant as Rs. 463 6 as. On that basis he passed a decree in the Plaintiff's favour for the excess claimed by him over and above that which had been awarded by the Munsif. From that decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court which came before Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee. He set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restored that of the Court of first instance on the ground that upon the Plaintiff's own document it appeared that the Defendants were treated by the Plaintiff as *raiya*s of the land in respect of which the present suit was brought.

Held—That a *raiya*t might be a tenure-holder within the meaning of the Cess Act.

That it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff to establish and the Courts to find, what was the annual value of each of the four jamas; and, also whether in respect of those four jamas the Defendants were 'tenure-holders' or 'cultivating *raiya*s' within the meaning of the Act, and further, what was the profit, if any, in respect of each of the four jamas.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside a decree by which the Court below has dismissed a suit for recovery of money due upon an agreement. There was no substantial controversy as to the circumstances under which the agreement was made or was sought to be enforced.

One Bibi Hasan Banu had a dispute with the Defendant and the Defendant asked the Plaintiff to intervene and have the dispute settled. The Plaintiff was a friend of the father-in-law of this lady and the Defendant was anxious that he should exercise his influence with the members of the family to effect a compromise of the dispute. At the same time he promised to pay the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 300 as his remuneration, if the compromise was satisfactorily effected. The dispute has been settled and the Plaintiff now seeks to recover the promised money from the Defendant. The Defendant pleads that the agreement is opposed to public policy and is not enforceable in view of the provisions of sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has given effect to this contention and dismissed the suit although he has found that the agreement as alleged by the Plaintiff has been proved. In our opinion, the view taken by the Judge cannot be supported. That there was consideration for the agreement cannot be disputed. The only question is whether the consideration or object of the agreement was lawful.

Sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act provides that the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless it is forbidden by law ; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, or is fraudulent or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. In the case before us, it is manifest that the agreement is not forbidden by law, nor is it of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law. On the other hand, the agreement was for a purpose which is encouraged by Courts of Justice with a view to shorten litigation. If the parties to a suit come to a settlement, the Court will give effect to the compromise under ordinary circumstances. There is no suggestion that the object of the agreement in his case was fraudulent ; it has not even been suggested that the Plaintiff should employ any fraudulent means with a view to effect a settlement of the dispute between the parties. Nor is it shown that the agreement involves or implies injury to the person or property of another. The sole question, therefore, is whether the Court should regard the consideration or object of the agreement as immoral or opposed to public policy. Now it has no doubt been held that agreements for stifling prosecution are opposed to public policy on the principle that no one shall make a trade of felony. But the same principle does not apply to a civil dispute. It has even been held that a compromise of proceedings which are criminal only in form and really involve private rights may be lawful. Amir Khan v. Amir Jan (1). In our opinion, upon no conceivable principle can it be maintained that an agreement to remunerate a person in order that he may exercise his influence to effect a settlement between two persons one of whom enters into the agreement, is in any way immoral or opposed to public policy.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule is made absolute. The decree of the Small Cause Court Judge set aside and a decree made in favour of the Plaintiff with costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur. The decree will be made against the Defendant described as Wazirul Huq alias Nazirul Huq.

Rule made absolute.

Digwari tenure, incidents of, and mineral rights—Minerals, right of zemindar in permanently settled estates—Zemindar's suit for declaration of right to mineral as against Digwar, Government if necessary party.

Digwari tenure which was granted originally in consideration of the performance of military service, to which police duties were attached, are hereditary and inalienable. The Digwar is appointed by Government and liable to be dismissed by Government for misconduct. On dismissal the next male heir, if fit for the office, is appointed.

In the absence of proof that the mineral rights were vested in the Digwar before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the zemindar with whom the estate in which the tenure was situated was permanently settled by Government would have the right to the minerals and, there being no evidence to show that the zemindar had ever parted with his mineral rights to the Digwar, the Digwar had no right to deal with the minerals.

In a suit by the zemindar asking for a declaration of his right to the minerals as against the Digwar the Government was not a necessary party as the Government never claimed the minerals or put forward any claim inconsistent with that set up in this case by the zemindar.

The rights of the Government whatever they were would not be prejudiced or affected by the result of a suit to which it is not a party.

Mineral rights of Ghatwals of Pergunnah Sarhat in the North-Western part of Birbhum zemindari distinguished.

BROJONATH BOSE v. DURGA PERSAD SINGH (5) reversed.

KUMAR HARI NARAYAN SINGH DEO BAHADUR v. SRIRAM CHAKRAVARTI (2) referred to.

This was an appeal against a judgment* and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta, dated the 18th March 1907, reversing a judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 14th June 1904.

The main questions for determination on this appeal are (1) Whether the Secretary of State for India in Council was not a necessary party to this suit, (2) Whether the Appellant's claim was not barred by limitation and (3) Whether the Appellant as the zemindar and proprietor of the permanently settled estate of Pergunnah Jharia was entitled to the coal mines situate in mouzahs Tasra and Rohrabund which mouzahs formed the ancient and permanent Digwari jaigir appertaining to the office of Digwar of which the Respondent No. 1 was the present holder.

The facts and circumstances out of which the present litigation arose were shortly as follows :—Pergunnah Jharia was permanently settled with the predecessor of the Appellant.

The mouzahs in question, Tasra and Rohrabund were within the ambit of Pergunnah Jharia.

The early official papers and documents relating to that Pergunnah were not now forthcoming and were said to have been burnt in the Government offices in which they were filed at or about the time of the Mutiny.

The jaigir was and had always been subject to a quit rent or cess of Rs. 64 payable in respect of both the mouzahs.

The area of these mouzahs comprising the jaigir was as to Tasra 897 bighas, and Rohrabund 6,025 bighas, making a total of 6,922 bighas.

On the 5th December 1887, the Respondent No. 1, Braja Nath Bose, was appointed by the Government the Digwar of Tasra.

On the 5th September 1888, a Sanad of appointment was granted to him by which he was expressly prohibited from in any way alienating the Government Chakran land, i.e., the said mouzahs, to any person.

By order of Government, dated the 4th September 1888, it was directed that the police authorities should make over the said

Sanad to him, and put him in possession of the said mouzahs. In due course possession thereof was made over to him, and on the 25th September 1888 a receipt was taken from him in the following terms :—

"I, Braja Nath Bose Digwar, of Ghat Tasra, do execute this receipt to the following effect :—

"I execute this receipt on receiving from the Ghatwali Inspector my Sanad by which I have been appointed (Digwar) of this Ghat, as also khas possession of the lands situate within the boundaries specified herein below and set apart for khas possession (i.e., the mouzahs Tasra and Rohrabund)."

"I have also been informed of the order by which I have been authorized to sell the coal of this mouzah at my pleasure."

The said sanction to sell the coal of the said mouzahs was obtained from the Government.

From the said time, the Respondent No. 1 worked the said coal in the said mouzahs, and in connection therewith he was required and obliged to pay cesses to Government under the Cess Act in respect of the said coal mine from the year 1888.

On the 2nd January 1892, the Respondent No. 1 granted a lease to one Matthewson of, inter alia, his subsoil rights in the said mouzahs, including the right to mine for coal.

The said lease was granted with the sanction of the Government, and the draft thereof was signed and approved by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum acting on behalf of the Government on the 29th December 1891.

On the 3rd September 1894, the said Matthewson by Indenture transferred all his rights under the said lease to the

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. BRAJA NATH BOSE.

Respondent No. 2, The Tasra Coal Company.

From the date of the said lease the coal mine was worked by [the said lessee and transferee.

The Appellant instituted the present suit on the 18th December 1903, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Purulia, District Manbhum, against the Respondent No. 1, the said Matthewson and the Respondent No. 2, The Tasra Coal Company, alleging inter alia that the Respondent No. 1 and his predecessors held the mouzahs in ordinary ijara and not as a Digwari jaigir as alleged by the Respondents, and that the Appellant alone was entitled to the coal which were being wrongfully removed.

He accordingly asked for a declaration as to his rights and for damages in respect of the coal removed.

The Respondent No. 1 filed a written statement in defence on the 25th February 1904.

He pleaded that the Government was a necessary party to the suit, and that the Plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

He denied that the Plaintiff's predecessors had held khas possession of the said mouzahs or had made settlements of the lands thereof with the tenants, or that Digumbar Singh predecessor of Respondent No. 1 had held possession thereof under an isara right, or that the Respondent No. 1 had ever paid the Plaintiff any money as isara rent.

He alleged inter alia that the two mouzahs had been held from time immemorial in digwari jaigir right by the Digwar appointed for the time being by the Government, that the said Digwar rendered police services to Government, and that his office and possession of the said mouzahs was conferred upon him by the Government; that the digwari punchak rent of Rs. 64 per annum had always been paid therefor, and that before the time of the establishment of the English Government the same used to be paid to the Government of the day in India, but since the Decennial Settlement the same had been realized through the zemindar for the sake of convenience; that the Plaintiff had no right whatever connected with the said mouzahs beyond the said digwari punchak rent, and had never been in possession thereof on the basis of any such right; that he and his predecessors, Digwars, had exercised their rights therein, both above and below the surface, without any objection on the part of the zemindar, and he contended that the settlement which he made was within his right, and that the Plaintiff had no claim against him and that the suit should be dismissed with costs.

The Defendant, Matthewson, filed a written statement denying any liability to the Plaintiff, and stating that his name had been merely used in the transaction for the Tasra Coal Company.

The Respondent No. 2, the Tasra Coal Company, also filed a written statement raising in effect the same pleas as those raised by the Respondent No. 1.

On the 25th February 1904, the Subordinate Judge on these pleadings framed the issues following:—

1. Is the Government a necessary party? Can the suit proceed in the absence of Government?
2. Is the claim barred by limitation?
3. Has the Plaintiff any right to the minerals in the mouzahs in dispute?
4. Is the Defendant No. 1 an isaradar under the Plaintiff?
5. Is the Plaintiff entitled to the injunction asked for?

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. BRAJA NATH BOSH.

6. Is the Plaintiff entitled to any damages? The amount, if any, of the same?

After recording evidence both oral and documentary the Subordinate Judge on the 14th June 1904 delivered judgment.

On the 1st and 2nd issues he held that the Government, though a proper, was not a necessary party to the suit, and that the Plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation.

On the 3rd and 4th issues he held that mouzahs Tasra and Rohrabund were for the first time in 1845 described as digwari mouzahs, so far as the documents proved before him were concerned, that the Appellant's contention was incorrect in suggesting that the Digwars were ordinary isaradars; that the mouzahs were digwari mouzahs; that the Digwars of Jharia were as much servants of the zemindar as of the Government; that the zemindar of Jharia had in 1814 been invested with the charge of the police, and was divested of those powers in 1833; that there was no evidence to show that the mouzahs were constituted digwari mouzahs at the time of the Permanent Settlement; that the Digwars were not independent talukdars of the mouzahs inasmuch as they did not fall within the provisions of sec. 5, Reg. VIII of 1793; that the evidence did not carry the antiquity of the tenure further back than a few years before 1845; that the most that can be presumed in favour of the Defendants was that the tenure was in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement; that there was nothing to show that the grant had been made by Government; that the real point for determination was whether the tenure was included in or excluded from the Permanent Settlement; that the facts showed that Tasra was included in that settlement; and that Rohrabund was an off-shoot from Tasra at a subsequent date; that consequently the Digwars could not claim to be proprietors of the soil of the mouzahs, and had no right to the minerals; that the rights possessed by Ghatwals in Birbhum in their tenures could not be applied by analogy as existing in the digwari tenures in dispute; that the tenure in this case was the grant of an office, the performance of the duties of which is remunerated by the use of the lands which did not involve an absolute grant of the soil, but only a grant of the surface; that Government had disclaimed all right to the minerals in a despatch of the 25th March 1880, and that therefore the right to the coal and all minerals must be in the zemindar.

He made a decree granting an injunction against the Defendants and for Rs. 1,854-11, the value of the coal with costs.

Against the said judgment and decree the Defendants appealed to the High Court at Calcutta.

The High Court (Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ.)* on the 18th March 1907, delivered judgment, decreeing the appeal, and dismissing the suit with costs.

It held that the digwari tenure in question placed the holder in a higher position than a Ghatwal or Chowkidar:— That the tenure was an ancient one and both office and tenure were hereditary, but with the condition that in the event of dismissal by Government, or there not being a member suitable for the office, both office and tenure would pass to a Digwar to be appointed by Government; that all orders for the appointment and dismissal of Digwars of Jharia have been made by

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. BRAJA NATH BOSE.

Government, the zemindar having no voice in the matter ; that the Digwars have all along been responsible to Government for the due discharge of their duties, police and public ; that the tenure has always passed on orders and transfers by Government ; that the only profit received by the zemindar since the creation of the tenure has been a quit rent of Rs. 64 per annum ; that the Digwar of the disputed mouzahs did not hold them as an isardar under the landlord as alleged by the Appellants.

It held as regards Issues Nos. 1 and 2 that the Government was a necessary party to the suit, and that the Plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation.

It held that the evidence satisfactorily established the existence of this digwari tenure as far back as 1814, that the quit rent alone was reserved to the zemindar, that the tenure was created to enable the holder to perform certain public duties, and has all along been so regarded, and that it was not liable to resumption by the landlord that under the circumstances proved the position of the Digwar in this case is analogous to that of the Ghatwals of Birbhum, and he had been recognized throughout as possessing the same rights.

It held on the facts that the tenure in question was created as a permanent one on a fixed rent, and that the Digwar as the holder possesses all the underground, and mining rights, there being no reservation to the contrary, and that the said mineral rights in the tenure do not belong to the zemindar.

The appeal was accordingly decreed and the suit dismissed with costs. Hence this appeal.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., Mr. Ross and Mr. Parikh for the Appellant.—The High Court has failed to appreciate the view of the Subordinate Judge. The Lotbandi shows that the mouzahs were included in the Permanent Settlement. It was not shown that the digwari tenures existed before the Permanent Settlement. They were given to the Digwar by way of remuneration for police services—the actual produce of the soil was their payment in kind. The inference is therefore irresistible that the digwari tenures were limited tenures and never included the minerals. The right to the minerals must belong either to the Government or to the zemindars. But the Government has expressly given up rights to the mines in favour of the zemindars in permanently settled estates. The property in the sub-soil was in the zemindar, and the onus lies on the Respondents to show how and when they got the right to minerals from the zemindar. The case of Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Bakronath Singh (3) has no application. The High Court's judgment is chiefly based on their decision in Sriram Chukrabutty v. Kumar Hari Narain Sinha (1), which has been reversed by this Board in Kumar Hari Narayan Singh v. Sriram Chakravarti (2), further the Government is neither a necessary nor a proper party to the present suit.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents.—The real question was—what is a digwari tenure ? What are its incidents ? Who grants it ? The Digwar claims grant from the Government and not from the zemindar. Although we are not able to produce a grant the digwari tenures have existed from 1845 up to the present time. They have existed from before the Permanent Settlement. The duties of the Digwar consisted in his having the charge and management of all the police work in his allotted district but under the orders and control of the Government officers. His jaigir was and had always been subject to a quit rent or cess of Rs. 64. The digwar was never subordinate to or connected with the zemindar of Jharia. He was appointed by the Government and was liable to be dismissed by the same. The Government gave the mouzahs to the Digwar subject to certain conditions. The office was hereditary subject to the approval of the Government and the Digwari mouzahs were impartible and inalienable. There is evidence here that the Government once stopped the sale or mortgage of the mouzah. But no objection, claim or demand was ever raised or made by the zemindar. In 1792, the Government relieved zemindars from police duties and in 1793 the Settlement was made. But the Permanent Settlement related to mal lands only and not to lands that had been given for services. This view was adopted by the Sadar Court in 1816. The Lotbandi relied upon by the Appellants does not show that they were settled as mal lands with zemindars. The case of Kumar Hari Narayan Singh v. Sriram Chakravarti (2) has no bearing on the facts of the present case. There the zemindari was mal, and the zemindar being a proprietor was held entitled to the minerals. The digwari tenures of Manbhum have all the incidents of the Birbhum Ghatwali tenures: Preamble to Reg. XXIX of 1814, and Act V of 1859. They are at any rate of the nature of Ghatwali tenures which cannot be sold. Raja Nilmoni Singh v.

Bakronath Singh (3). The zemindar only got Rs. 64 as quit rent for a very large area of land: it was never varied. The mouzahs not being mal lands the onus lay on the Appellants to show how they came to acquire the right to minerals. Reference was made to Harrington's Analysis of Bengal Regulations, Vol. 3; p. 509 and Vol. 2, p. 236.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., in reply.—The Ghatwali lands were included in the Permanent Settlement. Raja Lelanund Singh v. The Government of Bengal (4). The presumption is that ownership vests in the zemindar and ownership of minerals is inconsistent with Digwar's office. In the absence of Government the zemindar owns the mines.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought by the zemindar of Pergunnah Jharia, a permanently settled estate, in order to establish his right to the minerals underlying mouzah Tasra and mouzah Rohrabund. The two mouzahs are within his zemindari. They are both held by the Digwar of Tasra on digwari tenure at a fixed rent of Rs. 64 per annum payable to the zemindar.

Digwari tenure is similar to Ghatwali tenure. It was granted originally in consideration of the performance of military service, to which police duties were attached. The tenure is hereditary and inalienable. The Digwar is appointed by the Government and liable to be dismissed by the Government for misconduct. On dismissal the next male heir, if fit for the office, is appointed.

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. BRAJA NATH BOSE.

In 1892 the Digwar of Tasra granted a perpetual lease of the coal mines underlying the two villages. The lease became vested in the Tasra Coal Company, Limited. The Company took possession and raised and sold a large quantity of coal.

The zemindar asked for a declaration of right, an account, and an injunction.

The Subordinate Judge of Manbhum gave judgment in favour of the zemindar. On appeal to the Calcutta High Court that judgment was reversed and the suit was dismissed with costs.

The case was argued at considerable length in both the Courts below and fully discussed before this Board.

Two points, and two points only, were seriously argued. It was contended (1) that the Government ought to have been made a party to the suit, and that in the absence of the Government the suit was defective and ought to be dismissed, and (2) that the Digwar had a proprietary right in the underground minerals.

The High Court decided both points in favour of the Defendants.

In their Lordships' opinion the Government is not a necessary or a proper party to this suit. Apparently the Government does not claim the minerals under permanently settled estates. However that may be, the Government has never claimed the minerals under the two mouzahs or either of them, or put forward any claim inconsistent with the rights now asserted by the zemindar. The rights of the Government, whatever they are, will not be prejudiced or affected by the result of a suit to which it is not a party.

The second point seems equally clear. The two mouzahs are within the Plaintiff's zemindari. Both the Courts below have so held. The permanent settlement was made with the zemindar of Jharis. No separate settlement was made with the Digwar of Tasra, if there was a Digwar of Tasra at the date of the Permanent Settlement, which seems more than doubtful. No attempt was made to prove that the mineral rights now in question were vested in the Digwar before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement if the lands were then held on Digwari tenure. Nor is there the slightest evidence tending to show or to suggest that the zemindar ever parted with his mineral rights to the Digwar. Mineral rights were vested in the Ghatwals of Pergunnah Sarhat in the north-western part of the Birbhum zemindari, but those Ghatwals paid their rent direct to the Government, and in other respects they were in a very peculiar position. They were dealt with by Reg. XXIX of 1814. They obtained the right to lease the minerals by the Act No. V of 1859. With every respect to the learned Judges of the High Court no inference can be drawn from the circumstances of their case that the Digwars in Manbhum had similar rights or powers.

The learned Judges on appeal seem to have been misled by a decision of the High Court in the case of Sriram Chakrabutty v. Kumar Hari Narain Sinha (1), which was afterwards reversed by this Board in Kumar Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sriram Chakravarti (2). There certain persons, called Goswamis or Gossains, priests of a Hindu idol to which a certain village had been assigned on a permanent debutter tenure at a small annual rent granted a lease of the underlying minerals. The High Court held that the mineral rights were vested in the Gossains. But it was laid down by this tribunal that it

Judgment,

VASUDEVA MUDA-

LIAR and others,

Appellants,

v.

SADAGOPA MUDA-

LIAR, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 31—"Pending" suit, includes suits remitted for trial on questions of fact—Privy Council decision abrogated by Statute.

In VASUDEVA MUDALIAR v. K. S. SRINIVASA PILLAI (1), the Privy Council reversing the decision of the High Court of Madras held that the suit, which was one to enforce a simple mortgage dated 22nd October 1883, was governed by Art. 132 and not by Art. 147 of Sch. II, Limitation Act of 1877, so that the suit was liable to dismissal as time-barred unless Plaintiff could make out certain alleged payments of interest and settling of accounts which would save limitation. The Privy Council remitted the case to the High Court for enquiry and adjudication of these matters of fact, but before the enquiry was taken up the Limitation Act of 1908 was passed which saved from the operation of Art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1877 suits on mortgages instituted within the period of 60 years from the date when the money secured became due and pending in the Province of Madras (amongst other places).

Held—That the new legislation covered this suit which was still pending when it was passed.

This was an appeal from a final decree made by the High Court of Judicature at Madras, on the 16th December 1908.

On the 22nd September 1883, the first and second Appellants, Vasudeva Mudaliar and Aiyappa Mudaliar, executed a mortgage in favour of Krishna Mudaliar Avergal. Disputes having arisen among the members of the mortgagee's family as to the partition of their property, K. S. Srinivasa Pillai was appointed Receiver; and on the partition subsequently effected, the mortgage bond in suit was allotted to the Respondent, Sadagopa Mudaliar.

On the 23rd September 1899, the said Receiver instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, to recover the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged property, and at a later stage of the suit the Respondent was added as a party thereto. In defence various pleas were advanced, and inter alia it was asserted that the suit was barred by Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 132.

On the 17th February 1902, the said Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He held that the suit was prima facie barred by limitation, the period of limitation being twelve years from the date of the first default. He decided that there had been no settlement of account, no part-payment of interest, and no acknowledgment of liability sufficient to extend the said period of limitation. He was, however, of opinion that the debt being payable by instalments, the last five instalments from the 22nd September 1887 were recoverable within twelve years from the date on which each of the said instalments fell due. He held that the benefit of the clause in the said deed of mortgage, which provided that on default of payment of any instalment the whole amount should become due and recoverable, could be and had been waived by the mortgagee, and required a demand for payment by the mortgagee as a condition precedent for enforcement. He considered any personal claim against the mortgagors as barred by limitation, and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for payment of "the five instalments and interest on each of these instalments, with interest thereon from the time each instalment fell due as per contract, and after term at contract rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem up to realization," to be recovered by sale of the mortgaged property.

Against the said decree both parties appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Madras, and on the 13th March 1905 the said Court delivered judgment. The said Court was of opinion that the suit was governed by Art. 147, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, which allowed the Respondent a period of 60 years. Adopting this view it was unnecessary to consider the other questions decided by the Subordinate Judge. The said Court disallowed two items in the account, and in substitution of the decree of the lower Court made the usual decree for sale, allowing interest at the contract rate until the 3rd August 1905, and thereafter at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the principal money.

Against the said decree the Appellants appealed to His late Majesty in Council, the record of the said appeal being No. 82 of 1906, and on the 22nd July 1907 their Lordships of the Privy Council delivered judgment* and on the 12th August 1907 an order in Council was made in accordance therewith in terms following: "It is hereby ordered that this appeal be, and the same is hereby allowed, and that the said decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 13th day of March 1905, be and the same is hereby discharged. And it is hereby declared that Art. 132 of Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, is the article which provides the rule of limitation applicable to the present suit. And it is hereby further ordered that the case be, and the same is hereby remitted to the said High Court to be disposed of in accordance with such declaration."

On the 16th December 1908, the said High Court (Benson and Miller, JJ.) delivered final judgment, re-affirming the previous judgment delivered by the said Court on the 13th March 1905 without any further consideration, being of opinion that the said order in Council was in effect abrogated by sec. 31 of Act IX of 1908. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges said:—

"If nothing further had occurred it would now be necessary for us to re-open the appeal on the footing that the twelve years' rule of limitation in Art. 132 was primarily applicable, and we should have to consider the Plaintiff's pleas that by reason of acknowledgments and so forth his claim was not barred even under that rule. But in the meantime the Legislature intervened. The declaration of the Privy Council was made on the 22nd July 1907, and while the case so remitted was pending in this Court, the Legislature on the 7th August 1908 passed the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

"Sec. 1 of that Act directs that sec. 31 shall come into force at once and sec. 31 enacts :—(Section quoted).

"The Plaintiff contends that the latter part of this clause is applicable to the present case. We are of opinion that the contention is valid. The suit is one in the territories mentioned in the Second Schedule of the Act: it was instituted within sixty years from the date when the money secured by the mortgage became due: and it was pending in this Court as a Court of Appeal at the date when the Act was passed. We cannot therefore dismiss the suit (in whole or in part) on the ground that a twelve years' limitation is applicable.

"We are unable to accede to the Defendant's contention that sec. 31 of the Act does not apply to the present case. The object of the Legislature was to obviate the hardship that would otherwise have resulted to mortgagees in consequence of the period of limitation being declared to be only twelve years instead of sixty, which was the period which had previously been authoritatively declared by this Court to be applicable in suits of the kind. We find nothing in the words of the Act or in the intention of the Legislature, to justify us in excluding the Plaintiff from the benefit of sec. 31. That being so, the Plaintiff's claim must be dealt with on the footing that it is not barred by limitation."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGriyther, K. C., and Mr.

Kiffin for the Appellants submitted that the High Court had erred in its view of the effect and operation of sec. 31 of Act IX of 1908. The decision of the Judicial Committee which was carried into effect by order in Council was final and binding on the parties to the previous appeal. The word "pending" in the section ("pending at the date of the passing of this Act") means pending determination or adjudication. Here the point had in fact been expressly decided by this Board. The remit was made for other purposes, this Board having decided "that Art. 132 of Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act 1877 is the article which provides the rule of limitation applicable to the present suit."

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Brown for the Respondent were not called upon.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 16th December 1908.

On the 23rd September 1899, a suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, founding upon a certain mortgage of date the 22nd September 1883, and with the object of recovering the mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property.

That Judge held that part of the claim was of a nature to which, under Art. 132 of the 2nd Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, the twelve years' rule of limitation would apply. The High Court, on appeal, held, on the other hand, that the article applicable was No. 147, the sixty years' rule of limitation.

On appeal to this Board, the latter decision was reversed and the former restored. This occurred on the 22nd July 1907.

VASUDEVA MUDALIAR v. SADAGOPA MUDALIAR.

The order itself, by His Majesty in Council, was dated the 12th August 1907.

It appears that the question is one upon which there has been much diversity of opinion in India, and conflicting decisions in the High Courts of Madras, Bombay, and Allahabad were referred to in this connection.

In view of the argument presented in this appeal, it is necessary to cite the exact terms of the former decision. They are these :—

"Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that it should be declared that Art. 132 is the article which provides the rule of limitation applicable to this case, and that the case should be remitted to the High Court to be disposed of in accordance with this declaration." [Vasudeva Mudaliar v. K. S. Srinivasa Pillai (1)].

A remit took place accordingly.

The reason for a remit is obvious. While the Defendant had pleaded the limitation, the Plaintiff had alleged payments of interest and settling of accounts which avoided the limitation, and a remit was required for the purpose of having, inter alia, enquiry and adjudication on these matters of fact.

So standing the suit in the Court of Appeal, the Indian Limitation Act of the 7th August 1908 was passed. Its 31st section is in these terms :—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, in the territories mentioned in the second schedule a suit for foreclosure or a suit for sale by a mortgagee may be instituted within two years from the date of the passing of this Act, or within sixty years from the date when the money secured by the mortgage became due, whichever period expires first; and no such suit in the said territories instituted within the said period of sixty years and pending at the date of the passing of this Act, either in a Court of first instance or of appeal, shall be dismissed on the ground that a twelve years' rule of limitation is applicable.

"(2). Where in the aforesaid territories the claim of a mortgagee for foreclosure or for sale has been wholly or in part dismissed or withdrawn after the twenty-second day of July 1907 and before the passing of this Act, either in a Court of first instance or of appeal, on the ground that a twelve years' rule of limitation applied to such claim, the case may be restored on an application in writing to the Court by which the claim was dismissed or in which it was withdrawn, provided the application is made within six months from the date of the passing of this Act; and on such restoration, the provisions of sub-sec. (1) shall apply."

The question in the present appeal is simply, and in a word, whether this supervenient legislation applies to this suit. That it was meant so to apply is fairly obvious from the citation of the date the 22nd July 1907, which is in fact the date of delivery of the previous judgment of this Board. Whether it does in fact so apply depends, as was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellants, solely on whether the suit was or was not a suit pending at the passing of the Act.

Their Lordships do not entertain any doubt that it was. The former judgment of the Board did not end the suit; did not finally determine it. It was remitted to the High Court of Madras for further procedure, and for enquiry upon allegations of fact; and at the date of the Statute that procedure was not concluded and the enquiry had not indeed been entered upon. The suit in fact was neither adjudged upon nor even ready for judgment. Their Lordships express their concurrence with the opinions of the learned Judges of the High Court, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Acknowledgment of a judgment-debt by one of several judgment-debtors keeps alive the decree against such judgment-debtor alone and not against the others.

RICHARDSON v. YOUNGE (1), BHOGILAL v. AMRITLAL (2), DHARMA v. BALMUKUND (3) distinguished.

NARAYANA v. VENKATA (4), VALA SUBRAMANIA PALLAI v. RAMANATHAN CHETTIAR (5), AHSANULLAH v. DAKKHINI DIN (6) relied on.

If a part only of the debt is acknowledged it is kept alive to that extent only.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th of May 1911 against an order of Mr. J. Phillimore, District Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 19th of January 1911, affirming that of Babu R. B. Barman, Munsif of Patiya, dated the 22nd of August 1910.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Krishna Proshad Sarbadhikari for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree, passed on the 19th of December 1901 and made absolute for sale on the 4th of September 1906. The first application for execution was made on the 13th of December 1906, for a sum of Rs. 231-0 annas taking the interest as Rs. 12 only whereas it was in reality Rs. 661 plus Rs. 12. On the 7th of March 1907, the Appellant-Defendant No. 4, who was one of the purchasers of the mortgaged properties (from the mortgagor Defendant No. 1), made an application that the decree-holder had claimed Rs. 231 and 15 annas including costs; that this amount could be realised by the sale of property No. 11 alone, and, in any case, that he was prepared to deposit any part of the claim not satisfied by the sale, or the whole of the sale. On the 9th March the decree-holder, who was under the impression that his claim of Rs. 231 was in accordance with the decree as passed, and that the decree must be amended, withdrew the application for execution. He found out, however, that no amendment was necessary, and that he had made a mistake, and he applied for execution on the 24th January 1910 for Rs. 845 including Rs. 661 for interest which he had omitted to claim in his previous application. One of the judgment-debtors objected that the application was barred by limitation but the decree-holder contended that the application of Defendant No. 4, dated the 7th March 1907, contained an acknowledgment of liability and saved the application from the bar of limitation. The first Court held that the application was barred except against Defendant No. 4 and allowed execution to proceed against him. The lower Appellate Court has upheld that decision and hence this second appeal by Defendant No. 4.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the Appellant :—(1) that the acknowledgment being made by one of several judgment-debtors in respect of a joint decree, it is of no avail to the decree-holder and the whole decree is barred ; and (2) that the acknowledgment is only in respect of the amount claimed, namely, Rs. 231 and 15 annas, and cannot be extended to the Rs. 661 interest which was not claimed. Reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the Appellant upon the case of Richardson v. Younge (1), and two Indian cases based upon the same, Bhogilal v. Amritlal (2), Dharma v. Balmukund (3). As regards Richardson v. Younge (1), it is sufficient to say that it has no application to the present case. It was the case of an acknowledgment by one of two trustees who were mortgagees as such and had, therefore, no several and apportionable interest in the mortgage. Sir J. Mellish, L. J., said in reference to the acknowledging mortgagee "he was simply joint tenant with his co-trustee of the land, and jointly entitled with him to the mortgage money. Had the mortgagees not been trustees, the case would have stood very differently for they must almost of necessity have been entitled to some distinct interests in the mortgage money." Sir W. M. James, L. J., said "Our decision is confined to the case of mortgagees who are trustees and are shown to be such on the face of the deed." The case of Bhogilal v. Amritlal (2) was decided upon the wording of Art. 148 of the Second Schedule to Act IX of 1871 which required an acknowledgment by the mortgagee or some person claiming under him and it was held that as the Act did not provide for an acknowledgment by an agent of the mortgagee, an acknowledgment by one of the heirs of the mortgagee would not suffice although he may have acted as the agent of his co-heirs. Sec. 20 of the Act had no application as it was not an acknowledgment in respect of a debt or legacy but in respect of the right of the mortgagor to redeem. It is true Jardine, J., referred to Richardson v. Younge (1), and to the opinion of Mr. Coote who referred to that case as an authority for the general proposition that "where there is a mortgage to two jointly there must be an acknowledgment by both," but we have shown that the facts of Richardson v. Younge (1) do not support that general proposition and that the judgments of the Lord Justice are quite plain as to the distinction. The Allahabad case, Dharma v. Balmukund (3), followed the Bombay case and was based on the wording of subsec. 15 of sec. 1 of Act XIV of 1859 which was similar to the wording of Art. 148 of the Second Schedule to Act IX of 1871. Mr. Justice Banerjee who tried the case as a single Judge said "the mortgage was made in favour of two mortgagees jointly and it was not a mortgage in which the interests of each mortgagee could be apportioned so as to allow of the mortgage being redeemed piecemeal. The report, however, does not disclose the nature of the mortgage and in any case the wording of the Act of 1859 must have regulated the particular decision.

The present case, however, must be decided on the Limitation Act of 1877. Sec. 19 requires the acknowledgment to be by the party against whom the right is claimed. Sec. 21 does not lay down an exception to sec. 19 but enumerates those cases in which the act of one member of a class is liable to be taken as the act of all: in respect of these cases it provides that an acknowledgment of one shall not by itself be taken as the acknowledgment of the others but that there must be something else such as authority express or implied. It does not say that the acknowledgment shall be ineffectual even against the party who made it; such a party if he is included in the party against whom the right is claimed must be responsible for his own act under sec. 19. If a joint claim is made against A, B and C each one of them is a party against whom the claim is made and if any one has made an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 he will start the running of a first period of limitation. In the case of Narayana v. Venkata (4), Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Bhasyam Ayyanger, J., decreed a suit on a mortgage bond against the Defendant who had made an acknowledgment and not against his co-mortgagor. It may be said however that it was a mere opinion as the matter was not argued and was in fact admitted by counsel and the ultimate decision of the Full Bench that Art. 147 applied to the case made the question of acknowledgment immaterial as the mortgage was of 1882 and the suit had been brought in 1897. It was in any case the opinion of two eminent Judges and is as such entitled to some weight. In the case of Vala Subramania Pullai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5), Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Abdur Rahim, J., set aside a decree on a hand-note so far as it affected one Defendant who had not made or authorized a part-payment made by another member of the family. In the case of Ahsanullah v. Dakkhini Din (6), the Allahabad High Court (Blair and Burkitt, JJ.) said "on general principles, one debtor by acknowledging a debt or making a part-payment otherwise than as the agent of the other debtors cannot keep alive the right of the creditor against those debtors." In the result the learned Judges dismissed the application for execution in so far as it sought to enforce the decree against one of the judgment-debtors otherwise than as one of the legal representatives of the person who had made the part-payment. These cases support the view we take that the execution may proceed against Defendant No. 4 who made the acknowledgment and not against the others against whom it is barred by limitation.

Then comes the second question as to the extent of the acknowledgment. The decree-holder applied for the realisation of 231 rupees and odd as the amount of the decree and the petition of Defendant No. 4 expressly mentioned that sum and made certain prayers for realising it. If the present claim for an additional amount of 661 rupees had been made there is no knowing whether Defendant No. 4 would have made the application at all. Acknowledgment connotes knowledge or consciousness of the burden one assents to bear and it cannot be said that Defendant No. 4 made acknowledgment of liability in respect of the whole claim now made. "If however a definite sum smaller than the sum claimed is named in the acknowledgment only the sum named, it seems, is taken out of the statute" Darby and Bosanquet, p. 99.

The decree-holder cannot therefore execute for more than 231 rupees and 15 annas plus interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the acknowledgment against the share of Defendant No. 4 only in the mortgaged properties. The appeal is decreed to that extent but without costs as no one appears for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of August 1909 against the decree of Babu Lal Singh, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Sahabad, dated the 17th of May 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Mitter, 1st Munsif of Buxar, dated the 13th of June 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Lalit Mohun Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Raghunath Singh for Babu Kulwant Sahay for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The case for the Plaintiff is that the tenancy was created by a kabuliyat executed on the 4th February 1887, for a term of five years, that after the expiry of the term the tenant has held over and that the Plaintiff is entitled to realise rent at the rate of Rs. 98-2 as. for the years 1906 and 1907. The Defendant resists the claim mainly on the ground that the rent payable is Rs. 37-8 as. a year.

The Court of first instance found that the tenancy had been created under the kabuliyat, that the Defendant entered into occupation on the strength thereof, that he held possession of the land for the full term of five years upon payment of rent at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and since the expiry of the term, he has held over. In this view, the Court of first instance made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff at the rate claimed; upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision. He has held on the authority of the decision of this Court in the case of Mukund Chandra Sarma v. Arpan Ali (1), that the mere fact that the Plaintiff obtained a kabuliyat from the Defendant does not entitle him to claim rent at the rate mentioned therein after the expiration of the term of the tenancy. The Subordinate Judge has, at the same time, held that the Defendant has failed to prove that he has been paying rent at the rate alleged in defence; yet the Judge has modified the decree of the Court of first instance and allowed the Plaintiff rent at the rate admitted by the tenant.

(1) 2 C. W. N. 47 (1897).

BAIJNATH PROSAD SAHU v. RAGHUNATH RAI.

On behalf of the Plaintiff, it has been contended in the present appeal that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is erroneous and that the Plaintiff was entitled to get rent at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat when the Defendant failed to prove that after the expiry of the term the rate of rent had been altered by agreement of parties. In our opinion there is no room for controversy that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

It was ruled by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of Sheik Enayutoollah v. Sheik Elaheebuksh (2), that when a tenant holds on after the expiration of a lease, he does so on the terms of the lease and at the same rate and on the same stipulations as are mentioned in the lease, unless the parties come to a fresh settlement. The same view was taken by Sir Richard Couch, C. J., in the case of Sayaji bin Habaji v. Umaji bin Sadoji (3), and was adopted by this Court as well-founded on principle in the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Asraf Ali (4), see also, Kishore Lal v. Administrator-

General (5), Jamaat Ali v. Chutturdharee (6), Sheo Sahoy v. Bichun (7), Tara Chunder v. Amir (8), Altah v. Jugul (9), Beni-prosad v. Raj Kumar (10). In the case before us, the tenant admits that the land of the tenancy is still in his occupation, that he first entered upon the land under the kabuliyat executed by him and that he was in possession for 5 years according to the terms of the contract between the parties. Consequently the inference follows that after the expiry of the term of the lease, the Defendant has held over according to the terms of the original contract. Until he establishes by evidence that the terms of the contract have been varied by mutual agreement between the parties, he must be held liable to pay rent at the original rate. The Subordinate Judge has found that the Defendant has failed to prove any new contract. In view of the decision of the Court in the cases of Lakhatulla v. Bishwambhar Roy (11) and Beni Madhab Gorani v. Lalmoti Dassi (12), there may perhaps be room for controversy whether such variation, if any, could have been established by oral evidence.* It is not necessary however to express any opinion upon this point because the Defendant has not proved by evidence that the rent has been varied. It was also laid down by this Court in the case of Durga Frosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (13), that the mere fact that the rent for some years has been received at a reduced rate does not bind the lessor to accept rent at that rate in future. Consequently even if the Defendant established that for a year or two, the landlord had accepted from him lower rent than that mentioned in the kabuliyat, it would not necessarily follow that the terms of the original contract had been permanently varied. The view we take is not really opposed to the decision in Mukund Chandra Sarma v. Arjan Ali (1). In this case, the Defendant denied that he held the land of the tenancy under the contract set up by the Plaintiff; the Plaintiff failed to prove that the Defendant did so hold the land. The Defendant on the other hand proved that he had never paid rent at the contract rate but had paid at a much lower rate. Under these circumstances, the learned Judges held that the landlord could not successfully claim to recover rent at the alleged contract rate. That case therefore does not lay down any inflexible rule of law and the case before us is of an entirely different description.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge reversed and that of the Court of first instance restored with cost throughout

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 295 OF 1910.

STEPHEN, J. GOL MAHOMED,
CHATTERJEE, J. Petitioner, Appellant,
v.
1912. | ABDUL JUBBAR, Opposite
8, February. Party, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 41, r. 18—Failure of Appellant to file notice of appeal, dismissal of appeal, if proper.

Where a person preferred an appeal and at the same time deposited the fees for service of the notice of appeal on the Respondent but did not file the notice to be served as required by the Circular Order of the High Court.

Held—That the appeal could not be properly dismissed under Or. 41, r. 18 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of June 1910, against an order of Mr. W. S. Coutts, District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 18th of March 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das for the Appellant.

Babus Lalit Mohan Banerjee and Smritish Chandra Ghosh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case the Appellant filed an appeal in the Court below on the 2nd of February 1910 and at the same time he deposited the talabana, on the 2nd March 1910, the case came on for hearing and notice was not filed and the appeal was dismissed. This presumably was a notice which the Appellant was required to file by the Circular Orders in the Court in order that processes might be issued. The dismissal of the appeal, apparently, was under Or. 41, r. 18, C. P. C., which does not apply to the present case as the talabana had been deposited. The result is that the dismissal of the appeal on the 2nd March was wrong; consequently when the matter came up on an application for re-admission, on the 18th March, re-admission ought to have been allowed. It was in fact refused on the ground that notice had not been filed though that was perhaps through the fault of the party. We cannot hold that the Judge in this matter exercised his discretion rightly, but as the order of the 2nd of March was wrong, the application for re-admission ought to have been granted.

It is objected that there is no appeal in this case. Taking the order to have been one under r. 18, Or. 41, the application for re-admission was one under Or. 41, r. 19, C. P. C. Consequently there is an appeal under Or. 43, r. 1, sub-sec. (f), C. P. C. In any case there is an application for the exercise of our revisional powers.

The result is that the orders of the 2nd March and 18th March 1910 are set aside and we direct that the appeal do proceed according to law.

We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

HOLMWOOD, J.

SHARFUDDIN, J. SATISH CHANDRA SARKAR, 1912, Petitioner,
v.

Heard, 10, January. | THE KING-EMPEROR, Judgment, Opposite Party.

15, January.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 109 and 110—Security for good behaviour—Concealing—Ostensible means of subsistence—Satisfactory account.

The whole of cl. (a) of sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, must be read together and the object of the concealment must be with a view to committing some offence; mere concealment with a view to avoid observation is no offence at all. A person cannot be called upon to furnish security for an alleged temporary concealment in his father's house unconnected with any intention to commit an offence nor for any previous concealment outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who takes the proceedings. The fact that a person had been previously connected with any criminal conspiracy or might still be in correspondence with any criminals outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate would not be relevant in a case under sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code.

Where a young man out of employment is staying in his father's house and the father is a man of substance, able, if necessary, to support him he cannot be said to be without ostensible means of subsistence under the first part of cl. (b) of sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code.

The whole object of the second part of cl. (b) of sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, is to enable Magistrates to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdictions. A person cannot be called upon to give any account of his presence outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate taking proceedings under sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code.

This was a Rule granted on the 8th of November 1911 against an order of Mr. G. P. Hogg, District Magistrate of Rajshahye, dated the 26th of September 1911, directing the Petitioner in a proceeding under sec. 109, Cr. P. C., to execute a bond of Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each for his good behaviour for one year.

The Petitioner came to Nattore on the 9th of August 1911 at the house of his father who was a Government Pensioner and he was arrested by the Police from the said house on the 12th of August 1911, on which date proceedings under sec. 109, Cr. P. C., were instituted against him.

The Petitioner was a member of a joint Hindu family consisting, among other members, of his father and his two brothers, one of whom was a medical practitioner at Nattore and the other a Kanungo. A warrant for his arrest in connection with the Howrah Political Gang case, Emperor v. Nani Gopal Gupta (1), had been issued by the District Magistrate of Howrah and the said warrant was followed by a proclamation requiring him to appear and an order for the attachment of his properties. The said warrant along with the proclamation and attachment order was withdrawn on 15th June 1911.

Mr. J. N. Roy with him Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee contended on behalf of the Petitioner that the case was clearly beyond the scope of sec. 109, Cr. P. Code, which is chiefly intended for action being taken against vagabonds and sturdy rogues that may lurk about within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate. The Petitioner was a member of a joint Hindu family having sufficient means of subsistence and he was arrested in the family house. The fact that the Petitioner was connected with anarchical crimes which took place more than 2 or 3 years ago and that he is still in correspondence with any criminals outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction, would not be relevant evidence in the case. Assuming those facts to be true and taking for granted that the Petitioner absconded and concealed himself in an unknown place to avoid the harassment of a criminal prosecution which subsequently proved abortive and failed, these facts would not bring the case within the purview of the section. The Magistrate is not empowered to look into the actions and conduct of the Petitioner beyond his jurisdiction.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri with him Babu Sirish Chandra Chowdhury on behalf of the Crown contended that at the time when the proceeding against the Petitioner was instituted he was within the Magistrate's jurisdiction and there were reasons for suspecting that he was even then connected with anarchical movements, the Petitioner did not stir out of his house during day-time; all these facts were sufficient to bring the case within cl. (a) of sec. 109, Cr. P. C. Although the Petitioner was arrested at a house said to be in the occupation of his father and brothers yet none of those persons came forward to give evidence in the case to shew that the Petitioner who was doing no work was being supported by any one of them. This clearly brings the case within the first part of cl. (b) of sec. 109, Cr. P. C. The Petitioner refused before the learned Magistrate to give any account of what he was doing and where he had been for the last 2 or 3 years. This fact was sufficient to bring the case within the second part of cl. (b) of the section. If a person be within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate taking proceedings under the section, that is enough to empower the Magistrate to proceed under the section and there is nothing in the section to prevent the Magistrate from looking into actions and conduct of the person outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate of Rajshahye to show cause why the order directing the Petitioner to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each for his good behaviour for one year under sec. 109, Cr. P. Code, and on failure to give security to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year should not be set aside on the ground that it does not appear that the Petitioner is without ostensible means of subsistence and that the account he has given of himself is satisfactory. Having given the case our most attentive consideration we are of opinion that the Rule must be made absolute.

The proceeding upon which the order complained of was based was dated the 12th August 1911 and set out that whereas it was reported that Satish Chunder Sarkar was in Nattore or its vicinity and was concealing himself in order to avoid observation and there was reason to believe that he was connected with anarchist agitation and conspiracies for the purpose of committing dacoity and other crimes and whereas he had no ostensible means of livelihood and could not give a satisfactory account of himself he was called upon to execute securities as set out above.

The proceedings were taken under sec. 109, Cr. P. C., and not under sec. 110 and the ground covered was on the face of it in respect of both cls. (a) and (b) of the section. The Officiating District Magistrate however dealt with it under three heads, the first being that the accused was concealing himself in order to avoid observation. This of course is no offence at all and the Magistrate held as he was bound to hold that the prosecution had not made out its case on this head. But he omitted to notice that what he calls the second allegation against the accused is really a substantive and necessary part of the first if there is to be any order under cl. (a) of sec. 109.

The whole clause must be read together and the object of the concealment must be with a view to committing some offence.

Now the second allegation is that the accused is connected with anarchist agitation and conspiracies for the purpose of committing dacoity and other crimes.

This standing by itself could constitute no ground for a proceeding under sec. 109 but would properly form the basis of a proceeding under sec. 110 to which the accused has had no opportunity of answering.

It being found that he only returned to his father's house on the 9th of August and merely secluded himself in the day time going out at night for exercise and that the prosecution had not made out that he was taking any particular steps to conceal himself for the purpose of committing any offence, the fact that he had previously been connected with any criminal conspiracy or might still be in correspondence with any criminals outside the jurisdiction would not be relevant in a case under sec. 109. It would have to form the basis of a substantive proceeding under sec. 110. The connection between the alleged concealment and the accused's history having admittedly failed the proceeding under sec. 109 (a) necessarily fails also.

The District Magistrate may of course take any proceedings he is advised under sec. 110 if he is of opinion that the accused is still a desperate and dangerous character but he cannot be called upon to furnish any security in respect of an alleged temporary concealment in his father's house unconnected with any intention to commit an offence, nor with any previous concealment which admittedly must have been outside the jurisdiction.

We come therefore to the consideration of the charge under cl. (b) which is that he has no ostensible means of livelihood any that he cannot give a satisfactory account of himself.

The learned Magistrate finds against him on both these points although he finds that the accused is a member of a joint family that he came straight to his father's house on his arrival in Nattore and that his father and brother accompanied him to Court. He appears to expect that the father and brother should go into the witness-box and take oath that he is being supported out of joint family funds. Obviously as long as a young man out of employment is staying in his father's house and that father is a man of substance, able, if necessary, to support him he cannot be said to be without ostensible means of subsistence. The use of the word "livelihood" seems to have led the learned Magistrate into error.

We have no hesitation in finding that the accused's father is a man of a very ostensible means of subsistence and that as long as he keeps his son in his house no further evidence is required.

As regards the account he is asked to give of himself it would appear that the Magistrate has exceeded his jurisdiction under sec. 109.

The account he gives of his presence in the limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction is quite satisfactory. He has fled from fear of a warrant directed against him in a specific case. That warrant having been withdrawn 3 months ago he has ventured to return to his home though he keeps himself as is natural and we think proper in strict seclusion from curious enquirers.

He cannot be called upon to give any account of his presence in any other jurisdiction except by the Magistrate who is empowered to take proceedings in that jurisdiction.

The whole object of this part of the clause is to enable Magistrates to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdiction. The greatest criminal in the world is not liable to be questioned as to his presence in his own home unless there is some specific outstanding charge against him.

We therefore hold that the proceeding under cl. (b) of the section also fails and that the proceedings in this case must be set aside and the accused discharged from his bail subject to any action the District Magistrate may see fit to take under sec. 110 but no such proceeding we may point out should be taken unless there is evidence that the Petitioner is still connected with conspiracies to commit crime or is a desperate and dangerous character at the present time.

The Rule is made absolute and the proceedings under sec. 109 are set aside.

Rule made absolute.

REV. NO. 898 OF 1911.

STEPHEN, J. }
 N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. } Accused, Petitioner,
 1911, v.
 Heard, 28, October. THE KING-EM-Judgment, PEROR, Opposite
 9, November. J Party.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 132 proviso—Thumb impression, taking of, by Court—Relevancy against the person making it.

Taking a thumb impression of a witness by the Court is not equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer within the purview of the proviso to sec. 132, Indian Evidence Act, and therefore such a thumb impression may be proved against the person giving it in a criminal trial.

Taking of a thumb impression is merely observing a characteristic feature of a man's body.

The proviso to sec. 132 of the Evidence Act does not apply unless the witness objected to answer the question.

QUEEN v. GOPAL DOSS (1) and MOHER SHEIKH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS (2) relied on.

It applies again only to questions asked in the course of the trial.

This was an Rule granted on the 28th of July 1911 against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 28th of June 1911, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 193, I. P. C., and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for 3 months and to pay a fine of Rs. 50; an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong on the 15th July 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

(2) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 392 (1893).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner in this case is Tunoo Mia who had been convicted under sec. 193, I. P. C., of giving false evidence. A Rule has been granted calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of and sentence on the accused should not be set aside and a retrial of his case ordered, on the grounds that the evidence of thumb impressions was admitted contrary to the provisions of sec. 132 of the Evidence Act and also that the lower Courts have not dealt with a great deal of the evidence placed before him.

On the first point the facts are that the Petitioner brought a charge of defamation against one Mohim Chandra Guha, and during his cross-examination swore that he was not convicted at Rangoon on a charge under sec. 408, I. P. C., brought by Fazal Rahaman Chowdry, and was not sentenced to imprisonment and fine, and did not appeal. During the hearing of that case the trying Magistrate took, or caused to be taken, the Petitioner's thumb impression and that impression corresponds with the impression of a man who was convicted at Rangoon in the circumstances above stated. The argument indicated by the Rule as arising on these facts is that taking a thumb impression is equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer, and that therefore the thumb impression is equivalent to an answer within the purview of the proviso to sec. 132 of the Evidence Act, and may not therefore be proved against the Petitioner in the present proceedings. To this there are several answers. In the first place the taking of a thumb impression is merely observing a characteristic feature of a man's body. Whether the Magistrate had a right to take the impression is a question we are not concerned with and at present we need not consider whether the prisoner consented or not to the impression being taken. The impression was in fact taken, that is, an observation was made and recorded, and in principle the position is the same as if the Magistrate had photographed the Appellant or noticed a deformity or a scar, matters which might certainly be proved if they were relevant. The analogy between taking a thumb impression and asking a question therefore breaks down.

In the second place it was held by the majority of the Court in Queen v. Gopal Doss (1), that where an accused person has made a statement voluntarily, and without compulsion on the part of the Court, it may be used against him on his trial, if relevant; that is, the proviso to sec. 132 does not apply unless the witness objects to answer the question—and this decision has been followed by this Court in Mohes Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (2). See too the note to sec. 132 in Woodroffe's Evidence Act. In this case there is nothing to show that the Appellant made any objection to the impression of his thumb being taken and the proviso to sec. 132 does not therefore apply.

(1) I. L. R. 3 Mad. 271 (1881).

In the third place, sec. 132 obviously only applies to questions asked in the course of the trial; and there is nothing to show that the thumb impression in this case was taken during the trial. It seems in fact to have been taken with a view to the possibility of this trial.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the first reason for not setting aside the conviction mentioned in the Rule must fail.

As to the second ground the only evidence placed before the Court with which it is suggested that it has not dealt, is the record of the case tried in Rangoon which it is said shows that the Fazal Rahman who was the complainant there prescribed, gave different description of his own parentage and age, and the parentage of the Tunno Mia then accused, from that given of the same matters by the Fazal Rahman who gave evidence in the present case. Fazal Rahman in the present case however was not asked to explain the discrepancy, nor were the contents of the Rangoon record, said to bear the record in this case, though it is not before us, brought to his notice. We cannot therefore hold that the matter was not sufficiently considered by the lower Courts. No reason for our interference is therefore made out on the second ground mentioned in the Rule; and it must therefore be discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145, passing orders under, without hearing arguments, illegality of.

This Rule was issued calling upon the Magistrate to show cause why the order of the Magistrate under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground that it was made, without hearing the arguments of the Petitioners' pleader.

Their Lordships observed :—

"We are clearly of opinion that the explanation of the District Magistrate cannot mean anything else than that, as it was too late for him on that day both to hear arguments and to deliver decision he thought that it was in his competence not to allow any adjournment for the purpose of argument but to pass orders at once. No doubt the pleader did not say to him "if you cannot hear me at this late hour I must ask for adjournment." That did not justify the Magistrate in declining to hear him altogether and passing orders at once.

The case must be sent back to the learned Magistrate to hear the arguments of the 1st party's pleader and in the meantime the order passed will remain in abeyance. A fresh order will be passed after considering the arguments of the first party. It is within the discretion of the Magistrate to take any evidence that may be offered on the day of rehearing.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 169 OF 1912. BEPIN BEHARY BANERJEE, Petitioner v. THE KING EMPEROR, Opposite party. 11th March 1912.

Statement of a co-accused, how far admissible.

One of the grounds on which this Rule was issued was that the lower Courts illegally and improperly used the statement of a co-accused against the Petitioner.

Their Lordships observed :—

"... We do not think that the Sessions Judge should have examined the co-accused as a witness at the appellate stage, but we find that as a matter of fact he has not relied upon his evidence but decided the case on the very clear evidence on the record. It appears that the co-accused made statements in answer to the charge on which he was being jointly tried by the Magistrate implicating the present Petitioner. He then pleaded guilty and was convicted and sentenced at the same time as the present Petitioner. It was strenuously argued for the defence of the present Petitioner who alone appealed before the learned Sessions Judge that after the co-accused pleaded guilty he was no longer being jointly tried and therefore his statement could not be taken into consideration against the Appellant. The learned Sessions Judge was doubtful whether the usual practice at Sessions would apply to a trial before the Magistrate but ex majori cautela he thought it best to have the co-accused produced for cross-examination in his Court on the footing that he ceased to be tried with the Petitioner as soon as he pleaded guilty. But here we think he was in error. The rulings referred to only apply to Sessions trials where the plea is taken before evidence is gone into. . . .

Cess Act (IX of 1880), sec. 41—Raiyat, if tenureholder—Annual value—Cess, ascertainment of.

The suit was for recovery of rent and cesses. So far as a decree for rent was passed in favour of the Plaintiff, no controversy arose, but the dispute was as to the decree in respect of the cesses claimed. The plaint set out in a schedule the arrears of cesses, and from that schedule it appeared that the claim was made in respect of four separate jamas. The decision in the Court of the Munsif, so far as it related to the cesses was adverse to the Plaintiff, inasmuch as it was not shown what was the annual value of each of those four jamas. The Subordinate Judge modified that decree, for it appeared to him that he was entitled to utilise the valuation roll filed on behalf of the Plaintiff, and marked Ex. I which showed the annual value of the lands as Rs. 1,290-6 as. and the total amount of rent payable by the Defendant as Rs. 463-6 as. On that basis he passed a decree in the Plaintiff's favour for the excess claimed by him over and above that which had been awarded by the Munsif. From that decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court which came before Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee. He set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restored that of the Court of first instance on the ground that upon the Plaintiff's own document it appeared that the Defendants were treated by the Plaintiff as *raiya*s of the land in respect of which the present suit was brought.

Held—That a *raiya*t might be a tenure-holder within the meaning of the Cess Act.

That it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff to establish and the Courts to find, what was the annual value of each of the four jamas; and, also whether in respect of those four jamas the Defendants were 'tenure-holders' or 'cultivating *raiya*s' within the meaning of the Act, and further, what was the profit, if any, in respect of each of the four jamas.

WE ACCORD A MOST HEARTY WELCOME TO THE Right Hon'ble Thomas Lord Carmichael, the first Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. It will be remembered that soon after Lord Curzon's proposal for the partitioning of Bengal was put forward we were the first to advocate the statutory claims of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal to be raised into a Governorship by quoting chapter and verse from Parliamentary Statutes (see our issue of the 14th of March 1904). We have since then steadily ad- vocated the scheme and it now gives us very great pleasure indeed to find the Governorship of Bengal an accomplished fact. It has pleased the King- Emperor to select as our first Governor an English statesman of excellent records behind him and who has already by his wide sympathy and keen concern for the people of a sister Presidency given every promise of proving himself a wise, devoted and dutiful ruler of this premier Presidency, now placed under his charge. His Excellency will, however, be quite new to the position of respon- sibility in which he has been placed and it be- hoves every one, be he an official or non-official, to co-operate with him in the difficult work of orga- nising the new administration. His Excellency's tribute to the Calcutta High Court, describing it as a tribunal "whose independence has won the admiration of the whole world" is really well- merited and will be greatly appreciated by all and further, may be considered to convey an assurance to the people that he shares their confidence in the Court and that there will be no interference with the independence of the judiciary and the impartial administration of justice in this Presidency during his regime.

THERE APPEARS TO BE IN SOME QUARTERS AN inclination to make a grievance of His Excellency the Governor-General withholding his assent to the Orissa Tenancy Bill. It is difficult to see the point of much of the aimless criticism that has been directed against this act of His Excellency which is not only strictly constitutional but one which was in the circumstances of the case eminently just and proper.

THERE COULD NEVER BE ANY DOUBT OF THE Governor-General's constitutional power of vetoing any law passed by the Lieutenant-Governor's Council. Sec. 40 of the Indian Councils Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67) enacts that no law passed by a Governor's Council (and this provision applies, by sec. 48 to a Lieutenant-Governor's Council) shall become law unless the Governor-General shall have assented thereto and such assent shall have been signified by him to and published by the Governor. It is to be noted that this right belongs to the Governor-General and not to the Governor-General in Council or to the Government of India. There is therefore no foundation for the suggestion that the Governor-General acted unconstitutionally in refusing assent without consulting his Council, if that is a fact. He might in most cases think fit to consult such members as he chose for informing himself, but it is neither a matter of constitutional law nor necessarily one of courtesy.

NO DOUBT WE ADMIT THAT THE VICEROY'S power of Veto should be exercised only on special occasions and under exceptional circumstances. The circumstances that would justify him in exercising his power of Veto would be like those under which the Punjab Canal Colony Act was vetoed by Lord Minto, that is, when people affected by it are against it. We have reasons to believe that the people of Orissa do not look upon the Bill with favour and the manner in which it was rushed through the last days of the Bengal Council has also created a good deal of public feeling against it. We have little hesitation in saying, therefore, that the veto if it has been given was given entirely in accordance with the wishes of the people and it was certainly a very proper exercise of the Governor-General's powers.

BUT WE PRESUME THE GOVERNOR GENERAL HAS not vetoed the Bill but only withheld his consent for the time being, though the effect of the act is to prevent the Bill from becoming law. But if that is so we feel that the step taken was in the circumstances of the case, the only one which the Viceroy could adopt. It has to be considered that it was only on the day of the Governor-General's departure from Calcutta that the Bill was placed before him for his assent after hurriedly rushing it through Council on the same day. The Hon'ble Mr. Das and the Hon'ble the Raja of Kanika claimed that the Orissa people were against the Bill being passed by the Bengal Council. There was no time left for the Viceroy to make enquiries and ascertain whether the Orissa people were really against the measure as their only true representatives in the Council said they were. What could Lord Hardinge do under these circumstances? If the Orissa people really felt as Mr. Das said they did, his signification of the assent would have been refusing an undoubtedly rightful claim of theirs. By refusing assent on the other hand no harm would be done. For the Council of Behar and Orissa as soon as it is constituted might pass the same measure, if it was as beneficent as it was claimed to be, after maturer consideration.

IN MUCH OF THE CRITICISM THAT IS LEVELLED against the action of the Governor-General, it is forgotten that unless the Governor-General chose to signify his assent without any consideration whatsoever the Bill could not possibly become law. The Bill was passed by the Bengal Council on the 27th March. The Governor-General left in the afternoon of the same date. Unless he gave his assent on the same date, that is so soon as the Bill was brought before him, he would have to take it with him and in no case could the assent have been communicated to the Lieutenant-Governor before the 31st March. Under sec. 40 of the Indian Councils Act a law could have no validity until his "assent shall have been signified by him to and published by" the Lieutenant-Governor. On the 1st of April the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Behar and Orissa ceased to exist and there was no authority which could publish the Bill and make it law. So unless the Viceroy assented on the 27th just when he was leaving, without any consideration and without any enquiry as to whether the people of Orissa liked the Bill to be passed by their new Council rather than the Bengal Council, the Bill could not have become law. We feel that in the case of a far-reaching and controversial measure like the Orissa Tenancy Bill the Governor-General was perfectly justified in refusing to be hurried into giving his assent. That is evidently what the Governor-General did and if his assent was not to be a mere sham he could do very little else.

IT MUST BE REMEMBERED THAT THE ACT OF THE Governor-General does not amount to vetoing the Bill on the merits. The only effect of it is that the Bill must be placed before the Behar and Orissa Council when it is constituted. It is absurd to contend that the Bill was of any such urgency that it must immediately be passed into law. There was no supreme public reasons why the Government of Bengal on possibly the very last day of its existence should place on the Statute Book a law, which they would not have to administer. Such procedure was wrong in principle and Lord Hardinge's act is at most merely a refusal to countenance such procedure. It does not touch the substance of the Bill which he may possibly approve of as much as Mr. Mcpherson himself.

Correspondence.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

SIR,—Now that the Cadastral Survey and Settlement operations are being carried on in many districts under the provisions of Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is necessary to draw the attention of the Hon'ble High Court to the procedure that is followed in this connection. Settlement operation may be classed under two main heads viz. :—

- (1) The Executive work.
- (2) The Judicial work.

The first deals with Traverse Survey, Kistwar, Khanapuri, for the purpose of preparing the draft record of rights and the publication of such records. The second stage begins with the objections put in under sec. 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which have to be tried on the basis of present possession, and includes decision of cases under secs. 105, 105A and 106 of the Act which relate to questions of title and all other disputes of civil nature, not even the difficult questions of easements &c. being excepted. The orders passed under secs. 105, 105A and 106 have the effect of Civil Court decrees, and the principles of res judicata are also applicable to them. Ordinarily the Civil Courts are authorised to deal with these classes of cases. Possessory suits under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, title and other suits of civil nature are cognizable exclusively by Civil Courts. It is a great anomaly that the same work in connection with settlement operations should be done by Deputy Magistrates, under the designation of Assistant Settlement Officer, although they have no regular training in civil work, much less the qualification for such duties. The country and the public are the best judges to say whether this arrangement is satisfactory. If it is said that the work done by the executive officers is as good as that of the Civil Courts, then there is no necessity for maintaining a double agency for the same kind of work nor any justification for the continuance of the judicial service for the civil administration of the country. If on the other hand it is admitted that the officers of the judicial service are better qualified and more competent to decide civil disputes and that in this respect they command greater confidence of the public then it is but just that the judicial work of the settlement operations should be done by the Munsifs. Originally Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not contemplate the decision of such vital question of title as under the present law. The successive amendments of the law have gradually transferred the consideration of all questions of title to the settlement authorities under the chapter. It has therefore become all the more urgent that Munsifs should be deputed in larger numbers to the settlement department and entrusted with the cases under secs. 103A, 105, 105A and 106. This will not only make the settlement operations more popular, but the Munsifs, whose promotions are extremely slow, will be too glad to participate in the generous allowances (deputation allowance Rs. 100 and halting allowance to Rs. 135 @ Rs. 4-8 per diem ordinarily) now so largely enjoyed by the executive officers.

This volume contains reprints of judgments from the Indian Law Reports, Allahabad Series, the Allahabad Weekly Notes and other sources, passed between the dates mentioned, in cases from Allahabad, including Privy Council judgments. The arrangement of the cases and the general get up of this volume are quite on par with those of its predecessor.

ALL INDIA DECENNIAL DIGEST. (Civil 1901—1910). Vols. I and II. By B. R. Desai, High Court Pleader, Baroda. Baroda. 1911.

Mr. Desai whose Criminal Digest for the years 1901—1910 we noticed some time ago is giving as good an account of himself in preparing this Civil Digest, which the two parts under notice bring up to the heading Gujrat Talukdar's Act. He expects to complete the series in another volume. The arrangement of the subject-matter is as satisfactory as may be expected in a compilation of this kind. The collection of materials is exhaustive. We have no doubt that these volumes will prove useful to the profession.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Wann. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND AND JUSTICES HAMILTON AND LUSH. 12th February 1912.

Misdirection of the jury—Miscarriage of justice.

This was an appeal from a conviction and sentence for indecent assault. It was contended on the Appellant's behalf that there was misdirection of the jury and consequent miscarriage of justice. The Court allowed the appeal. In the course of his judgment the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said :—

The words as to a miscarriage of justice were obviously intended to give the Court a wide jurisdiction within the recognized principles of our criminal jurisprudence, and the question had arisen as to whether they applied where a summing up, though not wrong in law, had insufficiently or incorrectly stated the facts to the jury. As to this, it was clear that a mere omission or misstatement in the summing up was not in itself a misdirection when the case had been fully heard by the jury. The law to be gathered from a summary of the decisions was well stated in Mr. Ross's book on the Criminal Appeal Act, p. 113, and the rule was that there could only be a miscarriage of justice in such a case where in the opinion of the Court the omission or misstatement was such that the jury might probably have been misled by it.

His Lordship pointed out the importance of a certain date in the story told by the prosecution. The Court felt, he said, that if there had been a fuller direction in the summing up as to this matter it could not be certain that the jury would in all reasonable probability have found the Appellant guilty. There was only this one point in doubt, for they were satisfied that the jury had otherwise fully considered the case. The Court expressed no opinion as to whether the Appellant was or was not innocent; it was better in any case that a guilty man should escape punishment rather than that an innocent man should suffer; and though they had come to their decision with very great doubt and hesitation they felt it wiser to be on the safe side, and so would order the conviction to be quashed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Cuff v. London and County Land and Building Company. Before LORDS JUSTICES FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 5th February 1912.

Injunction—Auditors, their powers and duties, their right of access to the books of the Company, employing them—Charge of negligence against auditors—Shareholders' right to dismiss auditors—Court if will enforce auditors right of access by mandatory injunction.

This was an appeal from an order made by Mr. Justice Eve and shortly noted in 16 C. W. N. cxxi where facts are stated.

The Court allowed the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE FARWELL said :—

The argument put forward on the part of the Plainiffs went to the extent, that an auditor of a company, even if he were a convicted felon, had a statutory right to have access to the books of the Company of which he could not be deprived. Even if that were so, it was one thing to affirm such a statutory right and it was another thing to say that the Court would grant a mandatory injunction to give effect to such a right. He thought that the usual practice of the Court when such a case arose was to direct that a general meeting of the shareholders should be held in order that their wishes might be ascertained. If the shareholders expressed the wish that a particular person should not act as auditor, the Court certainly would not force that person upon them.

Sec. 112 of the Companies Act, 1908, conferred the power of appointing an auditor or auditors on the company. An auditor so appointed had a prima facie right to rely on such appointment, and if he were discharged without cause the remedy of bringing an action for wrongful dismissal was open to him. But to say that he could force his services on a company which did not wish for them appeared to be extravagant. They now knew, though the learned Judge when he took off the day did not know, that a general meeting of this company was going to be held next Thursday. He did not see any real difficulty with regard to sec. 113 of the Companies Act. That section said that every auditor of a company should have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company. But if an auditor were excluded vi et armis from the offices of the company, he could not be blamed for not performing a duty which he was manifestly unable to perform. At any rate there seemed to him to be no reason for interfering in this case in a summary manner, or for making an order which appeared to be asked not in the interests of the company, but in the interests of the Plaintiffs themselves.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION—James v. The Rockwood Colliery Company, "Ld." Before JUSTICES HAMILTON AND LUSH. 31st January 1912.

Company—Director—Meaning of "insolvent" in the article of association.

The Plaintiff who was a director of the Defendant Company sued to recover his fees. One of the articles of the association provided that "the office of a director shall ipso facto be vacated if he became bankrupt, lunatic or insolvent." It was shown that the Plaintiff became financially involved but he was not declared by Court as insolvent. The Defendant contended that he did become insolvent within the meaning of the article. But the Plaintiff's argument was that the word meant a change of status, i.e., public insolvency. The Court affirmed the view of the Defendant and dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment Mr. JUSTICE HAMILTON said:—

What was the necessity for using the word insolvent at all if it was to mean the status of bankruptcy? The case of bankruptcy was already provided for, and what necessity was there to add the word insolvent if it was to mean that the director must have done something analogous to an adjudication, as, for example, calling all his creditors together or executing a deed of assignment? The cases which had been cited were of small, if of any, assistance. In the Queen v. Saddlers' Company, 10 H. L. C. 402, the context in which the word insolvent was used was different in two respects from that in which it was used in Art. 15. The question there turned upon the construction of a by-law passed in 1799, and it was held that it must be construed with reference to the state of the law as it then existed, and in addition the by-law was one which alluded to a period of time to be measured from the insolvency, and weight was attached to that fact because it was pointed out that it was directed to some such insolvency as was capable of having a definite fixed date as the commencement of the term.

In the case before them there was nothing to suggest that the word insolvent must be treated as being eiusdem generis with lunatic and bankrupt and they were not troubled with words relating to insolvency which would denote the commencement of a term.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Pink v. Pink. Before Mr. JUSTICE EVE. 30th January 1902.

Debt—Release, cancellation as bad in account book &c.

This was the trial of a summons. The testator lent moneys to Mr. R. and Mr. M. By his will he made a settlement upon Mrs. R. (his daughter) and her children and directed that the debt due from Mr. R. should not be called in for five years if interest was duly paid. Similar settlement was made upon his other daughter Mrs. M. After the date of the will the testator made entries in his ledger. With reference to Mr. R. it stated that "the debt is cancelled as altogether bad, the debtor being bankrupt" and with reference to Mr. M. that the debt was absolutely cancelled. The question now raised was whether the said debts still existed and ought to be set off against the settled legacies. The learned Judge decided as follows:—

With regard to Mr. R.'s debt nothing had been repaid nor any security given, and in February 1908 he became bankrupt and was still undischarged. No interest had been paid on the debt, and the residuary legatees argued that it had become immediately payable and ought to be deducted from the settled legacy. There seemed to be no answer to that contention. The entry in the ledger could not be a release, and there was nothing in the argument that bankruptcy put an end to the indebtedness. Flower v. Marten (2 My. and C. 459) and other cases cited were no authority for the proposition that bankruptcy put an end to a debt. The trustees therefore ought to treat the debt as still existing and as a loss to be set off against the settled legacy.

With regard to Mr. M.'s debt the case was somewhat different. There were several repayments and subsequent advances, and in February 1907 the testator made a memorandum in his ledger that £5,000 was given off this debt for a definite object and the balance carried forward uncanceled. The memorandum was communicated to Mrs. R. but not to Mr. R. In these circumstances it was difficult to treat the entry as an intention to give £5,000 to Mr. R. By his will the testator appointed Mr. M. one of his executors, and in 1909 made an entry in the ledger that the debt was absolutely cancelled. It was argued that the entry and the communication to Mrs. R. amounted to a release of the debt, that the appointment of Mr. M. as executor released the debt at law, and equity following the law would treat the release as perfected, and Strong v. Bird (L. R. 18 Eq. 315) and other cases were cited.

His Lordship could not treat the entry as evidence of a gift and could not hold that the gift was perfected by the appointment as executor. He thought the evidence of a gift was very slight and doubted whether any gift was intended. Assuming that there was evidence of an intention to give, his Lordship did not think it had been perfected by the appointment as executor. The trustees must, therefore, treat the loss as falling upon the settled legacy.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 207 OF 1912. CHUNNI MAHTO AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 8th March 1912.

Remand—Power of the Sessions Judge to pass a different order and sentence on.

It appears that the case of the Petitioners was remanded to the Sessions Judge for re-hearing and the Sessions Judge after re-hearing passed a different order and sentence from those passed by his predecessor.

Their Lordships observed :—

"We can have no doubt looking into the matter as res integra that the Sessions Judge on remand has jurisdiction to pass a different order and sentence to that passed by his learned predecessor, even though it has the effect of imposing a more severe sentence on any of the previous Appellants."

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and JAMAM, JJ. REVISION No. 263 OF 1912. IN THE MATTER OF MOTIULLA MOLLAH, Petitioner. 15th March 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 198—Indian Penal Code, sec. 500, order for prosecution under—Illegality of.

The Magistrate made the following order :—

Whereas Motiulla Mollah in his petition has stated that Sub-Inspector of Police, Syed Ashraf Ali, accepted an illegal gratification as consideration for releasing him from custody and "whereas the said Syed Asraf Ali denies the allegation and states it to be false, the said Syed Asraf Ali is hereby directed to institute within 7 days and prove a case of defamation under sec. 500, I. P. C., against the said Motiulla Mollah."

On a subsequent date the Magistrate took cognizance of the aforesaid alleged offence under sec. 190 (c), though Ashraf Ali did not lodge any complaint and summoned Ashraf Ali to give evidence for the prosecution.

The Petitioner obtained a Rule to set aside the proceeding on the ground that the Petitioner could not be prosecuted under sec. 500, I. P. C., without the complaint of the aggrieved party.

Their Lordships observed :—

The aggrieved persons did not complain and the proceedings are therefore entirely without jurisdiction. It is impossible to take proceedings under sec. 500, I. P. C., when the prosecutor declines to complain. The rule must be made absolute and the order of the lower Court discharged.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and CARNDUFF, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1015 OF 1909. KRISHNA DAS LAHA AND OTHERS, Defendants, Appellants v. JOTINDRA NATH BASU AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. Heard, 1st March 1912. Judgment, 5th March 1912.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 160, cl. (g)—Protected interest—Mortgage by putnidar if protected interest—Sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act—Putni Regulation, sec. 11.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Respondents to enforce a registered mortgage bond for Rs. 2,675, dated 20th November 1896, said to have been executed by Defendant No. 1, who is a putnidar. In the putni kabuliyat given by Defendant No. 1 to Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords, dated the 2nd Jaist 1299, it was stated "I in succession to my sons, grandsons, etc., heirs and representatives shall, with felicity, hold and enjoy the aforesaid share, with right to make gift, sale, mortgage, etc., and durputni mourasi mokurari, gantidari, etc., settlements at a proper jama, and in every way make alienations and create encumbrances." Defendant No. 1 the putnidar defaulted in paying the rent due on the putni tenure and in consequence Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords, in execution of the rent decree purchased the tenure themselves. Thereupon the Plaintiffs as mortgagees brought the present suit against Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to recover the sum advanced on the mortgage by sale of the putni tenure which then passed to the hands of Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords. Defendant No. 1 did not appear and Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 contested the suit. The Plaintiffs pleaded that the mortgage in question came within the description of "protected interests" under sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the kabu- liyat empowered Defendant No. 1 the putnidar to execute mortgage, etc., and the landlords expressly and in writing gave him permission to create the incumbrance. But the Defendants contended that written permission of the landlords to create the mortgage in question was necessary and it was to be given after the kabuliyat. Both the lower Courts found for the Plaintiffs and held that the mortgage in suit was "protected interest" under sec. 160, Bengal Tenancy Act, and it could not be annulled. The Defendants appealed.

Held—That the mortgage created in favour of the Plaintiffs was not a protected interest within the meaning sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The recitals in the putni kabuliyat merely set out the ordinary incidents of a putni grant as laid down in sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation and these recitals gave the putnidar no right which he had not under the Regulation. Even if the recitals could be regarded as an express authority within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the effect of that section would certainly be subject to the saving provisions of cl. (e) of sec. 195 of the same Act.

Held also—That the right of the putnidar to mortgage the putni tenure was subject to the conditions imposed by sec. 11 of the Putni Regulation.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and IMAM, JJ. APPEALS FROM ORDERS NOS. 606 and 647 OF 1911. BAIJ NATH GOENKA, Decree-holder, Appellant v. PUDMANUND SINGH, Judgment-debtor, Respondent. Heard, 4th March 1912. Judgment, 11th March 1912.

Res judicata—Execution proceeding—Attachment of allowance—Erroneous decision on a point of law, if can have the force of res judicata—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 11 and 100.

The Appellant in this case in a former execution proceeding attached an allowance payable to the Respondent. The attachment was contested but it was decided against the Respondent and the decision was not appealed against. What was sought to be attached in that case was not any particular instalments but the whole allowance as it fell due. Subsequently it was held in a case between the Respondent and another creditor, to which the Appellant was not made a party, that this allowance could not be attached in that general way and that instalments could not be attached before they respectively fell due. The Appellant again took out execution and the Respondent pleaded that this attachment could not be made. This plea was accepted by the Subordinate Judge and the decree-holder appealed.

The point that arose in the appeal was whether the liability of the allowance to attachment was or was not res judicata between the parties.

Held—That an erroneous decision on a point of pure law cannot have the force of res judicata in a subsequent proceeding for a different relief. Aghore Nath Mukerji v. Kamini Debi, 11 C. L. J. 461, and Purna Chandra v. Rasik Chandra, 13 C. L. J. 119, followed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEAL NO. 35 OF 1910. GOPAL KRISHNA JANA, Appellant v. LAKHIRAM SARDAR, Respondent. 14th March 1912.

Encroachment by tenant—Adverse possession of limited interest—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144.

The suit was one for khas possession of lands, and the lands in respect of which the relief was sought were treated as so situate and circumstanced as to come within the doctrine of encroachment. The Defendant was a tenant of the Plaintiff in respect of the other property, and the question was whether the Plaintiff, the landlord, could recover khas possession of the land in suit which was not included originally in the lease but was treated as the subject of an encroachment by the Defendant as a tenant of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff's claim was upheld in both the lower Courts, on the ground that the Defendant was not entitled to assert his position as a tenant of the Plaintiff. Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee dissented from the view. He thought that the facts were such that it might be a reasonable view that the Defendant had by virtue of the statute of limitation, acquired a right which entitled him to claim to hold the land as a tenant of the Plaintiff, and so entitled him to resist the claim for khas possession.

It was observed: "The law as to encroachments is well settled, while a tenant is bound to treat that which is an encroachment, as held by him under his landlord, the landlord is not bound to treat the land on which his tenant encroaches as held under a tenancy. In appropriate circumstances, a landlord can recover against his tenant the land on which the tenant has encroached. There is a limit to that right, for if the tenant has been in possession of the land, for what for brevity may be called the statutory period, and the landlord repudiates the encroachment, it becomes a question whether or not the tenant has gained an interest that would be a bar to his landlord's claim for possession."

The Defendant was in possession of the land in question for a period of 12 years and upwards. The Defendant asserted that he acquired by adverse possession a tenancy right in the property.

Held—That under Art. 144, Sch. I of the Limitation Act there might be adverse possession not only of immovable property but of any interest therein; that in the circumstances of the case there might be an adverse possession of the limited interest which the Defendant claimed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 149 sub-sec. (3), 153—Appeal.

The appeal arose out of a suit which was described as one under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Held—That sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was introduced for the purpose of protecting a tenant against the harassment of litigation consequent on rival claims of title to the reversion on the tenant's interest. The section affords a very simple and expeditious machinery.

Sub-sec. (3) of sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates a suit which culminates not in a decree but in an order of a limited kind, an order restraining payment out of the money. Hence it is an order not finally decisive of the substantial rights of the parties, but providing a machinery for the purpose of carrying out the scheme whereby it is sought to relieve a tenant from harassment.

Seemle—An appeal did not lie under sec. 153 against an order under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3).

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and IMAM, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 645 OF 1911. RANI KESHOBATI, Appellant v. MOHAN CHAND MONDAL, Respondent. Heard, 5th March. Judgment, 27th March 1912.

Ghatwali tenure—Receiver, appointment of—Attachment, validity of.

The appeal was against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dumka allowing an attachment of the estate of the judgment debtor and appointing a Receiver.

By a compromise between the parties in Appeal from Original Decree No. 467 of 1907 it was decreed that the decretal amount was to be paid to the decree-holder in three instalments and failure to pay two consecutive instalments was to entitle the Plaintiff decree holder to realise the entire amount at the time of such default by executing the entire decree, it being further stated in the petition of compromise that the decretal amount was realisable from the estate of the late Raja Udit Narayan Sing (the deceased husband of the judgment-debtor) as well as from the Defendant judgment-debtor personally.

There being default in the payment of two consecutive instalments the decree-holder applied for execution of his entire decree and prayed for realisation of the decretal amount by the appointment of a Receiver for 13 taluks mentioned in the Schedule to the application. The 13 taluks were decreed ghatwali in another suit. The whole of the judgment-debtor's estate with some exceptions was attached and the Deputy Commissioner was appointed Receiver, the Court issuing directions to the Mustagirs and raiyats not to pay rents to anybody other than the Deputy Commissioner or his duly constituted agents. The judgment-debtor was forbidden to make any collection during the continuance of the attachment.

Held—That the appointment of a Receiver to receive the rents and profits was valid. The order for attachment of the estate might be erroneous but as the practical effect of the appointment of the Receiver was merely to ensure that the rents and profits were properly dealt with, the order was not interfered with.

Mortgages, successive—Subsequent mortgage effected to pay off first mortgage—Charge, keeping alive of, as against intermediate mortgagee—Suits by intermediate mortgagees, last mortgagee not setting up prior charge kept alive though made party, not made party in others—Suit by last mortgagee more than 12 years after due date of prior charge—Subrogation—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13, Expl. II—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 132—Mortgage-suit—Puisne mortgagee if necessary party—Notice—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 85.

A zarpeshgi deed executed in 1874 in favour of one G provided inter alia for payment by G to the executants of a zarpeshgi rent of Rs. 500 odd every year. The principal amount was made payable in September 1887. In February 1888 Rs. 12,000 was borrowed by the mortgagor from A and in accordance with the agreement between them was applied in paying the zarpeshgi debt and the zarpeshgi deed upon such payment was taken back and handed over to A in whose favour a simple mortgage was executed to secure the loan of Rs. 12,000, given by her :

Held—That so far as it operated as a lease, the zarpeshgi deed came to an end but the charge created by the zarpeshgi was kept alive for the benefit of A.

DINOBUNDHU SHAW CHOWDHRY v. JOGMAYA DASI (4) referred to.

That in suits for sale instituted after the date of A's mortgage of 1888 by persons who had obtained mortgages between the dates of the zarpeshgi of G and the simple mortgage of A, A, as puisne mortgagee, was a necessary party under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Where in such suits A was made a party but did not set up her prior title under the zarpeshgi of 1874 and some of the properties covered by the zarpeshgi were sold :

Held—That A's right to proceed against the said properties by a suit for sale on the basis of the zarpeshgi deed was barred by Expl. II of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

In one such suit instituted by M within 12 years of the due date of payment under the zarpeshgi of 1874, A not having been joined as a party, the sales held did not affect or take away A's right as puisne mortgagee under the mortgage of 1888 or her claim of priority under the zarpeshgi of 1874. But A's claim to priority under the zarpeshgi of 1874 became barred in 1900 when a suit was first instituted by A's assignee to enforce A's mortgage, and the only decree Plaintiff in this suit would get as against the purchasers in M's suit was to be allowed to redeem the mortgage of M on payment to the purchaser of the amount of principal and interest in respect of which the property purchased by him was sold in M's suit.

In a mortgage suit a puisne mortgagee of whose interest in the mortgaged property, the Plaintiffs has notice is a necessary party under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a sale of the property had in such a suit does not take away the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem.

SYED MAHOMED IBRAHIM HOSSEIN KHAN v. AMBIKA PERSHAD SINGH.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 3rd March 1905, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 9th July 1902.

The said suit was a suit for sale on a simple mortgage, dated 7th January 1888. The Plaintiffs were the assignees of the mortgage. The chief Defendants were purchasers of portions of the mortgaged property under decrees obtained on prior mortgages. The Plaintiffs claimed that under the circumstances of the case they were entitled to priority over these Defendants. The main questions for determination on the present appeal were :— (1) whether the suit was barred by res judicata ; and (2) whether by discharging a prior encumbrance the subsequent mortgagee kept alive the discharged mortgage for his benefit.

The present appeal was preferred by the Plaintiffs.

The lands comprised in the mortgage upon which the suit was based, consisted of eight parcels of land, of which it is only necessary to name mouzah Ghowsipur and mouzah Fatehpur.

In 1874 all eight parcels were hypothecated by the parents of Kishan Kumar Singh to Girwar Singh under a zarpeshgi lease. The period of the lease was 12 years and such further period as the zarpeshgi money remained unpaid. On the 15th December 1879 the said Kishan Kumar Singh, hereinafter referred to as the said mortgagor, his father having died, mortgaged part of mouzah Ghowsipur for Rs. 700 to a person represented in the suit by Defendant No. 7. On the 31st December 1880, and on the 20th December 1883, the mortgagor and his mother jointly mortgaged part of mouzah Ghowsipur for the respective sums of Rs. 3,200 and Rs. 2,000 to two persons represented in this suit by Defendants Nos. 8 to 13. On the 7th January 1888, the mortgagor mortgaged part of mouzah Fatehpur for Rs. 2,500 to the fifth Defendant in this suit. Finally, on the 17th February 1888, the mortgagor borrowed Rs. 12,000 from Mussammat Alfian, and to secure the loan executed the mortgage now in suit, comprising the whole of the said mortgage premises. The mortgage recited that the said mortgagor had "repaid the zarpeshgi of Girwar Singh and had "obtained release of the said mouzah from the zarpeshgi charge." The mortgage contained a covenant to repay in two years the principal sum thereby secured, together with interest at 15 per cent. Nothing was paid by the said mortgagor on account of principal and interest under this mortgage, and at the time of the institution of the present suit Rs. 35,100 was claimed to be due on the footing thereof. It appears that possession of the said mortgage premises remained with Girwar Singh and his heirs until July 1888, when their claim was satisfied and the deed was returned to the said mortgagor, who thereupon resumed possession of the land.

In 1888 a suit was brought by the fifth Defendant on the mortgage of the 7th January 1888 against the mortgagor, and a decree for sale was passed under which the property comprised therein or part thereof was brought to sale and purchased by Lalji Mahto. But Mussammat Alfian was not made a Defendant to that suit. In 1890 a suit was brought by the seventh Defendant on the mortgage of 1879 against the mortgagor and the holders of the subsequent mortgages, including the heirs of the said Mussammat

SYED MAHOMED IBRAHIM HOSSEIN KHAN v. AMBIKA PERSHAD SINGH.

Alfan, who had died. The then Plaintiff obtained a decree under which the land was sold and ultimately passed into the hands of Jhumok Mahto for Rs. 3,400. On the 15th July 1890, suits were brought on the mortgages of 1880 and 1883 respectively, by the Defendants Nos. 8-13, against the mortgagor and the other encumbrances, including the heirs of Mussammat Alfán. Mortgage decrees were passed in the usual form under which the property was brought to sale and purchased by the decree-holders. The properties sold and placed in the possession of the purchasers under the decrees mentioned in this paragraph were Nos. 364 and 362 Ghowspur and No. 360 Fatehpur.

On the 16th June 1891, pending the execution of the decrees in the three last-mentioned suits, the mortgage now in suit was assigned by the heirs of Mussammat Alfán above-mentioned to the present Appellants, who, on the 22nd September 1900, instituted the present suit in the Court of the said Subordinate Judge. The Defendants were, first, the sister-in-law of the mortgagor who was said to represent his estate, he having died; Defendants Nos. 2-4 were the heirs of Mussammat Alfán; Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were respectively the decree-holder and the purchaser under the decree in the suit on the mortgage of 7th January 1888; Defendants Nos. 7 and 15 were respectively the decree-holder and purchaser under the decree in the suit on the mortgage of 15th December 1879; Defendants Nos. 8-13 were the decree-holders and purchasers under the decrees in the two suits on the mortgages of 31st December 1880 and 20th December 1883, respectively.

The Plaintiffs alleged that by virtue of the sarpeshgi deed of 20th November 1874 which was paid off out of moneys advanced by Mussammat Alfán they were entitled to priority over the other mortgage and the latter were bound to redeem them. They also alleged that summons had been served on Mussammat Alfán in the suits in which her name appeared as a Defendant and that therefore her rights were unaffected by the decrees in those suits and by the sales held therein; they accordingly prayed for the usual mortgage-decree against all the Defendants.

Written statements of defence were filed by certain of the Defendants Nos. 5-15 who pleaded that the decrees and Court sales above-mentioned were conclusive against the Plaintiffs' assignors and also against the Plaintiffs, whose purchase was subject to the ultimate result of these suits, and that the titles acquired thereunder were absolute and could not now be impeached. They denied the Plaintiffs' alleged right of priority based on the sarpeshgi lease, on the grounds, among others, that there was in 1888 no intention to keep it alive for the benefit of the Plaintiffs' assignors, that it did not amount to a mortgage or charge, that the creditor-lessee thereunder had no right to sue for foreclosure or sale, and that if he had such right it had been lost. They further relied on the rule of res judicata.

On the 9th July 1902, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He held that the first Defendant was not the representative of the mortgagor, but since she was in possession of such of the properties as had not been sold she represented his family to all intents and purposes that he was not satisfied that notice of the summons in the suits referred to had been served on the heirs of Mussammat Alfán, and held that the decision in those suits did not operate as a bar to the present suit. With regard to the several mortgage bonds and the sarpeshgi lease, the Subordinate Judge found that they had all been executed for good consideration; that it was the clear intention of the parties that the incumbrance created by the sarpeshgi deed should subsist to Mussammat Alfian and be kept alive for her benefit. That the Plaintiffs were entitled to no interest on the footing that the sarpeshgi lease had been kept alive, and that the contesting Defendants were respectively entitled to redeem the properties purchased under the decrees on the payment of one-third of the sarpeshgi money in respect of each. In the result, he passed a decree for the sale of the said mortgage premises making provision for the right of redemption which those Defendants were thus held to possess.

Against this decree appeals and a memorandum of objections were preferred to the High Court.

They were heard by Rampini and Mitra, JJ. The learned Judges found inter alia that the notice of summons had been duly served upon the Plaintiffs' assignors in the previous suits. On the remaining points their Lordships in that view and for other reasons stated in their judgment varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge in certain particulars.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Appellants.—The Appellants were entitled to the benefit of the charge under the sarpeshgi deed, dated the 20th November 1874. Mussammat Alfian lent money to Kishan Kumar Singh to pay off the sarpeshgi debt and it was paid off. She must be presumed to have intended to do so for her benefit. There is also evidence of her intention. The doctrine of Toulmin v. Sleere (3) does not apply to the circumstances of this case. Reliance was placed on Gokuldoss v. Rambux Srochand (2), Adams v. Angell (5), Thorne v. Cann (6), Chetwynd v. Allen (7), Dinobundhu Shaw v. Jogmaya Dasi (4).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Browne for the Respondents.—With reference to the mortgage, dated the 20th November 1874, the assignor could not convey more than what she possessed. She had only usufructuary mortgage rights, i.e., a right to remain in possession until the debt was discharged. Secs. 59, 62, and 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. But he has no right to bring it to sale. Further no mortgage subsequent to the second can affect our rights. No transaction between the mortgagor and a third person can confer higher rights on the third person than those possessed by the mortgagor. The view taken by this Board in a similar case is to be found in Mohesh Lal v. Mohunt Bawan Das (1). The claim is now barred by res judicata. There was express finding of the Court in the previous suits that the summons was served on the representatives of Mussammat Alfian and the decree passed ex parte is binding unless and until it is set aside. It is impossible to go into the question as to whether the summons was in fact served or not after the lapse of so many years. The ex parte decree is conclusive and the remedy is not by another suit but by recognised processes of law in the same suit, namely, (1) proceeding under § 108, C. P. C., (2) review of judgment, (3) by appeal. Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (8), Malkarjun y. Narhari (9), Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (10). Srinivasa Naickan* (11), Imam Ali v. Baijnath (12).

Sir E. Richards in reply.—Sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, clearly provides for a mixed simple and usufructuary mortgage. When a usufructuary mortgage provides for a charge there can be a sale. Kashi Ram v. Sardar Singh (13), Jafar Husen v. Ranjit Singh (14), Musahib Yaman Khan v. Inayatullah (15), Parbati Charan v. Gobinda Chandra (16). Art. 143 does not apply. Limitation can only apply to documents we sue on. Here sarpeshgi was paid off in 1888 and the suit was instituted in 1900. We are seeking to enforce the payment of Rs. 12,000, and the suit is within time from due date under Art. 132. Dinobundhu v. Jogmaya (4), Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (17), *Bolton v. Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 3rd of March 1905, which varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna of the 9th of July 1902.

The suit was brought on the 22nd of September 1900, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on a simple mortgage of the 17th of February 1888, to recover Rs. 12,000 as principal, Rs. 23,150 as interest to the date of suit, and future interest until realization. That mortgage, as will later appear, was executed in favour of Mussammat Alfian, whose heirs assigned it to the Plaintiffs on the 16th of June 1891. The Plaintiffs also claimed to have it declared that the properties covered by the mortgage of the 17th of February 1888, and by a sarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874, were liable for the entire decretal amount; that certain of the Defendants should be directed to pay the decretal amount to the Plaintiffs within a time to be fixed by the Court, and that in default of payment the decretal amount should be realized by the sale by auction of the mortgaged properties included in the mortgage of the 17th of February 1888, and the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874. Various issues were raised by the Defendants, and much more or less conflicting evidence was recorded, but the facts so far as they are material in the view taken by their Lordships may be briefly stated.

On the 20th of November 1874, Nanda Kumar Singh on his own behalf, and as the husband and agent of his wife, Mussammat Lalpearai Dasi, executed a sarpeshgi deed in favour of Girwar Singh for the sum of Rs. 12,000, which was acknowledged to have been received from Girwar Singh, and by that deed mortgaged and hypothecated as security for the zarpeshgi Rs. 12,000 certain properties which included the entire 16 annas of the milkiat and the malguzari right of Mouzah Ghowsipur-Dopahra No. 364, 2 annas out of 16 annas of Mouzah Ghowsipur-Dopahra No. 362, and 5 annas 4 pies out of 16 annas of Mouzah Fatehpur-Lawaech. With the properties which are named above this appeal is alone concerned. By that deed Girwar Singh was entitled to hold possession of the properties hypothecated until the amount of the zarpeshgi Rs. 12,000 was repaid to him, and it was by the deed amongst other things agreed that Girwar Singh should pay certain expenses, and the Government revenue, should keep out of the usufruct Rs. 900 every year as interest on the zarpeshgi Rs. 12,000, and should pay Rs. 501, 13 annas, 6 pies, on account of the rent every year by regular instalments to Nanda Kumar Singh and Lalpeari Dasi, and that all the increase in the produce in consequence of proper cultivation should be enjoyed and appropriated by Girwar Singh. It was also by the deed agreed that when Nanda Kumar Singh and Lalpeari Dasi should repay to the ticadar, Girwar Singh, the zarpeshgi Rs. 12,000 in one lump sum at the end of Jeth 1294 Fasli (September 1887) the ticca transaction should be cancelled and Nanda Kumar Singh and Lalpeari Dasi should bring the leased properties into their direct possession, but in the case of the non-payment of the zarpeshgi Rs. 12,000 at the end of Jeth 1294 Fasli, the ticca transaction should stand good with all its conditions until the payment of the zarpeshgi. Girwar Singh was put in possession under the deed.

On the 15th of December 1879, Nanda Kumar Singh being then dead, his son and heir Kishan Kumar Singh executed in favour of Mussammat Jagattarini Debi a simple mortgage of the 2 annas share in No. 362 Ghowsipur-Dopahra. On the 3rd May 1890 Dwarkanath Roy, who was the son and heir of Mussammat Jagattarini, then dead, brought a suit for sale on the mortgage of the 15th of December 1879, and made the mortgagor and the puisne mortgagees, including the heirs of Mussammat Alfani, who was then dead, Defendants to his suit. Their Lordships, concurring with the High Court, find as a fact that the summonses and notices in that suit were duly served upon the heirs of Mussammat Alfani. The heirs of Mussammat Alfani did not appear, and did not defend that suit. On the 20th of November 1890, Dwarkanath Roy obtained in his suit a decree for sale, and under that decree the two annas share in No. 362 Ghowsipur-Dopahra was sold.

On the 31st of December 1880, Kishan Kumar Singh and his mother Lalpeari Dasi executed a simple mortgage in favour of Raghunath Singh and Ganpat Singh of, amongst other properties, the 2 annas share in No. 362 Ghowsipur-Dopahra and the 16 annas share in No. 364 Ghowsipur-Dopahra. On the 20th December 1883, Kishan Kumar Singh and Lalpeari Dasi executed in favour of Raghunath Singh and Jagarnath Singh a simple mortgage of, amongst other properties, the 2 annas share in No. 362 Ghowsipur-Dopahra and the 16 annas share in No. 364 Ghowsipur-Dopahra. On the 15th July 1890, two suits for sale were brought, one on the mortgage of the 31st of December 1880 and the other on the mortgage of the 20th of December 1883. Their Lordships, concurring with the High Court, find as a fact that the heirs of Mussammat Alfian were duly made Defendants to these suits. The heirs of Mussammat Alfian did not defend either of these suits. Decrees for sale were made in these suits.

On the 7th of January 1888, Kishan Kumar Singh executed in favour of Gajadhar Mahto a simple mortgage of the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech. On the 6th September 1888, Gajadhar Mahto brought a suit for sale on his mortgage of the 7th of January 1888 against Kishan Kumar Singh, but did not make Mussammat Alfian a Defendant. Gajadhar Mahto obtained a decree for sale; under that decree the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech was sold on the 16th December 1889 to Lalji Mahto. The sale was confirmed on the 22nd of March 1890, and shortly afterwards Lalji Mahto was put in possession. Lalji Mahto died since this suit was brought.

In February 1888 Kishan Kumar Singh borrowed Rs. 12,000 at interest of Re. 1 and 4 annas per mensem from Mussammat Alfian. Their Lordships find as a fact that the Rs. 12,000 was borrowed by Kishan Kumar Singh and was lent by Mussammat Alfian for the express purpose of paying off the zarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000 as security for which the property mentioned in the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th November 1874 was mortgaged and hypothecated by that deed. In consideration of that loan of Rs. 12,000 Kishan Kumar Singh executed on the 17th of February 1888 in favour of Mussammat Alfian a simple mortgage of the properties included in the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874. The principal sum of Rs. 12,000 was under that mortgage repayable in two years. The money lent by Mussammat Alfian was in accordance with the agreement between her and Kishan Kumar Singh applied in discharging the zarpeshgi debt of Rs. 1,2000, and on the 15th of July 1888 the then holders of the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th November 1874 quitted possession and gave up the zarpeshgi deed, which was delivered to Mussammat Alfian. Mussammat Alfian died on the 10th of December 1889, and on the 16th of June 1891 her heirs assigned the mortgage of the 17th of February 1888 to the Plaintiffs, who are the Appellants here. On that assignment such rights as Mussammat Alfian had acquired and were then existing passed to the Plaintiffs.

On the 22nd of September 1900, the Plaintiffs in whom was then vested Mussammat Alfian's right as mortgagee under the mortgage of the 17th of February 1888 filed their plaint in this suit, making then, or by subsequent amendment of their plaint, the representatives of Kishan Kumar Singh, who was then dead, and others who were interested in the mortgage properties or in some of them, Defendants. The titles of the Defendants, other than the representatives of Kishan Kumar Singh, arose under the mortgages which were made subsequently to the 20th of November 1874 and prior to the 17th of February 1888.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit for sale with costs, giving the Defendant No. 1, a right to redeem the mortgage so far as it affected the properties other than No. 362 Ghowsapur-Dopahra, No. 364 Ghowsapur-Dopahra, and Fatehpur-Lawaech by payment within 90 days of the decretal amount with costs. The Defendants Nos. 8 to 13 were given a right to redeem the mortgage, so far as it affected No. 364 Ghowsapur-Dopahra, by payment within 90 days of Rs. 4,000 with proportionate costs; the Defendant No. 15 was given a right to redeem the mortgage, so far as it affected No. 362 Ghowspur-Dopahra, on payment of Rs. 4,000 with proportionate costs; and any of the Defendants Nos. 5, 6, and 14 were given a right to redeem the mortgage, so far as it affected Fatehpur-Lawaech, on payment within 90 days of Rs. 4,000 with proportionate costs. The High Court on appeal dismissed the suit with costs so far as it applied to Nos. 364 and 362 Ghowspur-Dopahra and Fatehpur-Lawaech.

The High Court held that the Plaintiffs' suit, so far as it applied to No. 364 Ghowspur-Dopahra and No. 362 Ghowspur-Dopahra, was barred by sec. 13, Expl. II of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of the heirs of Mussammat Alfian not having set up in the suits of the 3rd of May 1890 and 15th of July 1890, "their title as prior mortgagees on the basis of the sarpeshgi of 1874, the ground of relief in the present action." Mussammat Alfian's mortgage of the 17th of February 1888 was not prior to the mortgages of the 15th of December 1879, the 30th of December 1880, and the 20th of December 1883, but the Plaintiffs, Appellants here, claimed priority as the Rs. 12,000 which Mussammat Alfian had lent in 1874 were applied to discharge the debt secured by the sarpeshgi deed of 1874. The heirs of Mussammat Alfian were persons having an interest in the properties comprised in the mortgages of the 15th of December 1879, the 31st of December 1880, and the 20th of December 1883, and consequently were under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, necessary parties to the suits for sale on those mortgages and were made Defendants to those suits and not having set up in those suits such rights as they had under the mortgage of the 17th of February 1888 and the sarpeshgi deed of 1874, sec. 13, Expl. II of the Code of the Civil Procedure applied and the claims of the Plaintiffs-Appellants as against No. 364 Ghowspur-Dopahra, and No. 362 Ghowspur-Dopahra, and those of the Defendants who are alone concerned with those mouzahs are barred. The High Court rightly dismissed the suit with costs so far as it related to No. 364 Ghowspur-Dopahra and No. 362 Ghowspur-Dopahra.

It remains to be considered whether the Plaintiffs had, and could have enforced in this suit, any and what rights against the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech, and against Gajadhur Mahto and Lalji Mahto, Defendants Nos. 5 and 6, or either of them. It is not quite obvious on what grounds the High Court dismissed the suit so far as it related to the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech, and to the Defendants Gajadhur Mahto and Lalji Mahto.

Gajadhur Mahto did not make Mussammat Alfian a Defendant to the suit for sale which he brought on the 6th of September 1888 on his mortgage of the 7th of January 1888. That suit was brought to obtain a decree for sale of the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech which had been mortgaged on the 7th of January 1888 to Gajadhur Mahto, and subsequently on the 17th of February 1888 to Mussammat Alfian, and had been mortgaged and hypothecated to Girwar Singh by the deed of the 20th of November 1874 as security for the sarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000. Under the deed of the 20th November 1874 the Rs. 12,000 was not repayable to Girwar Singh until Jeth 1294 Fasli (September 1887); and consequently the 12 years allowed by Art. 132 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, within which a suit to enforce payment of that debt was allowed, had not expired when

Girwar Singh brought his suit. It has been contended that as Mussammat Alfian when she lent her Rs. 12,000 to Kishan Kumar Singh in February 1888 to pay off the sarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000 did not obtain a formal assignment in writing of the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th November 1874, and as the sarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000 was discharged by payment to the representatives of Girwar Singh on the 15th of July 1888, and they quitted possession, Mussammat Alfian did not in equity obtain the benefit of the charge which Girwar Singh had under the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874. It is true that so far as the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874 operated as a lease of the mortgaged properties, it came to an end on the payment of the sarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000 to the representatives of Girwar Singh on the 15th July 1888, but their Lordships have found as a fact that the Rs. 12,000 were lent by Mussammat Alfian and were borrowed by Kishan Kumar Singh for the express purpose of paying off the sarpeshgi debt of Rs. 12,000 which was secured by the deed of the 20th of November 1874; that the Rs. 12,000 lent by Mussammat Alfian were in accordance with the agreement between Mussammat Alfian and Kishan Kumar Singh applied in paying off the sarpeshgi debt; that on payment of that debt the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th November 1874 was handed over to Mussammat Alfian; and that Mussammat Alfian when she lent her Rs. 12,000 intended to keep alive for her benefit and protection the charge which had been created by the sarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874. It has been held by this Board, in Mohesh Lal v. Mohunt Bawan Das (1), that whether a mortgage paid off is extinguished or kept alive depends upon the intention of the parties. It has also been held by this Board in Gokuldoss v. Rambux Seochand (2), that the ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interests. In the last-mentioned case it was held by this Board that the purchaser of an equity of redemption in immoveable property situated in India, who, having notice of a second mortgage, paid off a first mortgage upon the property without an assignment of the first mortgage to him must be assumed, according to the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, to have intended to keep the first mortgage alive, and consequently was entitled to stand in the place of the first mortgagee and to retain possession against the second mortgagee until repayment. In that case this Board was pressed to apply the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (3), but this Board observed that:—

"In India the art of conveyancing has been and is of a very simple character. Their Lordships cannot find that a formal transfer of a mortgage is ever made, or an intention to keep it alive ever formally expressed. To apply to such a practice the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (3) seems to them likely, not to promote justice and equity, but to lead to confusion, to multiplication of documents, to useless technicalities, to expense, and to litigation."

And their Lordships in that case held that the obvious question to ask in the interests of justice, equity, and good conscience, is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? What this Board said in 1884 as to the art of conveyancing in India, and the practice in such cases, is true as to the art of conveyancing and the practice in such cases at the present day. The law on these points applied in the judgments of this Board in Mohesh Lal v. Mohunt Bawan Das (1) and Gokuldoss v. Rambux Seochand (2) was subsequently applied by this Board in Dinobunahu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasi (4). Applying the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience their Lordships in this appeal hold that the charge created by the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874 was kept alive for the benefit of Mussammat Alfian. Nothing to bar a claim in respect of that charge, so far as the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech was concerned, had occurred when Gajadthur Mahto brought his suit on the 6th of September 1888.

As their Lordships have said, Gajadthur Mahto did not make Mussammat Alfian a Defendant to his suit of the 6th of September 1888. Under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, Mussammat Alfian was a necessary party to that suit. It is not alleged that Gajadthur Mahto when he brought his suit had not notice that Mussammat Alfian was a person having an interest in the property comprised in the mortgage upon which he was suing. If Gajadthur Mahto had taken the ordinary precaution of inspecting the register of the district in which Fatehpur-Lawaech is situate, before he took his mortgage of the 7th of January 1888, he would have found that the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech had been charged by the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874. It is to be presumed that Gajadthur Mahto took the ordinary precautions before parting with his money which a prudent intending mortgagee would take. If Gajadthur Mahto had before bringing his suit of the 16th of September 1888, and in order to ascertain who would be under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the necessary parties to his suit, taken the ordinary precaution of searching that register, he would also have found that the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech was included in Mussammat Alfian's mortgage of the 17th February 1888. It has been contended that sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, did not apply to the suit which Gajadthur Mahto brought, the contention being that that section does not apply to a suit for sale of an equity of redemption and that a puisne mortgagee is not a person "having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage" of a first or any prior mortgagee who brings a suit for sale on his prior mortgage. That contention, if correct, would, as it appears to their Lordships, lead to the conclusion that neither a prior nor a subsequent mortgagee need be made a Defendant to a suit for sale by a mortgagee of the specific lands included in his mortgage. The fact is that in suits for sale in India to which other mortgagees are not made parties, what a puisne mortgagee seeks to sell by means of a decree for sale, is not the equity of redemption so described, but the actual property, lands or houses, mortgaged. It is not obvious why a puisne mortgagee who desires to sell a mere equity of redemption, and not the actual property, lands or houses, described in his mortgage as the property mortgaged to him, should not dispose of his interest by private contract by an assignment of his mortgage to a purchaser, instead of by bringing a suit for sale of the property, land or houses, mortgaged, unless he hopes by concealing what his real interests are to obtain a larger price from an unwary purchaser at an auction sale under a decree for sale, than he could otherwise expect to obtain.

Gajadhur Mahto, in his suit for sale, sought for and obtained a decree for sale of the specific 5 annas 4 pies share in Mouzah Fatehpur-Lawaech which had been mortgaged by the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874, and Mussammat Alfian's mortgage of the 17th of February 1888, and under his decree for sale that 5 annas 4 pies share was sold, and it was sold free of all charges and incumbrances so far as the decree or any documents relating to the decree would show. Had sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, been complied with by making Mussammat Alfian a party to the suit, the decree for sale in Gajadhur Mahto's suit would have dealt with the rights and claims of Mussammat Alfian in relation to the charge under the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874, and her mortgage of the 17th of February 1888, if put forward by her in the suit, and Gajadhur Mahto would have been allowed to redeem the charge of 1874 by payment of Rs. 12,000, and Mussammat Alfian would in her turn have been allowed to redeem Gajadhur Mahto's mortgage. If Mussammat Alfian had been made a Defendant to Gajadhur Mahto's suit and had neglected to put forward her claims, those claims would have been barred under sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In either event all intending purchasers at a sale under the decree would have known what rights were to be sold, and in either event the necessity for the bringing of this present suit, so far as the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech is concerned, would not have arisen.

As Mussammat Alfian was not made a Defendant to Gajadhur Mahto's suit, her rights were not affected by the decree in that suit, and sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not bar this suit of the Plaintiff so far as the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech, and the Defendants Gajadhur Mahto, and Lalji Mahto were concerned. But as the Rs. 12,000 were under the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874, repayable in Jeth 1294 Fasli (September 1887), and this suit was not brought until the 22nd of September 1900, the claim of the Plaintiffs to priority is barred by Art. 132 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and all that they are entitled to so far as the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech is concerned is a decree entitling them to redeem the mortgage of the 7th of January 1888, on payment to the legal representatives of Lalji Mahto of the amount of the principal and interest in respect of which the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech was sold to him under the decree for sale in Gajadhur Mahto's suit of the 6th of September 1888.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court so far as it operated as a dismissal of the Plaintiffs' suit for sale of the 5 annas and 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech, and dismissed with costs in the High Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiffs' suit as against Gajadhur Mahto and Lalji Mahto, should be varied by decreeing that the Plaintiffs, Appellants here, by payment to the legal representatives of Lalji Mahto, or into the High Court to their credit, within 90 days from the filing of His Majesty's order in the High Court, of the amount of principal and interest in respect of which the 5 annas 4 pies share in Fatehpur-Lawaech was sold to Lalji Mahto under the decree of Gajadhur

JURISDICTION.

No. 39 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. } KSHITISH CHANDRA
WOODROFFE, J. } ACHARYA CHOUDHURI
1912, v.
14, February. } OSMOND BEEBY.

Administrator pendente lite—Passing of his accounts by testamentary Court and discharge, whether a bar to a suit for accounts—Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), Or. XIV, r. 6—Parties asking Court to decide whether plaint discloses cause of action—Allegations in plaint only to be considered.

The mere fact that an administrator pendente lite has been discharged from further acting as such and that his accounts have been passed in the testamentary jurisdiction does not operate as a discharge so as to constitute a bar to a suit for accounts brought in the general jurisdiction.

The Court cannot, where there is no agreement as is indicated in Or. XIV, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, go outside the allegations in the plaint in order to decide an issue as to whether the plaint discloses a cause of action.

Shortly stated the facts of the case are as follows:—In July 1901, the Defendant was appointed administrator pendente lite in the goods of one Dakshina Mohan Roy. The suit had prior thereto been set down as a contentious cause and to which one of the Plaintiffs, viz, Sreemuty Sindhubala Debi as the sole widow and heiress of Dakshina Mohan Roy was a party. On the termination of the probate proceedings and in August 1905 the Plaintiff, Sreemuty Sindhubala Debi, released her interest in the estate in favour of the other Plaintiff, Kshitish Chandra Acharya Choudhuri. The Defendant filed several sets of accounts in the said testamentary proceedings at different times between July 1901 and December 1903. On 8th December 1903, it was ordered by the said testamentary Court that the Defendant be discharged from further acting as such administrator upon passing his accounts in the testamentary Court. On the 9th January 1904, the Defendant's accounts were passed by the testamentary Court—and thereafter the Defendant who was a practising Advocate of the Calcutta High Court retired and went over to England. On 6th December 1906, this suit was instituted by the two Plaintiffs against the Defendant in the Original Side of the

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHOUDHURI v. OSMOND BEEBY.

High Court and in its general jurisdiction for an investigation of the accounts of the Defendant so filed and passed as aforesaid on the ground that certain charges made by the Defendant in those accounts were improper charges. The Defendant in his written statement took the point that the plaint disclosed no cause of action inasmuch as the accounts had already been passed. Thereupon the case was set down for settlement of issues and was dismissed by Harington, J., on the ground that the Court would not allow accounts passed in the presence of parties to be re-opened in the absence of omission, fraud or mistake. The Plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Mr. B. K. Lahiri) for the Appellants.—The administrator pendente lite is a creature of statute. His rights and liabilities are to be ascertained from the provisions of the Probate and the Administration Act (Vide secs. 34, 98 and 146). There is no provision in the Probate and Administration Act entitling the testamentary Court to call for a series of accounts from him. [See Mohesh Chandra v. Biswa Nath (1)]. Nor is what goes by the name of "passing of accounts" of executors or administrators by the probate Courts sanctioned by the Rules of the High Court (Vide rr. 19 and 725 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders). The passing of such accounts by the testamentary Court is without jurisdiction and cannot be binding on the parties. In the next place, the administrator pendente lite is an officer of the Court and occupies a fiduciary position and as such liable to account. (Secs. 34 and 142 of the Probate and Administration Act. See also Brinklow v. Singleton (2). Thirdly, his liability to account before the proper tribunal is not determined either by the termination of the proceedings in which he had been appointed or by the order of his discharge. Compare the analogous decisions as to Receivers. Vide Seagram v. Tuck (3), Gent-Davis v. Harris (4) and Re Edwards (5). Lastly, it cannot be contended that the certificate of the Judge at foot of the account is either an order or a decree which ought to have been or can be the subject of appeal. Re Browne (6). For the purposes of the present argument, the allegations in the plaint must be accepted to be true. See Daniel's Ch. Pr., p. 455.

Mr. W. H. Knight (with him Mr. S. K. Mullick) for the Respondent.—There is no agreement of parties here as is contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure, Or. XIV, r. 6. This suit is not maintainable until and unless the order discharging the Defendant is set aside. It can only be set aside for fraud and there is no such allegation in this case. This is really a claim for money had and received and this suit is barred by limitation. I rely on the practice of the Court to have a series of accounts passed. There is no analogy between the administrator and the executor of ecclesiastical Courts and the administrator pendente lite under sec. 34 of the Probate and the Administration Act. A Court of Chancery will not interfere unless fraud is shown in the ecclesiastical side. See Fowler v. Wyatt (7), Patch v. Ward (8), Flower v. Lloyd (9).

KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHOUDHURI v. OSMOND BEEBY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is one brought against Mr. Osmond Beeby, at one time the administrator pendente lite of the estate of one Dakshina Mohan Roy. The purpose of the suit is to recover from him five sums mentioned in the plaint with interest, on the ground that they have been wrongfully retained by him and that the retainer is wrongful inasmuch as it is, according to the Plaintiffs, in excess of the remuneration to which he was entitled under the order appointing him administrator pendente lite.

The facts on which the Plaintiffs base their claim are set out clearly and minutely in the plaint. A written statement has been filed which puts in issue these facts and suggests a complexion of the case, that would (it is contended), if established, constitute an answer to this claim. Now it so happens that the Defendant, who was practising here as an advocate at the time that he was appointed administrator pendente lite, has since retired from India and now lives in England. In view of this fact the attorneys on both sides seem to have come to an agreement—a very proper agreement in view of the circumstances of the case—that the opinion of the Court should be sought, as to whether the plaint was one on which a decree could be passed in favour of the Plaintiffs, having regard to the circumstances either there set out or there indicated.

The case was accordingly put down as it is termed in this Court, for settlement of issues, but there was no such agreement as is contemplated in Or. XIV, r. 6, and it is therefore difficult to see how the case, as it came before the Court, could be dealt with otherwise than on the lines that there should be a consideration and determination as to whether the plaint disclosed a cause of action. It was suggested to us by Mr. Knight who pressed the case of his client, the Defendant, with some insistence, that there was a wider investigation open to the Court, but I must confess my inability to follow it, because in the absence of such an agreement as is indicated in r. 6, I do not see how the Court can properly deal with a matter of this kind except on the allegations in the plaint. This is the view apparently that commended itself to the learned counsel, a very experienced counsel who appeared for Mr. Beeby in the Court of first instance, for I find, from the Court notes of the proceedings, that Mr. Mitter “on this proceeding raises the issue whether the plaint discloses any cause of action: If that fails the other issues may be tried on the trial of the case on facts.” Then Mr. Mitter submitted that the plaint disclosed no cause of action. That I think is the only legitimate matter for our consideration on the present application. The learned Judge, Mr. Justice Harington, decided adversely to the Plaintiffs, and it is from that judgment that the present appeal has been preferred.

The position of Mr. Beeby as administrator pendente lite is not disputed. It is further the Plaintiffs' case and I do not know that it is contested that funds came into his hands as administrator pendente lite. If that be so, it is clear that he is responsible for the application of those funds. What then is the ground on which it can be said that the plaint discloses no cause of action? It is because the plaint either states or indicates that the accounts of the administrator pendente lite were passed by the Court in accordance with the procedure which is commonly adopted on the Original Side of this Court, and on the performance of that condition the preceding order discharging him, whatever that may mean, from further acting as administrator pendente lite became absolute and operative. The contention, therefore, must be that this passing of the accounts as disclosed by the plaint constitutes a complete bar to the suit. In the view that I take of the case I think it desirable that I should not enter into a general discussion of this case so as to in any way prejudge its merits or the various questions which will arise before it can be finally determined. I would, therefore, limit myself to saying that the mere fact that the administrator pendente lite may have been discharged from further acting as administrator pendente lite on passing the accounts in the testamentary jurisdiction, does not, in the circumstances of this case, operate as a discharge so as to constitute a bar to this suit which is brought in the general jurisdiction of the Court. There may be other excellent defences to this suit but with that we have nothing to do at this stage.

We must, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of Mr. Justice Harington and remand the case to the Court of first instance for a further rehearing.

We think in the circumstances the costs of this appeal and the suit must be costs in the cause.

A decree was passed against S for damages for injury done to the decree-holder by the obstruction of a water-course under circumstances in which it could not be deemed a wanton interference with another's right but only as an answer to the exaggerated claim of the decree-holder in respect of the water-course, Held—That the liability of S could not be regarded as an immoral and illegal debt and that the decree was therefore binding on his sons.

There is no substantial difference in principle between the obligation of a person to repay money borrowed and his obligation to discharge a liability created by a judgment of the Court; and it cannot be laid down that the rule of son's liability for father's debts is inapplicable to cases where the liability is created by a judicial decision.

PERIMAN DAS v. BHATTU MAHTON (9) referred to.

Semle—It cannot be broadly laid down that in a case where the liability of the father has been embodied in a decree no question can be raised as to the nature of the debt which was sought to be enforced by the decree so as to exempt sons from liability for it.

The liability of sons for their father's debt under the Mitakshara generally considered.

A judgment-debt cannot be regarded as illegal within the meaning of the texts merely because the decision of the Court shows that the act for which the judgment-debtor was held liable in damages was in contravention of the rights of the successful Plaintiff.

The son is not bound to do anything to relieve his father from the consequence of his own vicious indulgences, but a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another would be a debt of the most sacred obligation such as the son would be bound to discharge.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of March 1911 against the decree of Babu Sasi Bhusan Sen, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Gaya, dated the 11th of February 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has refused an application for execution of a decree for money. The circumstances, under which the order in question was made, have not formed the subject of controversy in this Court. On the 23rd March 1908, the Appellants before us obtained a decree for money against one Shankar Lal and various other persons as Defendants. On appeal to this Court by Shankar Lal and some of the other Defendants, the decree was confirmed on the 27th May 1910. On the 5th August following, the decree-holders made an application for execution of the decree, whereupon an order was made for issue of a writ of attachment of the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors. On the 22nd September the return of the service of the writ of attachment was filed, but it is disputed whether the return gave an accurate version of the facts, and whether the writ was, as a matter of fact, properly served. Shankar Lal, however, entered appearance and took objection to the execution on grounds which are not material for our present purpose. On the 3rd December 1910, it was reported to the Court that Shankar Lal had died on the 13th November. The decree-holders then applied to bring on the record the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. Notice of the application was served upon them, whereupon they appeared and objected that the decree could not be executed against the properties in their hands, which they had obtained by survivorship. The decree-holders answered, first, that the legal representatives of Shankar Lal as his sons were liable to satisfy the decree, as the debt was neither illegal nor immoral, and, secondly, that, as the property had been validly attached during the life-time of the deceased judgment-debtor, his right, title, and interest, at any rate, could be seized in execution by the decree-holders. The Subordinate Judge overruled both these contentions and dismissed the application for execution upon the authority of the decision in Durbar v. Khachar (1), at the same time he distinguished the cases of Erasala v. Addepally (2), Pryag Sahu v. Kashi Sahu (3) and Peary Lal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (4). The decree-holders have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been challenged on the ground that the debt was not tainted with illegality or immorality, nor with any such impropriety or infirmity as would remove it from the category of debts incurred by a Hindu father which a son is under an obligation to pay. It has been contended further that, in any view, as the attachment had been effected during the life-time of the deceased judgment-debtor, it was competent to the decree-holders to proceed at least against his right, title and interest in the hands of his sons. In answer to these contentions, it had been argued by the Respondents that the sum sought to be recovered was not a debt, as the deceased judgment-debtor was under no contractual obligation to pay it, and that, even if it could be treated as a debt, it was of a character which the sons of the deceased were under no obligation to discharge. Reference has been made by the Appellants as well as the Respondents to a number of judicial decisions, which, it has been suggested, cannot be easily reconciled. The answer to the questions raised must depend upon the texts as interpreted in the judicial decisions to which I shall presently refer.

According to the Institutes of Manu (VIII, 159), "money due by a surety, or idly promised, or lost at play, or due for spirituous liquor, or what remains unpaid of a fine and a tax or duty, the son (of the party owing it), shall not be obliged to pay." (Sacred Book of the East, Vol. XXV, p. 282.)

To the same effect is the text in the Institutes of Yajnavalkya (II, 47). "The son shall not pay the paternal (debts) contracted for wines, lust, and gambling, or due on account of the unpaid (portion) of a fine or a toll, or (on account of) an idle promise (Mandlik, p. 205.)

According to Brihaspati, if the father is no longer alive, the debt must be paid by his son; the father's debt must be paid first of all, and after that, a man's own debt; but a debt contracted by the paternal grandfather must always be paid before these two even, the father's debt on being proved, must be paid by the sons as if it were their own, the grandfather's debt must be paid by his son's sons without interest, but the sons of a grandson need not pay it at all, sons shall not be made to pay a debt incurred by their father for spirituous liquor, for losses at play, for idle gifts, for promises made under the influence of love or wrath, or for suretyship nor the balance of a fine or toll liquidated in part by their father (Brihaspati, Ch. XI, 47, 48, 49 and 51, Sacred Book of the East, Vol. XXXIII, p. 328, Jagannath Digest, 1, 5, 166, 167 and 201, Mayukha by Mandlik, pp. 112 and 113).

Again, the text of Ushanas cited in the Mitakshara, (Commentary of Yajnavalkya, Book II, Verse 47), as also in the Mayukha, p. 113) runs as follows:—"A fine or the balance of a fine, likewise a bribe or a toll, or the balance of it are not to be paid by the son, neither shall he discharge a debt which is not lawful." The original word which is rendered "lawful" is vyavaharika. There has been some divergence of opinion as to the precise import of this expression. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Durbar v. Krachar (1) treat the expression "not vyavaharika" as equivalent to "unusual" or "not sanctioned by law or custom," and they suggest that this word has crept into our text-books and judicial decisions under the guise or disguise of illegal or immoral. I am not satisfied that the interpretation adopted is quite accurate; on the other hand, I am not prepared to accept the version given by Girish Chandra Tarlankar who renders the term "vyavaharika" by "necessary for life." I find that Bohtlingh and Roth, Wilson and Monier Williams all take the expression as equivalent to "connected with or relating to an action at law or legal process, customary, usual." Mandlik (p. 113) renders it as "proper." Jogendra Nath Bhattacharyya also renders it as "proper (that is, sanctioned by law or custom)." In my opinion, the term Vyavaharika may be accurately rendered as equivalent to "lawful, usual or customary."

(1) 1, L. R. 32 Bom. 348 (1908).

Again we have the text of Gautama (Chap. XII, 41): "Money due by a surety, a commercial debt, a fee due to the parents of a bride, debts contracted for spirituous liquor or in gambling, and a fine shall not involve the sons of the debtor" (Sacred Book of the East, Vol. II, p. 244, where also an extract from the commentary of Haradatta is quoted).

The text of Vyasa quoted in the Vivada Ratnakar (p. 58) and by Jaganna'h (1, 5, 203) is substantially to the same effect: "Neither a fine nor a toll nor the balance due for either shall be necessarily paid by the son of a debtor, nor any debt which is not vyavaharika (which is rendered by Colebrooke as equivalent to "for a cause repugnant to good morals").

The text of Katyayana quoted by Jagannath is of similar import: "A debt of the paternal grandfather, which is proved or which is partly liquidated must be discharged (by the grandson) but never shall a debt contracted for immoral uses or which was contested by his father (be paid by the grandson). Bhrigu ordains that a debt devolving from the grandfather, which was proved and acknowledged by the father must be discharged by grandsons, if it were not contracted for immoral uses nor already paid by the sons" (Colebrooke Digest, Vol. I, p. 307). See also Viramitrodaya (Calcutta Ed., 1815), p. 100, pl. 2, 105, pl. 2, 106, pl. 1, 109. pl. 2, 165, pl. 2, 166, pl. 1.

If the provisions of all these texts are summarised, the result appears to be that the debts which a son is not under any obligation to pay, may be grouped as follows:—(1) Debts due for spirituous liquor, (2) debts due for lust, (3) debts due for gambling, (4) unpaid fines, (5) unpaid tolls, (6) useless gifts or promises without consideration or made under the influence of lust or wrath, (7) suretyship debts, (8) commercial debts and (9) debts that are not vyavaharika, i.e., debts that are not lawful, usual, or customary, or, if we accept the version of Colebrooke, debt for a cause repugnant to good morals. This list, it must be conceded, is comprehensive, and, as the terms used are not accurately defined, there is considerable room for divergence of opinion, as is indicated by the extracts from the commentaries quoted by Jagannath in his Digest. This divergence is faithfully reflected in the judicial decisions to which reference was made in the course of argument, and which I shall now proceed to examine.

In one of the most recent cases in this Court, Pryag Sahu v. Kashi Sahu '3), the question arose, whether the cost awarded by a Court against a defeated litigant was "danda" within the meaning of the text of Yajnavalkya "nor is he bound to pay any unpaid fine or toll or idle gifts" (Mitakshara, Ch. VI, sec. 3, p. 47) or whether it was not vyavaharika within the meaning of the text of Ushanas to which we have already referred. Mr. Justice Chatterjee answered the question in the negative, and he relied upon the text of Manu (Ch. VIII, Verse 59) which makes the unsuccessful Defendant liable, not only to satisfy the claim of the Plaintiff, but also to pay a penalty to the king. On the other hand, the decision in Ramaingear v. Secretary of State (5) supports the contrary view. There a Hindu father had brought a suit in forma pauperis as next friend of one of his infant sons to establish his adoption, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the alleged adoption had never taken place. The father was ordered to pay the Court-fees due to Government under sec. 440 of the Code of 1882. The learned Judges held that such costs could not be recovered from the sons, because the liability to pay the costs was imposed as a penalty on the father for his misconduct, namely, the institution of a suit which he must have known to be false, in other words, the liability might be regarded as in the nature of a fine, and the debt so incurred be deemed as tainted with immorality. It must be conceded that this decision rests on its own special circumstances, and it cannot be regarded as an authority for the general proposition that costs awarded against a father in litigation constitutes an immoral debt. This view, indeed, was repudiated in Sumer Singh v. Liladhar (6), where the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court held that money borrowed by a Mitakshara father to defend a suit for defamation constitutes a debt for which his son and grandson are liable.

The decision in Sitaram v. Harihar (7) furnishes an illustration of a somewhat different class of cases. There money had been borrowed by the father of a boy about to be given in adoption to a Hindu lady. The money was paid as a bribe to the adoptive mother to induce her to take the boy in adoption. It was ruled that the debt so contracted by the father would not bind his son and the decision was based on the intelligible ground that the debt had been contracted for an illegal purpose, because money paid to an adoptive mother as a bribe to secure her consent to an adoption not on the ground of fitness of the boy, but on motives of pecuniary benefit to herself, must be condemned as an illegal payment.

There has been a well marked divergence of judicial opinion upon the question, how far a Hindu son is under a pious obligation to discharge a debt of his father when such debt consists of money misappropriated by the latter. The cases of Mahabir Prasad v. Basdeo Singh (8), Pariman Das v. Bhattu Mahton (9) and McDowell v. Raghavachetti (10) seem to negative the liability of the son under such circumstances, while the cases of Natasayyar v. Ponnusami (11), Kanemar v. Krishna (12) and Erasala v. Addepally (2) apparently support the liability of the son. These cases, however, may possibly be reconciled, if we recognise the distinction between a criminal offence and a breach of civil duty. In the first three cases, the father was guilty of criminal misappropriation as regards sums of money for which he was accountable: while in the second set of three cases, the father merely failed to account for the money received by him and his failure to do so constituted nothing more than a breach of civil duty. The distinction is real though refined, and was recognised in Tirumalayappa v. Veeravadra (13), where it was ruled that if a debt was incurred by an agent, his son was liable to pay the debt, and the liability of the son was not affected by the circumstance that the father subsequently misappropriated the sum or made himself criminally liable. The case last mentioned consequently supports the view that, where the taking of the money itself is not a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge the son from his liability to satisfy the debt; but the position is different if the money has been taken by the father and misappropriated under circumstances which render the taking itself a criminal offence.

In Joykumar v. Gowrinath (14), a question was raised as to the nature of a debt contracted by a Mitakshara father who had given a promissory note to satisfy a bond fide decree which another had against him; it was ruled that the debt was neither immoral nor illegal, because the promissory note had not been given to stifle a prosecution against him. In an earlier case in the Punjab, Kurtar Sing v. Harjhimul (15), Lindsay and Plowden, JJ., ruled that it was impossible to hold that a debt created by a decree is a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, merely because the act from which the obligation to make compensation arose was an illegal or immoral act, or both illegal and immoral. There the father had stolen and converted to his own use certain property belonging to a third person, who sued and obtained a decree against him for the value of the property. The decree was sought to be executed by attachment of ancestral property in which the son was jointly interested with his father. The son objected to the attachment but his objection was overruled. The learned Judges observed that if the father had voluntarily contracted a debt to compensate the person whom he had, by a criminal offence, deprived of property, the debt could not, without an utter perversion of language, be styled a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose; they added that, on the contrary, the debt might be deemed to have been incurred for a highly moral as well as lawful purpose, and that the liability imposed by the decree created an obligation unwillingly contracted by the father under a lawful compulsion, as indicated in Achhru Ram v. Meher Chand (16), where a similar view was taken of the liability of the ancestral estate to satisfy a judgment-debt founded upon a just cause.

In the case of Durbar v. Khachar (1), the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court appear to have ruled that, under Hindu law, the son is not to be held liable for debts which the father ought not, as a decent and respectable man, to have incurred; he is answerable for the debt legitimately incurred by his father, and not for those attributable to his failings, his follies, or caprice. As already stated, the learned Judges appear to have deduced this rule from the text of Ushanas in which they interpreted the expression "not vyavaharika" as equivalent to "unusual" or not sanctioned by law or "custom"; this word, they suggested, had crept into text-book as "illegal or immoral." This clearly is not well-founded. Text-writers, as well as judicial decisions, apply the well-known expression illegal or immoral debt to include, not merely debts which are not vyavaharika, but all the debts which are deemed as not payable by the son according to the texts of Manu, Yajnavalkya, Ushanas, Brihaspati, Gautama and Vyasa. The decision of the Bombay High Court, in my opinion, places too restricted a construction upon the term "vyavaharika," and excludes debts for which the son may be held legitimately liable. In the particular case before the learned Judges, the father had erected a dam which obstructed the passage of water to the land of the Plaintiff; the Plaintiff obtained a decree for damages against the father, and, on the death of the latter, sought to execute the decree against his son to the extent of the ancestral property in his hand. It was held that as the result of the suit showed that the act was wrongful, the son could not be held answerable for a liability so incurred. The learned Judges appear to have found that the estate taken by the son had derived no benefit from the wrongful act, but it may be observed, that this last reason may possibly be open to the criticism that if the liability of the son depends upon the nature of the act, the test of benefit to the estate becomes immaterial. I am not prepared, however, to hold that, because the decision of the suit showed that the act for which the father was held liable in damages was in contravention of the rights of the successful Plaintiff, the judgment-debt was illegal within the meaning of the texts to which I have referred. I am rather inclined to adopt the view that the liability imposed by the Court upon the father to indemnify the person, with whose property he had improperly interfered, created a debt which might justly be recovered from the ancestral property in the hands of the son. This view may be maintained even if we adopt the distinction suggested by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court between a debt which follows as the result of an offence under the criminal law and a debt for which one is made liable on the ground of a breach of civil duty. The view we take is supported by the observations of this Court in Peary Lal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (4). In that case the son was held answerable to satisfy a decree against his father for mesne profits, and, although it was incidentally suggested that the judgment-debtor had, by unlawful receipt of profits, enriched his own estate which subsequently passed by survivorship into the hands of the son the decision was based substantially on the ground mentioned in Natasayyar v. Ponnusami (11). The son is not bound to do any thing to relieve his father from the consequence of his own vicious indulgences, but he is surely bound to do that which his father himself would do were it possible, namely, to restore to those lawfully entitled, money he had unlawfully retained. Upon any intelligible principle of morality a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another would be a debt of the most sacred obligation, and for the non-discharge of which punishment in a future state might be expected to be inflicted, if in any.

Reference was made at the bar to decisions upon the question of the liability of a son to satisfy a suretyship debt of his father, and mention was made particularly of the cases of Tukaram v. Gangaram (17), Narayan v. Venkatacharyya (18), Maharaja of Benares v. Ram Kumar (19), Sitaramaya v. Venkataramana (20) and Chetti Kulum v. Chetti Kulum (21). It is not necessary, however, to discuss for our present purpose the question of the liability of a Mitakshara son for the suretyship debt of his father, because the determination of the question depends upon the interpretation of special texts, specially the text of Vishnu which defines the different kinds of sureties, namely, for appearance, for honesty, for debt and for delivery of the debtor's effect (Jaggannath Digest, Vol. 1, p. 246). But we may observe that the latest decision in this Court, Hiralal v. Chandrabali (22), may be difficult to reconcile with the cases in Bombay, Allahabad and Madras which we have already mentioned; for the reason already stated, however, it is not necessary to examine further this class of cases.

Reference was also made to the cases of Sha Wajid Hossain v. Nankoo Singh (23), Lachmi Dai v. Asman Singh (24), Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (25), Khalilur Rahaman v. Gobind Prasad (26) and Beni Prasad v. Puran Chand (27) to show that when a decree has been made against the father no question arises as to the nature of the debt for the enforcement of which the decree might have been obtained. The decisions relied upon, however, cannot be treated as authorities for any such sweeping proposition, but they do indicate that debts incurred in transaction, the character of which, as Mr. Justice Pigot puts it in Khalilur Rahaman v. Gobind Prasad (26), is no more than imprudent or unconscientiously imprudent or unreasonable are debts to which a pious duty attaches under the Mitakshara Law. This view can hardly be reconciled with the decision of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Durbar v. Khachar (1): see also CHAKOWRI MAHTON v. GANGA PROSAD.

Sitarām v. Zalim Singh (28) and Narayan Swami v. Samidas (29).

It has finally been argued that the liability of a Hindu son to pay a debt incurred by his father is restricted to cases in which the debt is the result of a contractual obligation, and in support of this view reference has been made to the observations of the learned Judges who decided the case of Puriman Das v. Bhattu Mahton (9). It may be conceded that the term "rina" literally understood implies a debt or loan (See Mitakshara on the Institutes of Yajnavalky a II, 45, 47, 50, 54); but the judicial decisions to which reference has been made indicate that the rule has a much wider application. At any rate we are not prepared to hold that the rule is inapplicable to cases where, as here, the liability was created by a judicial decision. There is no substantial difference in principle between a case in which a person is under an obligation to repay money which he has actually borrowed and a case in which he is bound to discharge an obligation created by a judgment of Court. It is worthy of note that the dictum in Puriman Das v. Bhattu Mahton (9) is of a very qualified character, and fully recognises that a right to damages might be deemed to create a debt even before the suit is brought for its enforcement. In any event after a decree has been passed in favour of the successful Plaintiffs, he is entitled to realise from his defeated opponent a sum of money precisely in the same manner as if he had actually advanced to the latter a sum of money by way of loan.

The question finally arises what is the position of the Respondent when tested in the light of the principles deducible from the judicial decisions which interpret the ancient texts. The Subordinate Judge has not reviewed the circumstances of the litigation which ultimately determined the liability of the Defendants-Appellants. The facts, however, are beyond controversy and are set out in the judgment of this Court in the suit of 1904. It appears that on the 16th May 1904 the present Respondents commenced an action against Shankar Lal and thirty-one other persons for establishment of their right of irrigation by means of a certain water-course. The case for the Plaintiffs was that there were two villages, Rusulpura, and Dhangaon: that the maliks of Rusulpura had a right to store water on a certain portion of the village Dhangaon in a reservoir lying to the north of the village and that the maliks of Dhangaon claimed a right to irrigate their village by a water-course coming from the south and running with various diversions through their village up to the north-east. The maliks of Dhangaon alleged that this water-course was an artificial channel constructed for the purpose of irrigating the lands of Dhangaon. The substantial dispute between the parties was with regard to the area in Dhangaon over which the maliks of Rusulpura were entitled to store water, and with regard to the manner in which the surplus water of the water-course was to be discharged. There was an elaborate enquiry by the Court of first instance, and a decree was made in favour of the Plaintiffs to the effect that the particular water passage which has been obstructed by the Defendants might be opened, so that the excess water of Dhangaon might pass off from its grounds. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge substantially affirmed this decree with a slight variation, so as to entitle the Plaintiffs to put up earth work at a specified point of the channel and thus prevent the flow of the water towards the reservoir. Upon second appeal to this Court, the matter was re-examined in detail, and although the decree was affirmed it was held that it was incomplete; a direction was consequently given that an expert Engineer should be employed to ascertain the breadth and level of the opening which the Plaintiffs claimed should remain unobstructed. After the Plaintiffs had been thus successful in this litigation, by which their right of irrigation was established, they commenced an action on the 4th January 1907 against Shankar Lal and the other Defendants of the first suit, for recovery of damages on account of injury done to their crops by the obstruction of the channel. The proceedings in the original suit including the pleadings and the judgments of all the Courts were produced at the trial, and the Court made a partial decree for damages. On appeal to this Court, the decree was affirmed on the 27th May 1910. This is the decree of which the Plaintiffs have taken out execution, and as already explained they seek to realise the sum decreed from the sons of Shankar Lal who died during the pendency of the proceedings. It is difficult to appreciate how these latter can successfully resist execution on the ground that the debt is illegal or immoral. Their father, as one of the proprietors of Rusulpura, repudiated the claim of the Plaintiffs as proprietors of Dhangaon, to exercise the right of irrigation claimed by them. There was a substantial matter in controversy between the parties, as is amply indicated by the fact of the protracted investigation in the original Court, and even when the litigation terminated after four or five years, an expert was needed to determine the breadth and depth of the channel, so that each of the parties might exercise their right without needless detriment to the other. In no sense could it be said that the act of Shankar Lal was a wanton interference with the property rights of another. The successful Plaintiffs undoubtedly claimed too much, even if it be conceded that Shankar Lal went to the opposite extreme and entirely denied their rights. I am clearly of opinion that a liability imposed upon Shankar Lal by an act of this character cannot appropriately be deemed an illegal or immoral debt. Even if I were to adopt the view of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Dunbar v. Khachar (1). I could not say that Shankar Lal ought not to have incurred this liability "as a decent and respectable man," nor could this liability be attributed to "his failings, follies, or caprices." In fact what Shankar Lal did would have been done by any ordinary prudent owner of property with a view to prevent the exercise of what was an exaggerated though not an unfounded claim by his neighbours. Upon the merits, therefore, I feel no doubt that the debt which the heirs of Shankar Lal are now called upon to satisfy from the ancestral property in their hands cannot be regarded as an illegal or immoral debt.

In this view of the matter, it is unnecessary to consider whether the attachment was properly effected during the life-time of Shankar Lal, because that would enable the Appellants to proceed only against the right, title and interest of Shankar Lal in the hands of his sons

LORD MACNAGHTEN'S JUDGMENT IN THE BURMESE MATRIMONIAL CASE OF Mi Me v. Mi Shwe Ma reported in this issue shows how English Judges are reluctant to declare any reputed marriage between parties, especially when they have lived as husband and wife, invalid. His Lordship very rightly, however, remarks that when the proof of marriage depends wholly or mainly on reputation the circumstances of the case ought to be scrutinized with some caution specially in cases like the present where the same term is used to signify a wife and also a woman living with a man on less honourable terms. It seems that a great deal of loose practice prevails in Burma in respect of matrimonial relationship and it is no doubt quite laudable on the part of the educated Burmans to discourage such practices amongst lower classes of the community. But we are quite at one with his Lordship in his view that in interpreting the law one must look to the law as it prevails amongst the community and not to the law as it should be. His Lordship's appreciation of the scruples of the Burman District Judge as also of the faithful interpretation of the law by the English Judicial Commissioner is both instructive and interesting.

THIS IS WHAT HIS LORDSHIP SAYS IN THIS LAST connection :—

The lax notions prevalent among the lower classes on the subject seem to be generally deplored and condemned by their betters, and it may be that the difference of opinion between the two Courts is due in some measure to the fact that the District Judge was a native gentleman, an educated Burman, who naturally regarded with little favour if not with positive repugnance practices tolerated by the law of his country, but not in accordance with the standard of a higher civilisation. On the other hand, the Judicial Commissioner was an Englishman of great experience, without any prejudice in favour of Western notions, whose only object seems to have been to administer the law truly and indifferently as he found it laid down in the Dhammathats and the rulings of his predecessors, and in Sir John Jardine's "Notes on Buddhist Law" which seems to be the principal authority on the subject.

His Lordship's judgment is not only full of human interest but is occasionally relieved by subdued touches of humour. For instance, His Lordship's judicial finding as to why there was no entertainment given after the marriage in question of which the "chief delicacy" was the "pickled tea" and also as to the significance of the husband and wife eating out of the same pot will be found particularly interesting.

THAT THE LAW COURTS ARE MOST RELUCTANT to disturb the relationship between husband and wife on the ground of the non-observance of any formality or any defect in its celebration would also appear from some recent English decisions. For instance in the recent case of Swift v. Swift the question was whether a marriage between an Irish Protestant and an Austrian lady which took place in 1833 was valid. Some early Irish Statutes prohibited such mixed marriages. But the House of Lords held that such Statutes could not interfere with a foreign priest celebrating a marriage in his own country according to the rites of his own church. In another case, also recently decided, known as the Galway marriage case, the Petitioner sought a declaration of nullity of marriage. The Petitioner stated that it had been agreed between him and the Respondent that the marriage should be solemnised according to the rites and ceremonies of the Catholic Church. The marriage took place in the house of the Petitioner about 10 P.M., where only the priest and a servant were present and the latter was the only witness to the marriage. The Petitioner maintained that the marriage was null and void as the law of the Church requires two witnesses. Mr. Justice Kenny refused the petition for the reason amongst others that the parties had lived together as husband and wife, and that it would be against public policy to declare the marriage a nullity and would invalidate a number of marriages.

IN THE CASE OF Rādha Kant Chuckerbutty v. Ramananda Shaha, reported at 16 C. W. N. 476, it has been ruled that a purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding who has obtained the landlord's consent to the transfer and obtained a fresh settlement from him is estopped from questioning the validity of a mortgage of the holding by the transferor on the ground of non-transferability of the holding. If the view be correct, then the title of the auction-purchaser at the mortgage sale would prevail against the private purchaser who has obtained recognition of his purchase from the landlord. But it has been repeatedly laid down and it is now the settled law that the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding acquires no title by his purchase no matter whether it is private or public. The title of such a purchaser is perfected only by the recognition of the purchase by the landlord, Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla, 14 C. W. N. 779. In this case their Lordships, Chitty and Chatterjee, JJ., held that the purchaser was a representative of the mortgagor within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act as he derived his title from the mortgagor and the landlord could not give him any title independently of the mortgagor. Coxe, J., on the other hand was of opinion that the purchaser who had subsequently got his title perfected by recognition from the landlord was entitled to raise the plea that the holding was not transferable without the landlord's consent. The view taken by Coxe, J., is certainly more in consonance with the current of legal decisions than the view which prevailed with the majority of the judges. See Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanta, 1 C. W. N. 396, and also Krisna Lal v. Bhairab Chandra, 9 C. W. N. cxxlviii. There is no doubt however that the existing law as to non-transferability of raiyati holdings—which does not restore the holding alienated to the transferor but virtually decrees forfeiture thereof in favour of the landlord—frequently leads to hardship and injustice, and of this the present case is a clear instance.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Solomon v. Attenborough. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND BUCKLEY, 5th February 1912.

Pawnree or mortgagee's title to goods pledged by an executor for his own use without informing the pawnree that he was executor.

This was an appeal from a decision of JYCES, J. The facts were that the testator died in 1878.

He appointed two executors. He was possessed of valuable plate. Probate was granted to the two executors named in the Will in October of the same year. The estate was amply sufficient for the payment of his debts. It appeared from the residuary account that the estate was perfectly clear in March 1879, when the residuary account was passed. Fourteen years after the testator's death one of the executors who had the legal possession of the plate went to Messrs. Attenborough, who were perfectly unconscious of any fraud, and must not be taken to be open to any imputation on the transaction, and pawned some of the plate, and with the money thus obtained paid a private debt of his own. It was proved that the pledge was not required for the purposes of administration, but for the purpose of discharging a debt due from the pledgor to his co-executor.

The present action was brought by the trustees of the testator to recover the pledged articles. The Defendants pleaded that the executor was entitled to pledge the articles and that they were bona fide purchasers for value without notice. The Court below dismissed the action. Hence this appeal which was allowed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said:—

It was said that Messrs. Attenborough had a good title, and that an executor could deal by way of sale or mortgage with any part of his testator's personal estate, and that the purchaser or mortgagee was not required to consider whether the sale or mortgage was for the purposes of administration. He (the MASTER OF THE ROLLS) hoped that no word that had fallen from him could be considered to impeach that proposition. He did not know a better or more concise statement of the law than that of Sir John Leach in Watkins v. Cheek (2 S. and S., 199), where he said:—"So a mortgagee or purchaser from the executor of a part of the personal property of the testator has a right to infer that the executor is, in the mortgage or sale, acting fairly in the execution of his duty, and is not bound to inquire as to the debts or legacies." But what did that imply? It implied that it was a case in which an executor came as executor and dealt as executor with a third person. Then the third person was entitled to assume that the executor was entitled to perform the duties of the position which he claimed as executor. But what had that to do with a case in which the pledgor gave no information that he was an executor and did not purport to act as executor? In his Lordship's opinion that would be to strain beyond all authority and beyond principle the doctrine stated by Sir John Leach which had been followed for many years.

The attention of the Court had been called to three cases:—Re Tanqueray Willaume and Landau's Contract (20 Ch. D., 465); Re Whistler (35 Ch. D., 561); and Re Venn and Furse's Contract ([1894] 2 Ch., 113). None of those cases touched the present point. In every one of them the vendor acted and purported to act as executor. In such cases the Court assumed that the executor would do his duty and declined to give licence to the suggestion that any purchaser or mortgagee could require an executor to administer, so to speak, the estate in public. Those cases had no application to a case like the present, and although he (the MASTER OF THE ROLLS) did not differ from the statement of Mr. JUSTICE JOYCE as to what an executor could do after a lapse of years, he thought that the learned Judge had overlooked the fact that the present case was not one in which the executor had purported to deal as executor. He came into the shop as a private individual, and Messrs. Attenborough were in no better position than if a private individual who had no title had pawned the plate.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Wanthier v. Wilson and anr. Before LORDS JUSTICES FARWELL, KENEDY and WARRINGTON. 9th February 1912.

Promissory note by a minor and his father—Father's liability as guarantor or principal.

This was an appeal from a decision of Pickford J. The action was brought on a promissory note which was executed by the Defendants, father and son. On the face of the note their liability was joint and several, but the loan was made to the son. It appeared that the son was a minor. The father's defence was that the transaction was really entered into with his son, and that he was simply a guarantor. He pleaded that the contract with the son being void it was of no force against him. The Court below found that the father was only a guarantor, but it allowed the claim against him. On appeal the judgment was affirmed but on a different ground. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE FARWELL said :—

The father had no defence at common law, but since the Common Law Procedure Act an equitable plea might be raised in such a case on the ground that the circumstances were such that the Court of Chancery would have restrained the action as being against conscience. In the Mutual Loan Fund Association v. Sudlow (5 C. B. N. S. at p. 453), Mr. Justice Byles said :—"As between the makers and the payees of the note, at law both the makers are principals, and evidence would not be admissible to show that one of them signed the instrument as surety. But in equity, if it be made to appear that the lender was cognisant of the circumstances, you may show what the fact is. They become joint principals, or principal and surety, according to the facts."

It was perfectly true, as Mr. Newbolt had contended, that there could be no surety without a principal, and the son, being an infant, could not enter into a contract so as to make himself liable as principal; but if Mr. Newbolt's contention that this was a case of a guarantee were to prevail it would follow that these three parties deliberately sat down to enter into an arrangement under which money was to be advanced on a promissory note on which no one was liable at all, there being no one liable as principal and therefore no one liable as surety. To argue that that could give rise to an equity seemed to him to be a gross libel on equity. If the nature of the transaction were as suggested the father could not, in his opinion, have maintained a bill in Chancery to restrain the action, and his equitable plea would come to nothing at all. But in his (the Lord Justice's) view the money was advanced by the Plaintiff to the son at the father's request. The father desired that money should be advanced to his son for some purpose of which he approved, and, being without money himself, he requested the Plaintiff to make an advance. That seemed to him to be the plain meaning of the transaction, on the assumption that the Plaintiff knew that the son was under age; and it followed that, in his opinion, the father acted as principal and incurred liability as principal.

The case would be plainer still if the Plaintiff did not know that the son was under age; for if he did not know it, and the father knew that he did not know it, the transaction would look like fraud. It was not necessary to consider the authority of the case of Yorkshire Railway Wagon Company v. Macfure (19 Ch. D. 478), on which Mr. Justice Pickford based his judgment, because this Court thought that this was not a case of a guarantee. The learned Judge said that, in his opinion, the father joined in the promissory note as a guarantor. In a colloquial sense, no doubt, this was a case of a guarantee. But in his judgment the true meaning of the transaction was that the father acted as principal borrower and made himself liable as principal.

KING'S BENCH.—The King v. Bottomley and anr. Before JUSTICES DARLING, BUCKNILL and HAMILTON. 26th February 1912.

Contempt of Court.

The Defendants were called upon in this case to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court. The Defendants were alleged to have written threatening letters to one of their creditors with a view to coerce them to join a scheme of arrangement for payment of Defendants' debts. It was submitted in support of the rule that the Defendants attempted to prejudice the course of justice in connection with Mr. Bottomley's public examination in bankruptcy. The learned Judges found the Defendants guilty and imposed fines of £100 each. In the course of his judgment Mr. JUSTICE DARLING remarked something had been said about the jurisdiction of the Court in these matters. It was a jurisdiction always carefully kept and guarded by the Court, and always exercised with the greatest reluctance and care. It was valued by the Court because it was not mainly a power to be used for the protection of Judges and juries, of which, of course, there was no question in this case. The reason for guarding jealously this jurisdiction was best given in the words of Lord Justice Bowen in the case of Helmore v. Smith (35 Ch. D., at p. 455):—"The object of the discipline enforced by the Court . . . is not to vindicate the dignity of the Court or the person of the Judge, but to prevent undue interference with the satisfaction of justice."

Here it was said that the applicants, being creditors, and having the right to appear at Mr. Bottomley's public examination, had had it proposed to them by threats that if they did not come in with the other creditors and agree to the scheme the attacks made on them by Mr. Bottomley would continue. The question they had to consider was one of fact—namely, whether those threats were made. He had no doubt whatever that, if it was proved that they were made, and made for the purpose alleged, a contempt of Court had been committed. No doubt this procedure was of a quasi-criminal character; but that fact must not prevent the Court, if it thought the charge proved, from doing its duty. They had often to say this to juries, and they must not shrink from it themselves.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, J.J. CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 1029 OF 1911. SURESH CHANDRA SANYAL, Accused, Appellant v. THE EMPEROR. 1st April 1912.

Handwriting, proof of, by an expert.

The Appellant was convicted and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 124A by the District Magistrate of Pubna for forwarding a certain seditious leaflet called Matripuja to the Capt. of the Rungpore School. One important point raised in the appeal was whether the expert as to the handwriting of certain incriminating documents was admissible. It appears the expert did not compare in Court before the accused, the handwriting in question with handwriting which was proved or admitted to be his, but he (the expert) gave his opinion as to the handwriting on the comparison he had made out of Court.

Their Lordships observed:—

"The Statute 28 and 29 Vict., c. 18, sec. 18 lays down in express terms that the comparison by a witness of the disputed writing for the purpose of giving an expert opinion must be with any writing proved to the satisfaction of a Judge to be genuine . . . and though this condition is not expressly laid down in sec. 45 of the Evidence Act, which is only a general section as to the admissibility of expert evidence yet it is clearly indicated in the Ills. (c) to the section. . . ."

Their Lordships then referred to 22 W. R. 272 and held that as there was no comparison in open Court before the accused with documents proved or admitted to be in the handwriting of the accused, the evidence of the expert was inadmissible.

Their Lordships set aside the conviction but having regard to the fact that the accused was a young man and he was 8½ months in jail as an undertrial prisoner and as a convict combined, they did not think it necessary to order a retrial.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 3 OF 1911. NARENDRA BHUSAN ROY AND OTHERS, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Appellants v. BANKU BEHARI GHOSE AND ANOTHER, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 22nd March 1912.

Covenant for re-entry—Transfer in invitum—Voluntary act.

The suit was to establish title. The point involved in the case was as to the real meaning and effect of what was termed a covenant against transfer and a clause for re-entry contained in the habuliyat of 1882. There was a simple mortgage and a sale in execution of a decree obtained on that mortgage.

Held—That though a transfer in invitum did not come within the operation of such a clause, the practical result was that the voluntary act of the lessees in executing the simple mortgage which, by reason of their default resulted in the transfer, brought the transaction within the operation of that clause.

MI ME and others,
Appellants,

v.

MI SHWE MA,
Respondent.

Burmese Law—Marriage—Special ceremonies, if essential—Mutual consent—Conduct—Reputation—Marriage with wife's sister—Polygamy.

In Burma polygamy is undoubtedly lawful and it is not unlawful to marry the sister of a living wife, though such a marriage is not considered quite respectable, while marriage with a deceased wife's sister is looked upon as proper and even laudable.

The law relating to marriage in Burma is extremely lax. No ceremony of any kind is essential. Mutual consent is all that is required. In the absence of direct proof, consent may be inferred from the conduct of the parties or established by reputation. But when proof of marriage depends wholly or mainly on reputation the circumstances of the case must be scrutinised with some caution because the same word which is used to describe a woman lawfully married is applied by the Burmese to a woman living with a man on less honourable terms.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, dated the 11th October 1909, which reversed a judgment and decree of the District Court, Magwe, dated the 9th February 1909.

The District Judge dismissed the suit brought by the Respondent, as Plaintiff, against the Appellants, as Defendants, for, inter alia, the recovery of such a share of the estate of one Maung Aung Myat, deceased, as the Respondent might be held entitled to. On appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner set aside the decree of the lower Court and made a decree in lieu thereof declaring that the Respondent was entitled to inherit the said estate "on an equal footing with" Mi Me, the first Appellant in this appeal.

On the 13th May 1908, the Respondent instituted the present suit. The plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that the Respondent was married to the said Maung Aung Myat in 1244, B. E., about 20 years before his death which occurred on or about the 2nd December 1902; that her sister Mi Me, the first Appellant, was also his wife; and that she, the Respondent, was entitled to a half share of the estate of the deceased specified in the schedules attached thereto. The Respondent prayed inter alia "(c) that the estate of the said Maung Aung Myat (deceased) may be partitioned, and (d) such share may be given to Plaintiff as she may be entitled to together with her share of the income of the said estate."

The Appellants filed a written statement denying that the Respondent was a wife of the said Maung Aung Myat, and alleging the "Defendants were informed and believe that Plaintiff was Maung Aung Myat's concubine and is therefore not entitled to any share of the estate of the deceased Maung Aung Myat."

On the pleadings the District Judge framed eight issues, of which only the following are now material:—

(1) Was Ma Shwe Ma a wife or a concubine of Maung Aung Myat, and as such entitled to inherit?

(2) If so, to what share of the inheritance of Maung Aung Myat is she entitled?

After recording oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties the District Judge delivered his judgment on the 9th February 1908. He was of opinion that the Respondent "had failed to prove satisfactorily that she had a status superior to that of a mistress or a concubine, receiving the visits of the late Maung Aung Myat who had given her three oil-wells and two to her sons by her previous marriage, apparently to compensate her for the absence of her right to inherit his estate on his death." He, therefore, held that the Respondent was only a mistress and not a lawful wife of the late Maung Aung Myat, and that even if she were held to be a lawful wife of the deceased, she would not be entitled to inherit his property because she was accommodated in a separate house, and also because she had "failed to sufficiently prove that she had attended upon Maung Aung Myat during his illness, and also that she had performed his funeral rites as a wife." In the result a decree was made on the same date dismissing the suit with costs.

Against the said decree of the District Judge the Respondent filed her appeal in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma. On the 11th October 1909, the Judicial Commissioner (Mr. G. W. Shaw) who heard the appeal, delivered his judgment reversing the decision of the lower Court and setting aside its decree. He found that like many other Twingas the late Maung Aung Myat had two wives, the first Appellant, Mi Me, and the Respondent, Mi Shwe Ma; that the former was already married to him when he took to wife the latter, who was her younger sister, about 1244 or 1245, B. E. (two or three years before the annexation of Upper Burma); that from that time onwards the Respondent was publicly known as his wife, as well as the first Appellant, who during a long course of years accepted the relations between the Respondent and Maung Aung Myat without any sign of dissatisfaction; that the fact that Maung Aung Myat gave the Respondent three wells might have been a convenient method of arranging for her maintenance during his life-time and was not sufficient to negative the inference suggested by all the circumstances in the case which tended to show that the Respondent had the status of a wife entitled to inherit; that at times the late Maung Aung Myat stayed with the Respondent and occasionally had his meals with her; that as far as there was anything for a wife to do in Maung Aung Myat's business connected with oil-wells the Respondent did as much as the first Appellant; that as to the Respondent's attendance on Maung Aung Myat in his illness she did her duty in that matter; that the Respondent did take part in the management of the funeral of Maung Aung Myat; and that the Respondent was satisfactorily proved to be a wife entitled to inherit on an equal footing with the first Appellant.

MI ME v. MI SHWE MA.

Hence this appeal.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and E. U. Eddis for the Appellants.—The suit was instituted on 13th May 1906 by the Respondent who claimed one-half share of the property left by Maung Aung Myat. This shows that for nearly six years the Respondent recognised her position as one who was not entitled to any share of the property of Maung Aung Myat. The first Appellant, Mi Me, had absolute possession of the property and on the death of her husband she handed over to the Respondent two oil-wells. The Respondents received those wells and for six years did not put forward her claim, if any. This is consistent with the fact that she considered herself not entitled to a share of the property.

A wife, under the Burmese Buddhist law, acquires on her marriage a community of interest in the property acquired during coverture, and succeeds to property so acquired on the death of her husband.

Witnesses on both sides say that the Respondent was the maya of the deceased. But as the District Judge has observed in his judgment the word maya is equivalent to the word wife as well as a permanent concubine. The Burmans use the word wife indifferently for a lawful wife and a permanent concubine and the presumption is that a Burman having married once would not marry again: Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kin (1).

Marriage is a contract according to the

(1) L. R. 35 I. A. 41: s. c. 12 O. W. N. 220 (1907).

Burmese Buddhist law and it is usual to have some ceremony such as the distribution of pickled tea when a marriage takes place. The Respondent herself says that persons previously married distributed pickled tea, when they married again. But here it is admitted that there was no such ceremony.

The District Judge is right in holding that the evidence is insufficient to establish a direct marriage.

He is right in also holding that the evidence is insufficient to establish marriage by habit and repute. The Respondent never lived together in the same house with the deceased and the first Appellant except on two occasions when they all went away during disturbance at the time of the annexation and a fire in the town. The Respondent had a separate establishment and she never helped the deceased in his business. Under these circumstances it is submitted that she had no community of interest in the property acquired by the deceased and that she is entitled to nothing on his death. Reference was made Sir George Sculp's Burma, p. 149.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., and Messrs. J. M. Parikh and C. G. S. Pillay for the Respondent.—No ceremony of marriage is required under the Burmese Buddhist law, which recognises polygamy: All wives are entitled to equal shares of their husband's property. Marriage can be proved by actual words constituting the contract or by habit and repute. Reference was made to Mi Kin Gale v. Mi Kin Gyi (2); Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, Note 1, paras. 3, 13, 15, 19 and 23; The Principles of Buddhist Law by Chantoon (1903), pp. 23, 25, 26; Mi Ka v.

(2) Upper Burma Rulings, 42 (1910).

MI ME v. MI SHWE MA.

Maung Thet (3) and Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kin (1).

Polygamy is allowed and the presumption is in favour of marriage. It is not necessary that the second wife should live in the same house with the first wife and the husband. There may be separate establishments for both wives for convenience: Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, Note 1, para. 37. Wives are called greater or lesser wives according to the priority of marriage, but it is only a name, and there is nothing in the mere fact of separate establishments to prevent a woman from being a wife: Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, Note 1, paras. 49, 50, 55 and 56. Here the evidence shows that the deceased had two establishments and lived sometimes with the first Appellant and sometimes with the Respondent.

Whether the property left by Maung Aung Myat was his separate property or joint property is the subject of the third issue which is not yet tried. The question for determination now is whether the Respondent was or was not the wife of deceased entitled to one-half share of the property left by him. When the question is settled, there will be an inquiry under the third issue as to what property was left by the deceased. With regard to what is joint and what is separate property reference was made to Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, Note 1, paras. 37, 38 and 39.

Where witnesses say that the deceased had two wives, there is nothing to show that one was of one kind and the other of another kind. These witnesses were not asked whether they made any distinction as regards the positions of the two wives, and the question is not now open to the Appellant.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply referred to Mi Ka v. Maung Thet (3), Mi Kin Gale v. Mi Kin Gyi (2); Jardine's Circular Memorandum No. 30 of 1882; and the Principles of Buddhist Law by Chantoon (1903), pp. 42 and 110; and submitted that eating from the same dish with her husband was essential to show that the Respondent was the wife of the deceased. But the evidence does not show that the Respondent ever ate from the same dish with the deceased.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma reversing a decree of the District Court of Magwe.

The question on which the Courts differed relates to the status of the Plaintiff Mi Shwe Ma. She claims to have been lawfully married to one Maung Aung Myat, deceased, and as his widow to be entitled to share equally in his estate with her elder sister, Mi Me, who had been married to him for many years before his connection with the younger sister.

In Burma polygamy is undoubtedly lawful, and it is not unlawful to marry the sister of a living wife, though such a marriage is not considered quite respectable, while marriage with a deceased wife's sister is looked upon as proper and even laudable.

The law relating to marriage in Burma is extremely lax. No ceremony of any kind is essential. Mutual consent is all that is required. In the absence of direct proof consent may be inferred from the conduct of the parties or established by reputation. But when proof of marriage depends wholly or mainly on reputation the circumstances of the case must be scrutinised with some caution because the same word which is used to describe a woman lawfully married is applied by the Burmese to a woman living with a man on less honourable terms. The lax notions prevalent among the lower classes on the subject seem to be generally deplored and condemned by their betters, and it may be that the difference of opinion between the two Courts is due in some measure to the fact that the District Judge was a native gentleman, an educated Burman, who naturally regarded with little favour if not with positive repugnance practices tolerated by the law of his country, but not in accordance with the standard of a higher civilisation. On the other hand, the Judicial Commissioner was an Englishman of great experience, without any prejudice in favour of Western notions, whose only object seems to have been to administer the law truly and indifferently as he found it laid down in the Dhammathats and the rulings of his predecessors, and in Sir John Jardine's "Notes on Buddhist Law" which seems to be the principal authority on the subject.

Both the learned Judges analyse the evidence with great care, though they regard it from different standpoints. The District Judge puts aside the testimony of some witnesses as unworthy of belief while the Judicial Commissioner thinks there was no reason for discrediting them. Whether that particular testimony is accepted or not there is very little contradiction in the evidence. There is abundance of evidence to the effect that Mi Shwe Ma was recognised as the wife of Maung Aung Myat. Mi Me herself says, "Plaintiff was known notoriously as Maung Aung Myat's wife." No one says that she occupied a dishonourable or an inferior position. Maung Aung Myat was a Twinzayo, that is an hereditary oil-well owner, and as such entitled to receive every year a certain number of oil-well sites in the oil-bearing district of Yenangyaung in Upper Burma. Twinzayo after Twinzayo comes forward on both sides to say that Twinzayos generally have two wives, and that Mi Shwe Ma was Maung Aung Myat's wife. Some of the witnesses may have used the word translated "wife" in a loose sense, but at least one witness on each side says that Maung Aung Myat and Mi Shwe Ma were "husband and wife," an expression which seems to convey the meaning that she was his wedded wife. Then it may be observed that one of the witnesses who says that Mi Shwe Ma was Maung Aung Myat's wife was not a Burman but Mahomedan of some position, being the head clerk in the Burma Oil Company.

The points on which most reliance was placed on behalf of the Appellant seems capable of explanation. One point was that there was no entertainment given on Mi Shwe Ma's alleged marriage. When there is a marriage between persons who have not been married before, it seems to be usual to give an entertainment at which "pickled tea" is the principal feature, or at least the chief delicacy. There was no pickled tea at Mi Shwe Ma's wedding. But then it seems that, in the case of persons who have been married before, it is not usual to have these entertainments. Maung Aung Myat had five or six children grown up living with him, and Mi Shwe Ma was a widow with two children living. Then something was made of the fact that Mi Shwe Ma continued to live with her mother in her own house. But there is authority for saying that such an arrangement is a mere matter of convenience, and probably necessary for the sake of peace and quietness, when each wife has a family of her own. Great stress was laid on the fact that it was not clearly proved that Maung Aung Myat and Mi Shwe Ma messed together, or used to "eat out of the same pot." "Eating out of the same pot" seems rather to be an outward and visible sign of social equality than a proof of matrimony. A man united to a woman of lower degree raises her to his own social position by "eating out of the same pot." Here there is evidence that Maung Aung Myat took his meals with Mi Shwe Ma and her family when he visited her. It is difficult to see how there can be any question of social inferiority in the present case. Mi Me was Mi Shwe Ma's sister, and on perfectly good terms with her and the mother during Maung Aung Myat's life. As to Maung Aung Myat's business, he seems to have managed it himself. Sometimes one sister and sometimes the other, sometimes both, were seen with him when he visited his oil-wells, but apparently he kept the business in his own hands.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the Appellants have not made out a sufficient case for disturbing the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, and their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 227 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J.	}	E. M. D. COHEN
1912,		v.
11, March.		ALLAN WILKIE.

Contract to play for a term and not to perform anywhere else until return to England, if enforceable by injunction—Indian Contract Act (IV of 1872), sec. 27—Agreement in restraint of profession—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 57.

Where W, having contracted with C to play for C and not to play in any other theatre on his own or on someone else's behalf until after the expiration of the period contracted for and until after his return to England, performed in another theatre after the expiration of the period for which he was under contract with C but before his return to England, it was held that under sec. 27 of the Indian Contract Act, the agreement being in restraint of a lawful profession, trade or business is void and as such would not be enforced by injunction. Sec. 57 of the Specific Relief Act is not applicable to this case.

This is an application upon which a Rule was obtained by Mr. E. M. D. Cohen, proprietor of the Grand Opera House, Calcutta, calling upon Mr. Allan Wilkie of the Empire Theatre, actor and proprietor of the Allan Wilkie and Co., to show cause why he should not be restrained by an injunction from playing in any theatre in Calcutta and why there should not be any attachment before judgment.

The facts of the case are these:

Mr. Allan Wilkie with his company came out to the East under a contract with Mr. Cohen to play for him. Cl. 9 of the said deed of contract which really summarises their relations and under which Mr. Cohen came before the Court ran thus : "That the said Allan Wilkie undertakes not to play in any other theatre in Calcutta or in any town under his own or under any other management until after the termination of the tour and the return of himself and the company to England in pursuance of the agreement."

The contract was for six weeks in Calcutta and six weeks elsewhere with the option for Mr. Cohen to extend it to the period of eighteen weeks, the option to be exercised before the company left for England, and notice of such option had to be given by the 1st September 1911. But no such option was exercised and no notice was given. The agreement was expressly broken on the 17th February 1912 and Mr. Wilkie made other arrangements for himself and his company to take effect after that date. Hence Mr. Cohen made this application.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Mr. B. C. Mitter for Mr. Cohen.

Mr. Pugh for Mr. Allan Wilkie.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an application by Mr. Elias Moses Cohen, proprietor of the Grand Opera House, Calcutta, against Mr. Allan Wilkie of the Empire Theatre, Calcutta, an actor and proprietor of a theatrical company known as Allan Wilkie Co. The present application seeks to restrain and deter Mr. Wilkie by an injunction until the termination of the suit from playing in any theatre in Calcutta or any other town under his own or any other management other than the Plaintiff's management until after the termination of the tour and the return of the Defendant and his company to England as provided for in cl. 9 of the agreement mentioned in the petition. The rest of the application refers to an application for attachment before judgment. Mr. Cohen by an agreement, dated the 21st June last year, engaged Mr. Wilkie and his company to come out to the East for a certain tour. There is no doubt to my mind that the expense of bringing Mr. Wilkie and his company out was borne by Mr. Cohen and although it may be that that money has been repaid the entire financing of the company was undertaken and advances made by Mr. Cohen. It is, not denied now that the tour has come to an end and the only question that I have to consider is whether the 9th clause in the agreement can be enforced by an injunction. The 9th clause is in these terms : "The said Allan Wilkie undertakes not to play at any theatre in Calcutta or in any other other town under his own or under any other management until after the termination of the tour and the return of himself and the company to England in pursuance of the agreement." Now in India the law relating to contracts in restraint of trade is codified in the 27th section of the Indian Contract Act. That section provides that every agreement by which any one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business of any kind, is to that extent void. It is pretty obvious that in the present case in the English Courts cl. 9 of the agreement would be enforced by injunction on the ground (1) that the clause was considered by the parties to be reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenant and (2) on the ground that the Defendant had had all the benefits under the agreement. But in India one has simply got to look to see what the Legislature has provided in the Statute and sec. 27 of the Contract Act clearly provides that a contract in respect of trade by which a man is restrained from exercising his lawful profession, trade or business is void, and the words do not mean that he should be absolutely restrained. Then Mr. Sinha says this contract is really in the nature of the contract mentioned in sec. 57 of the Specific Relief Act. That is not so. The contract provided for in sec. 57 of the Specific Relief Act is where one party having undertaken to employ another can obtain an injunction to restrain the other from working for any other person other than the one he has agreed to work for. It is not suggested in this case that if Mr. Wilkie be restrained by injunction that he has got the right to perform in Mr. Cohen's theatre or that Mr. Cohen under the terms of the agreement is bound to employ him. It seems to me that this cl. 9 in the contract is under the terms of sec. 27 of the Indian Contract Act void as being in restraint of trade. That being so the present application in so far as it seeks for an injunction to restrain Mr. Wilkie from performing until he has gone through the operation of going back from India to England and then starting again from England to India, fails. The other part of the application seeking to attach Mr. Wilkie's property has not been pressed. The present application therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

E. M. D. COHEN v. ALLAN WILKIE.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1858 OF 1908.

MOOKERJEE, J.	}	HARIHAR CHATTAPADHYA,
TEUNON, J.		Plaintiff, Appellant,
1911,		v.
Heard, 26 and		DINU BERA, Defendant,
27, January.		Respondent.
Judgment,
27, January.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 182, 20, 21, 44, 45—Homestead owned by raiyat of different villages, occupancy right if may be acquired in—Ejectment—Non-occupancy raiyat.

The language of sec. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act, justifies the proposition laid down in KRIPANATH CHAKRABURTI v. SHEIKH ANU (2), that in the absence of local custom or usage the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applicable to the homestead of a person who is a raiyat although he is not a raiyat of the village in which the homestead land is situated and is not a raiyat of the same landlord as the landlord of the homestead land.

Quere, whether to establish his occupancy right in the homestead the raiyat must show that he was a "settled raiyat of the village" in which the homestead is situated within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Act.

Held—That if he was not an occupancy raiyat, he would be a non-occupancy raiyat and could not be ejected except in the manner provided by secs. 44 and 45 of the Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of August 1908, against the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 8th of May 1908, reversing the decree of Babu Pankaja Kumar Chatterjee, Munsif, 3rd Court at Alipore, dated the 9th of July 1907.

HARIHAR CHATTAPADHYA v. DINU BERA.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

Dinu Bera by a registered kabuliyat, dated 6th Sraban 1303, B. S., corresponding to 20th July 1896, took jama of about 1 bigha, 8 cottas of kheraji land situate in village Mudi Shahanagore, Dihi Panchanogram, within the jurisdiction of Thana Tollygunge, in the Suburbs of Calcutta, within the limits of the Calcutta Municipality, for three years for the purpose of residing there and from that time forth he lived there and continued to hold over after the expiry of the lease. The Plaintiff landlord, Harihar Chatterjee, served on him on the 26th Aswin 1312, corresponding to October 1905, a notice to vacate the land within the last date of the month of Chait of 1312, that is by 14th April 1906.

The Defendant did not quit and the present suit was filed on 4th December 1906 for ejectment of the Defendant from the land and also for arrears of rent due up to 1312, B. S., and damages.

The defence, inter alia, was that the Defendant was a raiyat in the village and was a settled raiyat and had acquired rights of occupancy in other lands situate in the village under other landlords and that therefore he had acquired right of occupancy in the homestead and so could not be ejected and also that the notice was not valid in law.

The first Court decreed the suit but the Court of Appeal below found that the Defendant was a raiyat within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that he had by cultivation of the land for more than 25 or 30 years acquired right of occupancy in other lands situate in the village under other landlords and that therefore he had acquired right of occupancy in the land in suit under secs. 23 and 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and he therefore dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff preferred the present second appeal.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Dharendra Lal Kastagir for the Appellant.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Atul Krishna Roy for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit for ejectment and recovery of rent and damages. The case for the Plaintiff was that the land in dispute was let out to the Defendant on the 20th July 1896 for a term of three years, that after the expiration of the term of the tenancy, the Defendant was allowed to hold over, that on the 13th October 1905 the Plaintiff served upon the Defendant a notice to quit the land on the 14th April 1906, that in spite of the service of such notice the Defendant continued in occupation and that consequently on the 4th December 1906 the Plaintiff commenced this action to eject the Defendant as a trespasser. He further claimed rent for the year 1312, that is up to the date on which the Defendant was asked to vacate the premises, and damages for use and occupation thereafter. The Defendant resisted the claim substantially on the ground that his tenancy was not terminable and that as a matter of law it had not been validly terminated by the steps taken by the Plaintiff.

The Court of first instance found that the Defendant was not shown to be a raiyat in respect of other lands in the same village, that he had not acquired a right of occupancy in the land in dispute which had been taken by him for purposes of homestead and had been used by him as such and that consequently his tenancy in respect of this land was terminable and had been terminated by the notice to quit served upon him. In this view the Court of first instance decreed the suit both as regards the prayer for ejectment and the claim for rent and damages.

Upon appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed this decree. He has held that the combined effect of secs. 21 and 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to confer upon the Defendant the status of an occupancy raiyat in respect of the land in suit and that consequently he is not liable to be ejected. In this view the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and on his behalf it has been contended that the Defendant has not acquired a right of occupancy in the land in suit, that the Subordinate Judge has overlooked material evidence on the question of the occupation by the Defendant of other lands in the village as a raiyat, and finally, that in any event the Plaintiff is entitled to a decree for rent up to the date of the institution of the suit.

In our opinion, in so far as the claim for ejectment is concerned, the Plaintiff cannot possibly succeed. But before we deal with the question of the status of the Defendant, it is necessary to advert for a moment to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the Defendant is a raiyat in respect of other lands in the village. That finding has been attacked on behalf of the Appellant on the ground that the Subordinate Judge has erroneously stated that the Plaintiff has not adduced any evidence to rebut that on the side of the Defendant to prove that he holds other lands in the village under different proprietors and that he has acquired a right of occupancy in those lands. No doubt the expression used by the learned Subordinate Judge is open to criticism, but we are unable to hold that he has overlooked the evidence mentioned in the judgment of the Court of first instance. We must therefore proceed on the assumption that the Defendant has been rightly found by the Subordinate Judge to be a raiyat in respect of other lands in the same village. In fact the Subordinate Judge has found that the Defendant has been a cultivating raiyat of other lands in the village for more than 25 or 30 years before the suit. In other words, he was a settled raiyat in respect of those lands at the time when the lease of the land now in dispute was granted to him. The question therefore arises whether sec. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with sec. 182 is sufficient to confer upon the Defendant the status of an occupancy raiyat in respect of the homestead land now in dispute.

Now sec. 182 provides that when a raiyat holds his homestead otherwise than as part of his holding as a raiyat, the incidents of his tenancy of the homestead shall be regulated by local custom or usage and subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of the Act applicable to land held by a raiyat. In the case before us, no evidence has been adduced on behalf of either party to show that there is any local custom or usage applicable to the incidents of the tenancy in question. Consequently the incidents of the tenancy must be governed by the provisions of the Act applicable to land held by a raiyat. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has, however, contended that as the land now in dispute is not held under the same landlord as the land cultivated by the Defendant, sec. 182 has no application. This contention is opposed to the judgment of Mr. Justice Geidt in the case of Protap Chandra v. Biseswar Pramanik (1) and to the decision of this Court in the case of Kripanath Chakraborti v. Sheikh Anu (2). The case last mentioned lays down that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applicable to the homestead of a person who is a raiyat, although he is not a raiyat of the village in which the homestead land is situated and is not a raiyat of the same landlord as the landlord of the homestead land. It may be observed that this view is justified by the language used in sec. 182 and we see no reason to restrict the operation of that section by importing into it words not to be found therein. Consequently we must hold that although the land in dispute is homestead land, as it is held by the Defendant who is a raiyat otherwise than as part of his holding as a raiyat, the incidents of his tenancy are in the absence of any local custom or usage, regulated by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to land held by a raiyat. Prima facie, therefore, the provisions of sec. 21 are applicable. But the learned Vakil for the Appellant has contended that before sec. 21 can be applied, it must be shown that the land in suit has been held by the Defendant as a raiyat, because sub-sec. (1) of sec. 21 provides that every person who is a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of sec. 20 shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has conceded that his contention is opposed to the decision of Mr. Justice Rampini in the case of Munshi Golam Mowla v. Abdul Sowar (3), but he has argued that in that decision sufficient weight was not attached to the qualifying words "held by him as a raiyat in that village." Upon the arguments which have been addressed to us we need not decide this question for the purposes of the case before us, and when it arises in a case where it really calls for decision, the matter may require further consideration. But we are of opinion that the Plaintiff must fail on another ground. The suit is clearly barred under secs. 44 and 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sec. 45 as it stood at the time of the institution of the suit, provides that a suit for ejectment on the ground of expiration of the term of a lease shall not be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyat unless notice to quit has been served on the raiyat not less than six months before the expiration of the term and shall not be instituted after six months from the expiration of the term. Now the Defendant has been found to be a raiyat. Even if it is assumed that he is not an occupancy raiyat in respect of the disputed land because as the learned Vakil for the Appellant contends, sec. 21 has no application to the land in suit, he is at least a non-occupancy raiyat. Hence, before the Defendant is ejected, the requirements of sec. 45 must be fulfilled. But it cannot be disputed that no notice to quit was served on the Defendant within six months before the expiration of the term; that is within six months before the 20th July 1899. Nor has the present suit been instituted within six months after the expiration of the term. It is obvious therefore that sec. 45 is a bar to the claim for eviction of the Defendant and the refusal of the Court below to make a decree for ejectment was correct.

In so far as the claim for rent is concerned the learned Vakil for the Respondent has conceded that the matter has been overlooked by the Subordinate Judge. We observe, however, that interest was claimed by the Plaintiff at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum under the terms of the lease. Under sec. 178, sub-sec. (3), cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act, can affect the provisions of sec. 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent. Consequently the Plaintiff is not entitled to claim interest at a rate higher than 12 per cent. per annum. A decree therefore will be made in favour of the Plaintiff for the rent of the year 1312 and the first two instalments of 1313 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of the Court below in so far as it dismisses the claim for ejectment must be affirmed; but in so far as it dismisses the claim for rent and damages it must be reversed and in lieu thereof a decree will be made in favour of the Plaintiff as stated. The Plaintiff must pay the Defendant his costs in the Court of first instance and in the Court of Appeal below; but there will be no order for costs in this Court.

Decree modified.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2096 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J. CARNDUFF, J. 1911, Heard, 4 and 6, July. Judgment, 28, July.	}	BISHUN SINGH, Defendant, Appellant, v. A. W. N. WYATT, Plaintiff, Respondent.
------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	---	----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Malicious abuse of civil process, if and when actionable—Decree, invalid, execution under erroneous belief in its validity—Trespass, actionable without proof of malice and want of reasonable cause—Want of reasonable and probable cause, if question of law—Second appeal—Damages for trespass—Principle of assessment—Exemplary and nominal damages—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), if creates rights to sue.

Nothing in the Limitation Act can give rise to a cause of action unless a right to sue exists independently of its provisions.

When there has been arrest of person or seizure of property in consequence of a civil action which is unfounded, vexatious and malicious, an action for damages may lie against the Plaintiff.

Whether there was reasonable or probable cause is a mixed question of fact and law and the High Court in second appeal though bound to accept the facts found is entitled to examine whether the inference drawn from those facts is legitimate.

If a litigant executes any form of legal process which is invalid for want of jurisdiction, irregularity or any other reason, and in so doing he commits any act in the nature of trespass to person or property, he is liable therefor in an action of trespass; it is not necessary to prove any malice or want of reasonable or probable cause.

Where therefore the Defendant had obtained an attachment of the property of the Plaintiff under an erroneous impression that he had a decree capable of execution, the Defendant was liable to be sued by the Plaintiff for damages for trespass.

BISHUN SINGH v. A. W. N. WYATT.

CLISSOLD v. CRATCHLEY (3) followed.

Where land with standing crop on it was attached by the Defendant in execution of a decree which he erroneously believed he held against the Defendant, but the Plaintiff did not ask the direction of the Court or make any the slightest effort for the protection of the crop, which in consequence deteriorated and ultimately became valueless :

Held—That the attachment was not the proximate cause of the loss of the crop, and the Defendant could not be made liable for the value of the crop.

The Plaintiff was also not entitled to recover the amount she had to pay to the pleader whom she employed to search the records and ascertain whether there was a valid decree against her in favour of the Defendant.

For an act of trespass for which no blame attached to the Defendant he could not be held liable to pay exemplary damages. Only nominal damages (which is not necessarily small damages) should be allowed in recognition of the fact that there has been an infraction of a legal right which is actionable without proof of actual damage or harm.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of October 1909 against the decree of F. W. Ward, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Mozufferpur, dated the 25th of August 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Ashutosh Ghose, Munsif of Matihari, dated the 18th of June 1908.

The facts of the case fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Gonesh Dutt Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Defendant in an action for damages for what has been described as malicious abuse of judicial process. The circumstances under which the claim has been preferred, have not formed the subject of serious controversy in this Court, and may be briefly narrated. On the 3rd June 1901, the predecessor of the Plaintiff commenced an action for rent against the Defendant for the years 1307 and 1308, F. S. The substantial dispute between the parties related to the rate of rent annually payable ; the Defendant pleaded that the rent was much lower than what the Plaintiff had demanded, and that whatever was lawfully payable had been duly paid. The Court of first instance overruled the defence and decreed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court, the Plaintiff-Appellant asked for leave to withdraw from the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. On the 2nd March 1906, the application was granted and the following order was recorded : "The application is allowed on condition that the Appellant pays to the Respondent the costs incurred by him in this litigation, including the costs of this Court, within six weeks of the arrival of the record in the lower Court. If such costs are not paid within the time aforesaid, this appeal will stand dismissed with costs." The records were sent down in due course and appear to have been received in the lower Court on the 17th June 1906. Meanwhile, the Plaintiff, who had already instituted a suit on the 8th February 1906, for recovery of the arrears of rent for the years 1310 to 1313, deposited the money in Court on the 23rd May 1906. No notice of the deposit was given to the Defendant, and it has now been ascertained that the entry of the payment, as made in the Court Register, was inaccurate and misleading, because the names of the parties as Plaintiff and Defendant were interchanged. There is some evidence to show that one of the officers of the Plaintiff verbally informed the Defendant that the deposit had been made: but, in the events which had happened, and in view of the fact that the records had been removed from Champaran to Chapra, it was not possible for the Defendant, to whom the challan had not been shown, to ascertain whether the money had actually been deposited, and to withdraw the sum from the Court. The result was that, when the suit commenced on the 8th February 1906 for realisation of the arrears of the years 1310 to 1313 came on for trial, the Defendant objected that, as the Plaintiff had not carried out the order of the High Court in the appeal in the previous suit for rent, the subsequent suit could not be entertained. This objection prevailed, and the suit was dismissed on the 31st May 1906, as the Plaintiff was unable to satisfy the Court that she had deposited the money in accordance with the order of this Court. She then appealed to the District Judge and contended, not that the deposit had been made in time, but that, as the order of the High Court referred to a suit for rent for an earlier period, failure to comply with that order could not bar the subsequent suit, and the District Judge, on the 20th November 1906, gave effect to this contention. The Defendant then appealed to this Court and contended that, as the order of the High Court in the previous suit had not been carried out, the result was that the appeal preferred to this Court on that occasion stood dismissed, and the decision of the Subordinate Judge, as to the rate of rent, was in effect confirmed: consequently the trial of the question of the rate of rent was barred by res judicata. This Court, on the 5th April 1909, directed an enquiry into the question, whether the order of the High Court in the previous suit had been carried out in time. The lower Court, upon investigation and upon evidence adduced by the Plaintiff reported that the deposit had been made on the 23rd May 1906 before the expiry of the time allowed for the payment of the money. On receipt of the report, this Court held, on the 19th April 1910, that the previous suit had been withdrawn and no question of the res judicata arose for consideration. Meanwhile, on the 6th June 1907, that is after the adjudication by the Courts below that the costs had not been paid in time and the appeal to this Court, consequently, stood dismissed with costs, the Defendant as decree-holder applied for execution of the decree for costs throughout that litigation. The Plaintiff as judgment-debtor entered appearance and objected to the execution on the ground that no notice, under sec. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, had been served and that the whole of the decretal amount had been already deposited in Court. The execution Court overruled the first objection on the ground that the order of this Court, made on the 2nd March 1906, was conditional and could be performed within six weeks of the arrival of the records in the Court below, that is, within six weeks from the 17th June 1906, so that there could be no decree for the Plaintiff to execute till the 29th July 1906, that is, within one year of the date of application for execution. As regards the objection on the merits, the Court directed an enquiry, and the pleader for the Plaintiff, whose services were specially retained to make the investigation, satisfied the Court that the deposit had been made. The result was that, on the copy of the challan produced in Court for the first time, on the 3rd August 1907, the Court held that the deposit had been made and dismissed the application for execution. Meanwhile, however, events had happened which have culminated in the present litigation. Immediately on the presentation of the application for executions, the Court, at the instance of the Defendant, as decree-holder, attached 14 bighas of land, on which there was standing crop of indigo. The attachment apparently continued from the 6th June 1907 to the 5th August 1907, and the judgment-debtor, the present Plaintiff, does not appear to have intimated to the Court that the crop was liable to deterioration. On the 26th September 1907, the Plaintiff commenced the present action for recovery of Rs. 600 from the Defendant as damages for malicious abuse of legal process. His case was that the Defendant maliciously took out execution for recovery of costs, which, he knew, had already been deposited in Court; that the wrongful attachment, in the course of the execution proceedings, had resulted in the destruction of his indigo crop, and had also affected his credit. The Defendant repudiated the allegation of malice and contended that he acted in good faith, that there was reasonable and probable cause for the attachment, and that the damage of the crops alleged by the Plaintiff was not the approximate result of the attachment effected at his instance. The Court of first instance found in favour of the Defendant and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge has decreed the claim. He has held that the attachment was malicious and unlawful, and he has given the Plaintiff a decree for Rs. 290, namely, Rs. 179 as value of indigo lost, Rs. 53 as litigation expenses, and Rs. 58 as exemplary damages. The Defendant has now appealed to this Court, and, on his behalf, the decision of the District Judge has been assailed substantially on three grounds; namely, first, that upon the admitted facts, the suit is not maintainable; secondly, that, upon the facts found by the District Judge there was reasonable and probable cause for the attachment effected by him, and, thirdly, that the damages have been awarded on principles erroneous in law.

BISHUN SINGH v. A. W. N. WYATT.

In support of the first objection taken by the Appellant, it has been contended that it is not an actionable wrong to institute civil proceedings without reasonable and probable cause even if malice be proved, for in contemplation of law, the Defendant, who is unreasonably sued, is sufficiently indemnified by a judgment in his favour which gives him his costs against the Plaintiff. In support of this proposition, reference has been made to the exposition of the law by Bowen, L. J., in Quartz Hill v. Eyre (1), where that learned Judge stated that, in the present day and according to our present law, the bringing of an ordinary action, however malicious and however great the want of reasonable and probable cause, will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. It is not necessary for us to examine whether this statement embodies an inflexible rule of law, or whether there are not well recognised exceptions to it. There is high authority for the proposition that it is an actionable wrong maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause to issue execution against the property of a judgment-debtor, for example, to seize his goods under a writ of feri facias after the judgment debt has been paid; this is not a trespass, it has been said, for the judgment still stands and will support the writ of execution, but it is an actionable abuse of judicial process [Churchill v. Siggers (2)]. But whether this is trespass, as indicated in Clissold v. Cratchley (3), or malicious abuse of judicial process it is actionable. A similar view was adopted in Raj Chandra Roy v. Shama Soondari (4), and is supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mudhun Mohun Doss v. Gokul Doss (5). Sir James Colville observed in the case last mentioned that, if it was important in India to check any tendency to resist the execution of legal process, it was hardly less important to maintain the principle that they who misused legal process were responsible for the consequences of that misuse. The broad proposition formulated by the learned Vakil for the Appellant, that the suit as framed is not maintainable, cannot consequently be supported, and the statement that the institution of an ordinary civil action however unfounded, vexatious and malicious it may be, is not a good cause of action must be qualified when there has been arrest of person or seizure of property. We may add that sec. 491 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 expressly recognises such right of action, for it authorises a Court which has issued an order for arrest or attachment in the course of a suit, to award compensation not exceeding Rs. 1,000, if it should appear that such arrest or attachment was applied for on insufficient grounds; it then provides that the Court shall not award a larger amount than it would do in a suit for compensation and that an order under the section shall bar a suit for compensation in respect of such arrest or attachment. Sec. 497 embodies similar provisions with regard to compensation for the issue of an injunction on insufficient grounds. In fact, it is not difficult to trace decisions in the reports in which this principle has been directly or indirectly recognised. [Doyal v. Dwarka Nath (6), Huro Soonduree v. Bungshee Mohun (7), Mahomed Rezaood-din v. Hossain Buksh (8), Gobardhan v. Banee Chandra (9), Wilson v. Kankhya Sahoo (10), Nund Kumar v. Gour Sankar (11) and Dharma Narain v. Sreemutty Dossee (12)]. The learned Vakil for the Respondent also relied upon Art. 29 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, to show that the Legislature contemplated suits for compensation for wrongful seizure of immoveable property under legal process. It is not necessary, however, to place any reliance upon the provisions of the Limitation Act, because, as has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, nothing in the Limitation Act can give rise to a cause of action unless a right to sue exists independently of those provisions. [Hurinath v. Mothoor Mohan (13) and Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna (14)]. The question next arises what is the precise nature of the right of action of the Plaintiff in the case before us. In our opinion, the Plaintiff, if entitled to damages, can succeed, not on the ground of malicious abuse of legal process, but on the ground that the Defendant has committed an act of trespass. As we have already pointed out, the order of this Court of the 2nd March 1906 was to the effect that, unless the Plaintiff paid to the Defendant the costs of that litigation within six weeks of the arrival of the record in the Subordinate Court, the appeal would stand dismissed with costs. It has not been suggested and we do not think it could reasonably be suggested that this order implied that the money should be handed over personally to the Defendant: payment into Court to the credit of the Defendant would, in our opinion, be sufficient compliance with the direction of this Court. Such payment was, as has now been ascertained, actually made within the prescribed time. Consequently the conditional order never ripened into a decree in favour of the Defendant; in other words, the essence of the matter is that the Defendant had not, in the eye of law, any decree for costs against the Plaintiff which he was competent to execute. We are not now concerned with the question whether there was not reasonable excuse for the conduct of the Defendant. The fact remains that the Defendant obtained an attachment of the property of the Plaintiff under the erroneous impression that he had a decree capable of execution; the Defendant is, therefore, liable to be sued by the Plaintiff for damages in trespass. This view is amply supported by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Clissold v. Cratchley (3). In that case, execution was taken out by a solicitor for costs payable under an order of Court; the debt had, in fact, been paid at his office to a clerk, who had authority to receive it, on the very date that the writ was issued but about three hours before. As soon as execution was levied, the judgment-debtor apprised the solicitor that the debt had been paid, and execution was forthwith withdrawn. In an action against the solicitor and his client to recover damages for improper levy of execution, it was held by the Court of Appeal that, although neither the solicitor nor his client had sued out the writ maliciously they were liable in trespass. Fletcher Moulton, L. J., observed that a writ of execution upon a satisfied judgment was null and void. Farwell, L. J., added that no writ of execution can lawfully issue on a judgment that has been paid or satisfied before issue of the writ, because there is no judgment left on which to base the writ, so that the writ is void ab initio and trespass will lie against the satisfied creditor and his solicitor who have put the sheriff in motion. Vaughan Williams, L. J., relied upon a passage from Bullen and Leake (Precedents of Pleading, 3rd Ed., p. 353), where it is stated that, if the party arrested can shew that the judgment was satisfied by payment or otherwise before the arrest, he may then maintain an action; the arrest in such a case would in general support an action of trespass. It is fairly clear that the liability is for trespass, not malicious abuse of process ; there is no abuse of process lawfully issued but the institution of proceedings without legal authority in its inception. (Kinhead, Commentaries on Torts, Vol. I, sec. 233 ; Street, Foundations of Legal Liability, Vol. I, p. 334). The substance of the matter is that, if a litigant executes any form of legal process which is invalid for want of jurisdiction, irregularity, or any other reason, and in so doing he commits any act in the nature of trespass to person or property, he is liable therefor in an action of trespass ; it is not necessary to prove any malice or want of reasonable or probable cause. This is an obvious corollary of the elementary principle that mistake, however honest or inevitable, is no defence for him who intentionally interferes with the person or property of another ; the fundamental proposition cannot be disputed that in a case of this description a supposed justification is no justification at all. A litigant who effects an arrest or seizes property must justify the trespass by pleading a valid execution of legal process, and any irregularity or error which has the effect of making the process totally invalid will deprive him of all justification [Painter v. Liverpool Oil Gas Light Company (15) and Brooks v. Hodgkinson (16)]. The learned vakil for the Appellant has, however, laid considerable stress upon the circumstance that in the subsequent suit for rent when objection was taken that the action could not be maintained as the Plaintiff had failed to carry out the order of this Court, the Plaintiff failed to prove that the payment had been made as alleged by him. The learned Vakil has contended that, as execution was taken out after this decision, the Defendant is protected. We are unable to accept this contention as well-founded. It may be conceded that no action will lie against any person for issuing execution or otherwise acting in pursuance of a valid judgment or order of a Court of Justice, even though it is erroneous and even though it is afterwards reversed, or set aside for error. The principle that a valid judgment, however erroneous in law or fact, is a sufficient justification for any act done in pursuance of it was recognised in the cases of Williams v. Smith (17) and Smith v. Sydney (18), but it has no application to the circumstances of the case before us. Here the writ of attachment was not issued on the faith of the decision in the second rent suit which was subsequently set aside by this Court as the ultimate Court of Appeal. The Defendant took out the writ of attachment on the assumption that the order as to payment of costs had not been carried out and there was thus a decree in his favour capable of execution against the Plaintiff. The execution also was based on this theory which had been previously set up successfully to defeat the second rent suit. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Defendant cannot rightly contend that as he relied upon the judgment of a competent Court and as he acted upon the faith of it, however erroneous the judgment might be, he ought to be protected. We must consequently hold that upon the admitted facts, the suit is maintainable, and that the Defendant is liable for damages for trespass. The first contention of the Appellant must, therefore, be negatived.

In so far as the second contention of the Appellant is concerned, namely, that upon the facts found by the District Judge, there was reasonable and probable cause for the attachment effected at his instance, it is not necessary for us to examine it in detail, in the view we take of the scope of the suit and the nature of the liability of the Defendant. As we have already explained the claim cannot be treated as one for damages for malicious abuse of judicial process: it is essentially a suit for damages for trespass. Consequently, the presence or absence of reasonable and probable cause is immaterial. We may add, however, that, upon the facts as already set out, we are not prepared to agree in the conclusion of the learned District Judge: nor are we prepared to accept the contention of the Respondent that the question is one of fact with which this Court is not competent to deal in second appeal. Whether there was reasonable and probable cause is a mixed question of fact and law: we are bound to accept the facts as found by the Court of Appeal below, but we are entitled to examine whether the inference drawn therefrom is legitimate [Panton v. Williams (19), Lister v. Perryman (20), Hailes v. Marks (21), Shama Bibee v. Chairman of Baranagore Municipality (22) and Ram Gopal v. Shamskhatoon (23)]. We need not consider this point in further detail, however, for the reasons stated.

In so far as the third ground urged by the Appellant is concerned it has been argued that the damages have been assessed upon entirely erroneous principles.

The learned District Judge has assessed damages under three heads, namely, first, the value of the indigo crop which deteriorated and ultimately became valueless: secondly, the litigation expenses incurred by the Plaintiff in the execution case, and, thirdly, exemplary damages, as the conduct of the Defendant was inexcusable. In so far as the first of these elements is concerned, we are of opinion that the District Judge was clearly in error. We shall assume that, on the authority of the decision in Ram Kumar Ghose v. Gobind Nath Sandyal (24), the presumption is that when the land was attached, the standing crop also was attached. It may further be assumed that, as laid down in the cases of Chedahal v. Mulchand (25), Madayya v. Yenkata (26), Gangaprosad v. Narain (27) and Sadu v. Sambhu (28), standing crop is immoveable property, though this view may be difficult to reconcile with Surat Lal v. Umar Hazi (29), Mangun Jha v. Dulin Golab (30) and Abdullah v. Asraffali (31). Yet the question remains whether the attachment was the proximate cause of the loss of the crop. As soon as the attachment was effected, the Plaintiff might and ought to have intimated to the Court that if the decree-holder intended to attach, not merely the land, but also the crop, steps had to be taken for the protection of the perishable property. If such a representation had been made, the Court might either have permitted the Plaintiff to cut the crop on such terms as to security as might be reasonable or might have appointed a Receiver. The conduct of the Plaintiff, on the other hand, is inexplicable. He never asked for the direction of the Court and did not make any the slightest effort for the protection of the property. Under these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the loss which may have resulted to the Plaintiff was the inevitable consequence of the attachment effected by the Defendant. In so far as the second element is concerned, the case is equally clear. When the Defendant applied for execution and the Plaintiff objected that the money had been deposited in due time, he had to employ a pleader to search the records to ascertain when the deposit had been made by his officer. It is inconceivable upon what principle the Plaintiff can claim to recover from the Defendant costs so incurred. In so far as the third element is concerned, we need only say that this is manifestly not a case in which exemplary damages can be legitimately claimed. Apart from the question of legal liability, we are unable to hold that the Defendant is in any way to blame for the events that have happened. The Plaintiff sued the Defendant for rent. After the litigation had been carried on to this Court, he found it necessary in his own interest to withdraw from the suit. He obtained what must be deemed an indulgence upon certain terms as to payment of costs. He might have paid the costs to the Defendant personally; in fact upon a strict and literal interpretation of the language of the order, this ought to have been done. Instead of adopting this the obvious course, he deposits the money in Court: but he does not furnish a copy of the challan to the Defendant to enable him to withdraw the money. He seems to have considered that his duty ended as soon as the deposit was made and that it was immaterial whether the Defendant could draw out the money except after considerable search and trouble. By an unfortunate error on the part of the Court officer, an inaccurate entry is made in the deposit register. When in the subsequent rent suit the Defendant asserts that the costs have not been deposited, the Plaintiff is unable to prove that he has made the deposit, and it is not till a special enquiry has been directed by this Court, that the Plaintiff is able to establish the fact, after as he admits, an expensive search by his pleader. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to appreciate how any blame can be thrown upon the Defendant for the course which he adopted, namely, to apply for execution to realise the costs due to him. No doubt, the Defendant, as we have already explained, is guilty of trespass. But the case is manifestly not one for exemplary damages. The assessment made by the District Judge cannot, therefore, be supported. The Plaintiff is entitled only to nominal damages which as Lord Halsbury puts it in Mediana v. Comet (32) is not necessarily small damages: nominal damages are allowed in recognition of the fact that there is an infraction of a legal right which though it gives the Plaintiff no right to any real damages at all, yet gives him a right to the verdict or judgment because his legal right has been infringed: in other words, as Holt, C. J., observes in Ashby v. White (33), an action lies for trespass, though it does no damage, for it is an invasion of the property of the Plaintiff and the other has no right to come there. We, therefore, assess the damages at

Rs. 75. But as the claim was grossly exaggerated and based on entirely erroneous grounds, the Appellant must have the costs of this appeal, which we find on assessment amount to an aggregate sum of Rs. 75. Consequently although the Plaintiff obtains a decree for damages, he will realise nothing from the Defendant. The parties will pay their own costs in both the Courts below.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, and the decree of the District Judge discharged. The Plaintiff is declared entitled to damages which are set off against the costs payable to the Defendant. There will, therefore, be no decree in his favour capable of execution.

Appeal allowed.

REV. No. 955 OF 1911.

HOLMWOOD, J.	{	SHYAMA CHURN MAJUM-
SHARFUDDIN, J.		DAR and others, Accused,
1911,		Petitioners,
21, November.		v.
		THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 225, 353 and 147—Arrest on a warrant allowing bail without intimating that bail has been allowed, legality of—Lawful custody—Rescue from custody.

On a warrant which provided for bail a constable arrested one S without giving him intimation that bail had been allowed ; S was then rescued by a number of persons, who assaulted the constable.

Held—That the arrest of S was illegal, as before actually making the arrest the constable should certainly have said, " Can you give the required bail ?"

That as S was not in lawful custody, his rescue did not constitute any offence and the persons who rescued S had the right of private defence and as they, under the circumstances of the case, had not exceeded that right, they could not be held guilty of any offence.

This was a Rule granted on the 7th of August 1911 against an order of Babu Amrita Lal Gupta, Deputy Magistrate of Magurah, dated the 23rd of June 1911, convicting Petitioner No. 1, under secs. 225B and 353, I. P. C., and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for three months under the former section and to three months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter section (to run consecutively), and sentencing the rest to rigorous imprisonment for one year each, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by Mr. H. C. Liddell, Sessions Judge of Jessore, on the 28th of July 1911.

The facts material to the report were briefly as follows:—

A warrant had been issued on 16th January 1911 for the arrest of Shyama Charan Majumdar in connection with a case under secs. 147, 325 and 379, I. P. C., and on 2nd March 1911 in the early morning a constable, Sital Sukul, was deputed by the Sub-Inspector of Police along with numerous chowkidars and others to go to Shyama Charan's house, surround it and arrest him : the house was surrounded about dawn and Shyama Charan was found at the south of the house where he was arrested by Sital Sukul, on which Shyama Charan raised a cry and some persons together with the son of Shyama Charan came and dragged Syama Charan with the constable ; the constable was beaten on the back with a lathi and Shyama Charan was rescued. It appears that the warrant for the arrest of Shyama Charan had allowed bail but the constable made the arrest without giving any intimation that bail had been allowed.

SHYAMA CHURN MAJUMDAR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

On these allegations the Petitioners were prosecuted on charges under secs. 147, 225 and 353, I. P. C., and were convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. On appeal the conviction and sentences were upheld.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Deben-dra Nath Bagchi for the Petitioners.

We are opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on the first three grounds taken together which practically amounts to this, that a small bail was entered upon the warrant and that the constable did not give the slightest intimation to the arrested person of the fact that bail had been allowed. On the contrary he appears to have said that it was no use rescuing the prisoner because the daroga was coming presently. The warrant had been made over by the daroga for execution and it was the constable's bounden duty under the law to at once state that bail would be taken. Before actually making the arrest he should certainly have said, "Can you give the required bail?" We are of opinion that the arrest was illegal.

Now comes the question whether the accused persons were justified by the law of private defence in committing a common assault upon the constable. The medical evidence clearly shows that nothing but simple hurt was caused. The conviction under sec. 147 must clearly go, inasmuch as the accused was not in lawful custody. For the same reason the conditions under secs. 225 and 353 must go; and having regard to the medical evidence we cannot find that there was any offence committed by exceeding the right of private defence.

The Rule, therefore, must be made absolute and the Petitioners discharged from their bail.

1912,		Petitioners,
17, January.		v.
		THE KING-EMPEROR,

Bail bond—Bail, prisoner on, committing suicide—Discharge of sureties.

When a person who has been let out on bail commits suicide, the sureties are discharged from their obligation to produce him.

This was a Rule issued on the 4th of December 1911 against an order of Mr. J. Vas, District Magistrate of Maldah, dated the 19th of August 1911, directing forfeiture of Rs. 5 out of the money stipulated in the surety bond, an application for a revision of which order was dismissed by Mr. A. Majid, Sessions Judge of Rajshahye, on the 19th of September 1911.

The Petitioners stood sureties for the production of one Satya Narain Singh who was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 2 years under sec. 377, I. P. C., by the Deputy Magistrate of Maldah, and was released on bail pending the disposal of an appeal preferred by him before the Sessions Judge.

The said appeal was ultimately dismissed and the Petitioners were called upon to produce Satya Narain.

The Petitioners were unable to produce him before the Magistrate as he had committed suicide by hanging before the Petitioners came to know the result of the appeal.

NRISINGHA DEB CHATTERJEE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The Petitioners stated all these facts before the District Magistrate who nevertheless directed that the Petitioners should forfeit Rs. 5 each in respect of their bail bonds.

The Petitioners thereupon obtained this Rule.

Babu Akhil Bandhu Guha for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule must clearly be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. It is absurd to contend that when a person on bail commits suicide the sureties are liable for default in his appearance. The proposition only needs to be stated to expose its fallacy. The order of the lower Court will be discharged and the money if paid will be refunded.

A servant employed in the Petitioner's ganja shop left the shop and was found travelling with 2½ seers of ganja from the District of Arrah to Bindhyachal and was convicted under sec. 46 of the Excise Act :

Held—That the Petitioner could not be punished for the servant's act under sec. 56 of the Act when it did not appear that the servant was acting for the Petitioner's benefit and within the scope of his employment.

This was a Rule granted on the 5th June 1911 against an order of S. M. Abul Hayat, Deputy Magistrate of Arrah, dated the 29th of April 1911, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 46 read with sec. 56 of the Excise Act and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. Caspersz and Babu Surendra Kumar Bose for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner, Uttam Chand, has an extensive business in excise shops of which he holds a considerable number in nine districts of this province including a ganja shop at Koelwar in the District of Arrah. His Koelwar servant, Lakhi Chand, was convicted, under sec. 46 of the Bengal Excise Act (V of 1909), for being in possession of two and a half seers of ganja which he was attempting to export from Arrah District to Bindhyachal. Lakhi Chand confessed his guilt.

The question, now, is whether the conviction of the Petitioner, the master of Lakhi Chand, can be supported on the language of sec. 56 of the Act. The section is as follows :—"When any offence punishable under sec. 46 is committed by any person in the employ and acting on behalf of the holder of a license granted under this Act, such holder shall also be punishable as if he himself had committed the offence unless he establishes that all due and reasonable precautions were exercised by him to prevent the commission of such offence."

In the opinion of the convicting Magistrate, the Petitioner had so many servants and so much business to attend to that it was due to laxity of supervision on his part that his servant, Lakhi Chand, was able to leave his Koelwar shop and commence travelling to Bindhyachal with 2½ seers of ganja.

The substantial grounds argued on this Rule are two in number. With regard to the fourth ground specified in the petition, there is no finding, in the judgment of the convicting Magistrate, that the 2½ seers of ganja belonged to the Petitioner, that is, came from his Koelwar shop. The Magistrate says:—"It is extremely probable that he (Lakhi Chand) took the ganja from the Koelwar excise shop of the the accused." That, however, is not a sufficient finding on which to implicate the master of Lakhi Chand. The other ground—the 3rd in the petition—is that Lakhi Chand was acting outside the scope of his employment and was not acting on behalf of the Petitioner when he committed the offence under sec. 46 (a) of the Excise Act.

Sec. 46 enumerates various offences, and we think that if a master is to be held liable for all the acts of his servants, his liability must extend to all parts of sec. 46. As we put it to the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, who appeared to show cause, "If his servant Lakhi Chand had cultivated ganja in the garden of his own private residence would the master be liable for that act?" The only possible answer to this question is in the negative.

The language of sec. 56 is very clear and does not, in any way, conflict with the general principle alluded to in Suffer Ally Khan v. Golam Hyder Khan (1), namely, that a master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant unless he can be shown to have expressly authorised it. That case was one of mischievousness, but the principle is of extensive authority. Under sec. 56, the prosecution must show that Lakhi Chand was not only in the employ of the Petitioner, but also acted on his behalf in removing the ganja from his shop. Lakhi Chand was, presumably, committing a criminal offence. His business was to remain at the Koelwar shop, and there to conduct sales for the Petitioner; but when he travelled beyond the scope of that business, it is not possible to implicate the Petitioner in his acts which were not done for the benefit of the Petitioner but rather for Lakhi Chand's private purposes. The expression "on behalf of" connotes some benefit to the person on whose behalf another person may act.

Various authorities have been cited to us on constructions of the Arms Act, the Opium Act, and the Bengal Motor Car and Cycle Act. We have examined them all but we have not derived such assistance from them as would warrant a detailed discussion. There is one case, to which we may allude, namely, Emperor v. Haji Shaik Mahomed Shustari (2), which was cited to us by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer; but it does not carry his arguments any further than the principle we have already mentioned. No doubt, when a servant does anything within the scope of his employment for that purpose, his action will be binding on the master, and the master will be criminally liable for any wrongful act of the servant. In the particular case cited, which was under the Indian Emigration Act (XXI of 1883), the master was deemed to be so liable.

In these circumstances, we think the conviction cannot be supported. It is therefore set aside and the Rule made absolute. Any fine paid or levied, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

REUTER WIRES SOME OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE new India Bill which was introduced into Parliament on Thursday last. The Bill is described as one "to make such amendments in the laws relating to the Government of India as are consequential on the appointment of a separate Governor of Fort William in Bengal and other administrative changes in the local Government of India." The Bill makes an amendment of the schedule of the Indian Councils Act of 1909 by which a maximum of fifty members each is provided for the Legislative Councils of Bengal and Behar. Sec. 4 of the Bill renews the powers of the Governor-General to redistribute territories and extends this power to territories under his immediate authority and management as well as to those of Presidencies and Lieutenant-Governorships. By another provision the Advocate-General of Bengal ceases to be, as in practice he has for some time ceased to be an ex-officio member of the Bengal Legislative Council.

FROM THIS BRIEF SUMMARY IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO offer much comment on the Bill. In our article on the subject of the legality of the recent redistributions we pointed out that the creation of the Province of Behar by proclamation was an act of doubtful legality and that the abolition of the Council of Eastern Bengal and Assam might possibly be ultra vires of the Government of India and suggested a validation of these measures by the Parliamentary Bill. The Bill now introduced evidently does not do that but by an amendment of the Indian Councils Act of 1909 recognising the new Province of Behar and eliminating the Council of Eastern Bengal indirectly seeks to give Parliamentary sanction to the two acts of doubtful validity.

THE EXTENSION OF THE POWER OF THE GOVERNOR-General to make redistribution is evidently meant to remove any similar causes of uncertainty for the future. We are not at all sure that this new extension of the powers of the Governor-General is at all desirable or necessary. In the redistribution of the territories between the provinces it has now been definitely recognised that the wishes of the people affected by the transfer should be considered. If that is so, we should think that the absolutely uncontrolled power of the Governor-General should rather be restricted than enlarged. With the partition of Bengal still fresh in our memory we cannot look upon the further extension of the powers of the Governor-General in this direction without serious apprehensions. There is absolutely no reason why the Legislative Council should not be consulted in carrying out changes in boundaries between the provinces, specially when it has been shown by recent experiences that a mere redistribution of boundaries may be a source of really serious grievances amongst the people. We must reserve further remarks on the subject till we have a fuller account of the provisions of the Bill.

THE JUDGMENT OF MR. JUSTICE FLETCHER IN Cohen v. Wilkie, reported at p. 534 of the last number, is of importance as pointing out the difference between the law relating to agreements in restraint of trade as obtaining in England and that embodied in sec. 27 of the Indian Contract Act. It is not necessary for our present purpose to take special note of the change in the current of legal opinion effected by the decision of the House of Lords in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Co., [1894] A. C. 535, which virtually abolished the somewhat arbitrary test laid down in previous decisions as to when such agreements should be pronounced unreasonable and on that ground unenforceable. Suffice it to say that English law has, both before and after this case, required that an agreement restraining a person from the exercise of "a lawful profession, trade or business of any kind" (to quote the language of the Indian Statute) to be unenforceable must be shown to have been unreasonable.

SEC. 27 OF THE INDIAN CONTRACT ACT HOWEVER declares all such agreements (subject to certain exceptions in favour of co-partners and sellers of the good-will of a business) to be void and inoperative. It is idle to speculate on the reasons which led the Indian Legislature to make this departure from legal ideas prevailing in England. It may be, as suggested by Mr. Justice Kindersleys in Oakes & Co. v. Jackson, I. L. R. 1 Mad. 134, that "trade in India is in its infancy and the Legislature may have wished to make the smallest number of exceptions to the rule against contracts whereby trade may be restrained" or, what is more likely, this may be (as has been suggested by Sir Frederick Pollock) one of the many instances of careless drafting which are by no means uncommon in the Indian Contract Act.

BE THAT AS IT MAY AND QUITE APART FROM THE provisions of sec. 27 of the Contract Act, the decision of Fletcher, J., seems to be fully justified by the facts of the case. The particular clause in the agreement in the circumstance of the case could not reasonably be enforced by injunction even under English law. Mr. Cohen had ceased to employ Mr. Allan Wilkie and his option under the contract to employ Mr. Wilkie for a further period had not been exercised. Even under English law as recently interpreted by Lord Justice Vaughan Williams in the Carl Rosa Opera Co. Ltd. v. Britt, noted by us at p. 97 (xcvii) in this volume, Mr. Cohen could not prevent Mr. Wilkie by injunction from performing elsewhere when he himself did not want or care to employ him. It ought to be noted that in the Carl Rosa case the Plaintiffs who had the option, gave notice to Defendant to renew and not to perform elsewhere but Defendant also gave notice to leave. The Plaintiffs thereupon filled up his place, which was interpreted by His Lordship as an acceptance by the Plaintiffs of the repudiation by Defendant of the contract and injunction was refused. The facts of this case are much stronger than Cohen's case and we fail to comprehend how after failure on the part of Cohen to exercise the option there could be any foundation for a case for injunction.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL—Ex parte Robinson & others. Before LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS, FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 29th February 1912.

Bias in a trial Judge, nature of, for a writ of prohibition or mandamus actual bias in fact, not essential.

This was a petition by way of appeal. The facts were as follows.

The question of the renewal of an inn was referred to the Justices of Halifax. They refused it and one of the Justices intimated that it was done by six votes to five. Subsequently the said Justice (R.) published in a newspaper the names of the Justices and the manner each voted. Another Justice W. thereupon wrote to the newspaper:—

"Allow me to protest most emphatically against the action of Mr. R. in placing my name amongst these who voted for the retaining of the licence of the Malt Shovel Hotel. I should be nothing less than a traitor, considering the position I hold, if I had voted as he states in his letter. I did not vote for its retaining, but for its refusal. I am not ashamed of the publicity he has given to my name if he had placed it in its proper place."

The inn-keepers consequently asked for an order nisi calling upon the Justices to show cause why they should not be prohibited from proceeding further with the matter and as to why a writ of mandamus should not issue against them to hear the application for renewal according to law. Justice W. explained his protest by stating in an affidavit.

"In writing the letter I had in view solely my position as a justice of the peace for the said borough, and my duty as I conceived it to be to act when sitting as such Justice in accordance with the evidence given before me."

It appeared that Justice W. had been for 21 years the Secretary of the Unity Tent Branch of the Independent Order of Rechabites, as a member of which society he had signed the following declaration:—"I hereby declare that I will abstain from all intoxicating liquors. . . . I will not engage in the traffic of them, but in all possible ways will discountenance the use, manufacture, and sale of them."

The Court below dismissed the application which gave rise to the present petition.

The Court (LORD JUSTICE KENNEDY dissenting) allowed the appeal, and granted the rule. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:—

It was not suggested that the mere fact that a Justice was a Rechabite or a member of some total abstinence society rendered him unfit to act as Magistrate in those cases raising the question of renewal or non-renewal of a licence.

He could not doubt that the words in Mr. W.'s letter—meant "considering the position I hold" "as a lifelong member of the Rechabite Society." The suggestion put forward here was that Mr. W. in his letter was expressing a view of his obligations to the society to which he belonged which rendered him unfit to take part as a Justice in these licensing cases because of the view of his obligations to that society which he therein expressed, and that the letter meant that if he voted in favour of a renewal he would be a traitor to that society. It was suggested in Mr. W.'s affidavit that that was an impossible view to take. He (the Lord Justice) did not suggest that Mr. W. was consciously misstating his view; but from what he knew of the Rechabites and of total abstainers he thought they would be the first to admit that, if persons took strong views, not only on temperance questions, but also on the burning questions of the day, they were very likely to deceive themselves.

Of course, he did not attribute any wilful misstatement to Mr. W. but what he really suggested was that the five Magistrates who were in the minority were all traitors. He could not have meant that, and if he did not mean that, what did he mean? Obviously he was referring to his position as Secretary of the Rechabites' Society, and Mr. Elliot had admitted very frankly that, if that were so, it would involve holding that Mr. W. was so affected with a leaning as to what he ought to do in every case as to render bias on his part likely.

It was not necessary to prove bias in fact. If there was such a probability the Court ought not to inquire whether there was bias in fact or whether there was not plenty of evidence to support the conclusion at which he had arrived. As a matter of fact there was plenty of evidence here which had been read to the Court. The question, however, was not whether there was bias in fact, but whether the circumstances were such as to make bias so probable that the Justice was placed in such a position that he ought not to take part in the case.

LORD JUSTICE KENNEDY who dissented thought that the words used in the letter meant that, sitting as a Magistrate and having regard to the evidence he (Mr. W.) would have been nothing less than a traitor to his oath as a Magistrate if he had acted otherwise.

Messrs. Elliot, K. C., and Williamson showed cause.

Messrs. Danckwerts, K. C., and Compston in support.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Lever Brothers, "Ld." v. Masters' Equitable Pioneer Society, "Ld." Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 2nd March 1912.

Costs, discretion as to allowing.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J., and raised the question of allowing costs in an action. The Appellants sued for injunction to restrain the Defendants from passing off soaps not manufactured by the Plaintiff under certain names. The Court below ordered that having regard to the undertaking given by the Defendants and accepted by the Plaintiff no injunction was necessary, and it passed no order as to costs. Hence this appeal which was dismissed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said:—

It was a case in which costs were in the discretion of the Judge, and there was no appeal without leave, but in the present case leave had been given. What was the duty of the Court of Appeal where leave to appeal had been given?

It was not open to them to take a different view than had been laid down in Rotch v. Crosbie, (54 Solicitor's Journal 30), following the decision of the Court of Appeal in Bew v. Bew, ([1899] 2 Ch. 467), which was a strong case because it was a considered judgment delivered after consultation with the Judges of the other Court. The principle was that if the Court of Appeal was satisfied that the Judge had not applied some rule which in fact excluded his discretion, it was necessary to show that there had been no proper exercise of his discretion. That was the principle which the Court was bound to follow. The Court was bound to ask whether there were circumstances which justified the learned Judge in exercising his discretion as he did. Reading the judgment of the learned Judge it was plain that there were ample circumstances.

KING'S BENCH.—Whiteman v. Newey. Before JUSTICES HAMILTON and LUSH. 9th February 1912.

Racing debts—Plea under Gaming Act defeated by fresh consideration.

This was an appeal from a decision of a County Court Judge. There was a dispute about racing debts between the Plaintiff and the Defendant. They agreed to refer it to arbitration. The award was in favour of the Plaintiff but the Defendant nevertheless refused to pay. Hence the suit to which the Defendant pleaded the Gaming Act. The Court below dismissed the claim. On appeal the judgment was reversed. The learned Judges held that upon the facts there was a new promise to pay by the Defendant founded upon a fresh consideration which was sufficient to prevent the operation of the Gaming Act.

KING'S BENCH.—Lasarus v. Cairn Line of Steamships, "Ed." Before MR. JUSTICE SCRUTON. 14th February 1912.

Contract, Implied warranty.

This was an action for damages for breach of a contract. The Defendant Company used to run steamers between England and the United States and Canada, and in respect of Steerage passengers had a keen competition to meet with another Company. The Defendant entered into a contract with the Plaintiff whereby they agreed to accept steerage passengers booked by the Plaintiff only. The term fixed was 3 years. Within six months the Plaintiff and the Defendant worked so well that the competing Steamship Company determined to buy up the Defendant's interest in that particular traffic. The Defendant Company thereupon asked the Plaintiff not to book any more passengers for them. Hence this suit. The Plaintiff contended that although there was no express term in the agreement which said that the Defendants must keep up regular sailings, the Defendants had impliedly contracted that they would not voluntarily put it out of their power during the three years to carry out the sailings to America. The learned Judge dismissed the claim. In the course of his judgment he said there were four propositions which could be derived from decided cases:—

(1) That the first thing to consider was the express words the parties had used; (2) that a term they had not expressed was not to be implied because the Court thought it was a reasonable term, but only if the Court thought it was necessarily implied in the nature of the contract the parties had made; (3) that where there was a principal subject-matter in the power of one of the parties, and an accessory or subordinate benefit arising by contract out of its existence to the other party, the Court would not, in the absence of express words, imply a term that the subject-matter should be kept in existence merely in order to provide the subordinate or accessory benefit to the other party; (4) but that where there was an express term requiring the continuance of the principal subject-matter, or giving the Plaintiff a right to a continuing benefit, the Courts would not imply a condition that the Plaintiff's right in this respect should cease on certain events not expressly provided for.

The first two propositions were clearly stated and illustrated in the decisions of The Moorcock (13 P. D., 157) and Hamlyn v. Wood 1891, 2 Q. B., 488.

The third proposition was illustrated—(1) by Rhodes v. Forwood (1 App. Cas., 256), where an agent who had the sole right of sale of coals sent from a particular colliery to Liverpool, but no express words giving him a right to require any coals to be sent to Liverpool, was held not entitled to complain of the sale of the colliery which prevented his principals from even considering if they would send coals to Liverpool, the contract sought to be implied being the second one contended for in this case; (2) by Northey v. Trevillion (18 The Times Law Reports, 648), where an agent who was for ten years sole buying agent in England for a firm in India, without an express provision entitling him to receive any orders, was held not justified in complaining of the dissolution of the firm in India, which prevented buying orders from coming forward. Again the contract sought to be implied was the second one contended for here; (3) by Hamlyn v. Wood [1891] 2 Q. B. 488, where a Plaintiff who had brought all the refuse of a brewery for a term of years, without any provision as to the quantity he was to receive, was held not entitled to complain of the sale of the brewery, whereby the Defendants had no longer any refuse to supply. Similar decisions were In re English and Scottish Insurance Company, ex parte Maclure (L. R., 5 Ch., 737), and Bovine (Limited) v. Dent (21 The Times Law Reports, 82).

The fourth proposition was illustrated by Turner Goldsmith (1891, 1 Q. B., 544), where the Court, finding an express contract to employ the agent for five years, declined to imply a condition that the employment should cease if the principal discontinued business after the destruction of his manufactory by fire: and by Ogdon v. Nelson 1905, A. C., 109, where the Court, finding an express promise to pay £2,00,000, declined to imply a term that the payment was conditional on the business continuing.

Turning to the contract in this case, the Plaintiff to succeed, said his Lordship, must find a contract express or by necessary implication, by the Defendants, to run ships in the North Atlantic trade, with no implied term that the obligation shall cease if the Defendants sell their line. He admits there is no express obligation to run ships at all. What does he propose of necessity to imply? How often are the ships run; at what seasons? Are they to run at a loss to the Defendants, that the Plaintiff may make his commission? If a ship is lost at sea, must the Defendants replace it, however bad trade may be?

The Defendants were entering into a trade where they had to fight a ring, and bound themselves to charge, if they ran ships, a freight 5s. lower than the lowest freight of their competitors. Such an enterprise might lead to enormous losses. Was it necessary, was it even reasonable, that they should bind themselves to run, at whatever loss, for three years, that the agent might earn his commissions? Is it not sufficient protection to him that if they run, he must be the sole passenger agent; that if they do not run fortnightly he can act, as he did, for other lines; and that if they enter the North Atlantic conference he is provided for? That the agreement does not expressly provide for them going out of the trade by being bought out may be a casus omissus; but how can the Court say that an agreement that they shall not do so must necessarily be implied, or conjecture with any certainty whether the parties did overlook the contingency, and what agreement they would have made if they had not overlooked it?

The view I take of this agreement is similar to that which the House of Lords took in Rhodes v. Forwood (1 App. Cas., 256). There appears to me to be no express agreement that the Defendants shall run ships at all. They are the parties on whom the loss of running ships will fall, and they are left to run as many or as few as they think expedient in their own interest. The Plaintiff is content to provide passengers for the ships they do run, thinking that the better he does his work the more likely they are to run ships, and omitting to provide for the contingency of their retiring from the trade. In my opinion, there is neither an express nor an implied contract that the Defendants shall run any ships at all; and therefore there is no such implication as the Plaintiff desires to make.

Messrs. Atkin, K. C., Bailhache, K. C., and Roche for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Sanderson, K. C., and Chaytor for the Defendants.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Palmer. Before MR. JUSTICE EVE. 5th March 1912.

Income or capital, whether sums received by trustees to a Will were.

This was the trial of a summons which raised the question whether certain sums of money received by trustees were to be treated as income or capital.

The testator died in 1906, and at the time of his death he was entitled to ordinary and deferred share in the Société Egyptienne. In July 1905, the company sold and transferred its assets to the Crédit Foncier Egyptien. In March 1909 at an extraordinary general meeting it was resolved to wind up the Société Egyptienne, and the liquidation was still proceeding. Since the death of the testator the trustees of his Will had received various sums and various distributions of shares of the Crédit Foncier in respect of the ordinary and deferred shares of the Société Egyptienne held by the trustees.

The learned Judge held that the distributions were income and payments received since liquidation were capital. He said:—

The general principle of Bouch v. Sproule (12 A. C., 385), the leading case on the point, had been stated by Mr. Justice Sirling in In re Malam ([1894] 3 Ch., at p. 585), that "when a testator or settlor directs or permits the subject of his disposition to remain as shares or stock in a Company which has the power either of distributing its profits as dividends or of converting them into capital, and the company validly exercises this power, such exercise of its power is binding on all persons interested under him in the shares, and consequently what is paid by the company as dividend goes to the tenant for life, and what is paid by the company to the shareholder as capital or appropriated as an increase of the capital stock in the concern enures to the benefit of all who are interested in the capital."

If ever there was a case in which that principle ought to be applied it was the present. The testator was one of the founders of the company, and made his will at a time when he was president of the Company. The question was whether the company had power to treat these payments as capital, and, if so, whether it had exercised such power. The company had power to distribute excess of capital as dividends, and if the company were not distributing the excess as profits they were doing what they ought not to do. That really disposed of the whole matter. The distribution purported to be made under the articles as profit, and was an exercise of the power to distribute as profits.

Messrs. Underhill, Lawrence, K. C., Hodge, Whinney and Austen-Carmell for the various parties.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Re Conseulo, Duchess of Manchester. Before MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN EADY. 12th February 1912.

Testator domiciled in England—Liability to estate duty for foreign personal assets.

The Duchess of Manchester who was domiciled in England died leaving valuable personal property in England and in America. By her will she appointed executors in both countries and both took out probate. The question now raised was whether estate duty was payable in respect of the American property in the hands of the executors there by the English executors. The learned Judge held that they were liable. In the course of his judgment he said:—

It was well established that whether legacy or succession duty was payable depended on the domicile of the testator, and was not affected by the question where the property might happen to be locally situate at the death. Thompson v. Advocate-General (12 C. and F. 1) finally established this rule.

The question arose again in Attorney-General v. Napier (6 Ex. 217), and it was held that the point was concluded by that case. On this principle it was decided that where a British official on duty in India died there, not having acquired a domicile there, the whole of his property was liable to legacy duty here, although it was almost entirely situate there at the time of death. In re Tootall's Trusts (23 Ch. D. 532) was to the same effect.

The Finance Act did not adopt for the purpose of estate duty the principle of fictitious situation of personal property in the place of domicile. All personal property physically situated here at the death of the owner was liable to estate duty even though the deceased had a foreign domicile—Winans v. Attorney-General ([1910] A. C. 27). The Act in sec. 2 (2) recognised the actual physical situation of personal property out of the United Kingdom, and included it for the purpose of estate duty only if legacy or succession duty would have been payable in respect of it. That question could only be solved by reference to the domicile of the deceased.

The result is that the American personalty of the testatrix, who was domiciled here, must be included in property passing on the death in respect of which estate duty is payable.

The next question is what is the extent of the liability of any of the English executors for estate duty on American personalty. It was urged that they had not possession of the funds or the means of compelling information about them, and could neither ascertain nor provide for the amount of duty. Section 6 (2) said that the executor of the deceased shall pay the estate duty in respect of all personal property (wheresoever situate) of which the deceased was competent to dispose at his death on delivering the Inland Revenue affidavit.

The testatrix was competent to dispose at death of the American personalty, and therefore the executors were under an obligation to pay estate duty in respect thereof, subject, however, to the limitation to be presently mentioned. Sub-section (3) says that an executor not knowing the value may undertake to bring into the account when that value is ascertained, and sec. 8 (3) said that the executor shall be accountable for the estate duty in respect of all personal property wheresoever situate of which the deceased was competent to dispose at his death, but shall not be liable for any duty in excess of the assets which he has received as executor or might, but for his own neglect or default, have received. There was thus no hardship on the executor. He was only liable to the extent of the assets he might receive and which would be available to satisfy his liability. The right of the Crown to duty and the limited liability of the executor to pay it were, in his Lordship's opinion, free from doubt.

His Lordship therefore determined that the executors were liable to estate duty on all the assets of which the testatrix was competent to dispose, including the American personalty to the extent of assets come to their hands or which would have so come but for their own neglect or wilful default. The same point recently came before the Court in Scotland in the case of Re Douglas, the papers in which were provided by the Commissioners, and which was decided on 31st October last by Lord Cullen, the Lord Ordinary in Exchequer causes. Lord Cullen there said:—

"The qualification which Mr. Murray sought attach to sec. 6 of the Act, to the effect that the executor was only liable to account for duty payable on the estate which has come into his hands or is within his title, is not expressed in it, and I have no sufficient grounds for implying it. The words of the section seem to me to be quite plute." His Lordship entirely concurred in that view.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 4 OF 1912. THE EMPEROR v. KHUDU MEHTAR, Accused. 27th March 1912.

Insanity, nature of evidence to prove.

The accused committed the murder of his own child and mother-in-law and attempted to kill his wife and another person whom he believed to be the paramour of his wife. He was tried by a jury who found him not guilty but the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the verdict made the reference to the High Court. It was argued inter alia that the fact that the accused did not make any attempt to conceal his guilt showed that he was insane.

Their Lordships observed :—

* * * * * As to the absence of any attempt at concealment we find that in this country at any rate, when men give way to homicidal impulse and kill their wives and other relatives upon suspicion of unchastity, it is almost the invariable practice for them to make no attempt at concealment. So far from agreeing with the learned doctors in England, who lay down the proposition that the absence of any attempt at concealment is a sign of insanity, we do not think any such doctrine applies to this country. It is the experience of both of us that it is very common for no attempt at concealment to be made. * * * * * We have already shown that the motive for committing all these murders was the same. They were all committed on the same impulse and the number of them does not in any way show insanity. It does show that want of self-control which Lord Justice Bramwell says is the justification for the law of England, which is allowed by the Penal Code in this country, being what it is. The law has expressly excluded cases of mere homicidal impulse from the exception to the guilt of murder by reason of unsoundness of mind. The examples of unsoundness of mind of the description which would bring the case within sec. 84, I. P. C., are very well given at p. 607 of the Ruling in Queen-Empress v. Kader Nasyer Shah, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 604."

Their Lordships convicted the accused under secs. 302 and 307, I. P. C., but in consideration of the fact that the accused's mind was deranged by illness and melancholia, sentenced him to transportation for life.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 299 OF 1912. MAHAMMED ISMAIL AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 28th March 1912.

Sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, proceeding under whether litigation between the parties is a good reason for drawing up.

In this case the Magistrate drew up the proceeding under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., in these terms :—"Whereas it appears that various litigations have been going on between the above-mentioned parties and hence there is every likelihood of a breach of the peace within the local limits of my jurisdiction, &c.

Their Lordships in making the Rule absolute observed :—

"The Rule was issued on the ground that the proceedings were incompetent because they only referred to various litigations which have been going on between the parties as the basis for holding that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. The learned Magistrate in a lengthy explanation informs us that there are many other reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace. If so, he must take proceedings according to law after setting out those reasons in a fresh proceeding. The present proceeding is certainly incompetent and must be set aside, &c. &c. . . ."

It was a lease for more than 5 years and it was not granted under the authority of the Court in conformity with the provisions of sec. 14 of the Lunacy Act.

Held—That the lease was voidable.

In this case the lease was avoided by the Plaintiff, who on becoming sui juris, and within the period of limitation, brought the suit electing to treat the lease as a nullity.

Prescription—Right to discharge foul water—Decree, form of.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought to establish the Plaintiff's right to discharge foul water into a water-course running over the Defendant's land and for incidental relief.

A decree was passed in the Plaintiff's favour by the Court of first instance and the lower Court of appeal, and on appeal, the decree of the lower Appellate Court was upheld.

The following decree was passed in the case: "There should be a declaration that the Plaintiff has a right to discharge water through the drain S. A. from his cess-pool, and there must be an injunction that the Defendants do not obstruct him in the use and enjoyment of that right: And, if and so far as is necessary for that purpose, by reason of anything already done, there must be a Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 30—Mortgage without consent of Judge, if valid—Mortgagee, remedy of.

The appeal arose out of a suit upon a mortgage bond executed by the mother of the Defendant while they were minors, in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants' mother was their guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act but she did not obtain permission of the District Judge for the mortgage,

Held—That the mortgage executed without the permission of the Court was not absolutely void but was voidable. That it was not necessary for a person in the position of the Defendants to bring an action to set aside the transaction and that it was sufficient if they declared their will to rescind by way of defence when an action was brought to enforce the mortgage against them. But as the money was raised on the mortgage for the benefit of minor sons, the Defendants could not avoid the mortgage without restoring the benefit which they had received under the mortgage and the equitable doctrine was applicable not only when they were Plaintiffs sue for a declaration that the mortgage not binding but also when they are Defendants in an action upon the mortgage.

The Plaintiff was therefore entitled to enforce the mortgage against the Defendants.

Pre-emption, law of—Application to Hindus in Behar—Formalities to be observed—Performance of same by manager under Court of Wards, when Plaintiff a "disqualified proprietor"—Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879, B. C.), sec. 40—Co-sharers, who are, persons jointly liable to pay Government revenue, if.

In Behar the right of pre-emption is enforceable irrespective of the persuasion of the parties concerned.

FUKEER RAWOT v. SHEIKH EMAMSBUKSH
(1) followed.

Where it was found that the formalities required by law to be performed by the pre-emptor or some one on his behalf were duly performed on behalf of the Plaintiff, who had been declared a disqualified proprietor under the Court of Wards Act, by the manager appointed by the Court of Wards:

Held—That independently of sec. 40 of the Act, as also under powers conferred by that section, the manager was competent to observe the formalities and the validity of his action in the matter did not depend upon the subsequent adoption of it by the Court of Wards.

The fact that the vendor and the pre-emptor were jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the villages comprised in the mehal showed that the latter was a co-sharer and as such entitled to pre-empt.

(1) B. L. R. F. B. Rul. 85; W. R. F. B. 148 (1868).

This was an appeal from a judgment* and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 31st January 1908, which affirmed a judgment and decree of the second Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur, dated the 17th September 1906.

The Plaintiff was the widow of the late Maharajah of Bettiah whose estate was being administered by the Court of Wards; she was represented in the suit by her next friend, Mr. J. R. Lowis, the manager of the estate under the Court of Wards. The suit was brought to establish the Plaintiff's right of pre-emption in respect of certain property situated in the Champaran District in Behar, in which the Plaintiff, the first Defendant and Defendants Nos. 12 to 25 were co-sharers.

The first Defendant was the vendor of the property in dispute, the purchasers being Defendants Nos. 2 to 11 hereinafter referred to as the purchasers. Defendant No. 3 died during the pendency of the case, and by an order, dated 7th February 1906, was represented in the suit by Defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5. Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 to 11 were the present Appellants to His Majesty in Council. Defendants Nos. 12 to 25 were joined as pro forma Defendants, no relief being sought against them.

The property in dispute was the share of the first Defendant in Mehal Motihari, which she had sold to the purchasers by a deed, dated 28th July 1904. The property sold included a small piece of land in the Gaya District to which Plaintiff made no claim, and which was apparently inserted in the deed solely for the purpose of enabling it to be registered at Gaya. The consideration was stated in the deed to be Rs. 39,967. The Plaintiff and the first Defendant claimed that the deed did not include part of the first Defendant's share in Tolah Begampur, which formed part of Mehal Motihari, and this was sold by first Defendant to the Plaintiff by a deed, dated 24th February 1905.

* Reported in I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).

JADU LAL SAHU v. MAHARANI JANKI KOER.

Mr. Lowis, the manager of the Raj, first became aware on the 13th August 1904 that the sale had been completed. The information was conveyed to him by a letter from Mr. Leslie, the solicitor to the Raj.

Mr. Lowis immediately upon receipt of Mr. Leslie's letter performed the ceremony of Talab Mawasibat, and on the 15th August proceeded to Motihari, where he performed the ceremony of Talab Istishad, first at the Raj Office and then at the Collectorate.

The present suit was instituted on the 9th March 1905. The plaint, in addition to setting out the facts as above, further alleged that the consideration for the sale was falsely stated in the deed of 28th July 1904, being, in fact, only Rs. 26,000, and not Rs. 39,967. The Plaintiff prayed for a declaration that she had a right of pre-emption in respect of the first Defendant's share in Mehal Motihari, save and except the share in Tolah Begampur already referred to, but that if it was held that that share passed by the conveyance, then that she had a right of pre-emption in respect of that also, for an enquiry as to the actual consideration paid, and for an order that the purchasers should convey to her the property bought by them, on her paying them the actual consideration found on such enquiry to have been paid.

The first Defendant practically supported the Plaintiff's case.

The purchasers in their written statement raised a number of defences:— They denied that Plaintiff had any cause of action; alleged that the ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad had not been duly performed; that those ceremonies could not be performed for the Plaintiff by her manager; that the real consideration was Rs. 39,969; that the share in Tolah Begampur passed by their conveyance, and that by her subsequent purchase of that share the Plaintiff had lost her right of pre-emption; that the Plaintiff's manager had information of the negotiations for sale long before the execution of the deed of sale, that he refused to pay adequate consideration, and that they on such refusal themselves completed the transaction.

The following issues among others were settled on the 27th September 1905.

"1. Has Plaintiff a cause of action for the suit?"

"2. Could the Plaintiff perform the preliminary ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad through her manager and were those ceremonies duly performed?"

On the 11th July 1906, the purchasers filed a petition praying that the first issue might be disposed of before going to trial of the remaining issues, on the ground that the pre-emptor and purchasers not being Mahomedans, the right of pre-emption could only be based on a local custom, which had not been alleged in the plaint.

After hearing arguments on both sides the Subordinate Judge, on the 14th July 1906, delivered a preliminary judgment on this issue. He held that the purchasers' petition was an attempt to raise a fresh issue, which had not been raised in the written statement, namely, whether such a custom did in fact, exist, and that this issue could not be raised at the stage which the suit had then reached. He further held on the authorities that the adoption of the Mahomedan law of pre-emption by the Hindus in Behar had been judicially recognized, and decided the issue in Plaintiff's favour.

After recording evidence, both oral and documentary, the Subordinate Judge delivered his final judgment on the remaining issues on the 12th September 1906. He first decided in Plaintiff's favour three preliminary points which had been raised by the purchasers, namely, that a Hindu widow could exercise a right of pre-emption, that the manager had under the circumstances power to invest in the purchase of landed property, and that the sanction of the proper authorities had been given to the institution of the suit.

On the second issue he held that the ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad could be performed for Plaintiff by her manager, and that they had in fact been duly performed, and in each case without unnecessary delay. He further held that the true consideration for the sale was Rs. 26,000, and in the result the suit was decreed with costs, and it was ordered that, on payment by Plaintiff to the purchasers of Rs. 26,000 within two months from the date of the judgment, she should get possession of the property in dispute.

Against this decree the purchasers appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal and on the 31st January 1908 the High Court delivered its judgment* affirming the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge on all the issues.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. K. Brown for the Appellant.—The Respondent is not a "sharer" within the meaning of that word in the Hedaya. A co-sharer is a person who has some title, or possession or advantage from land along with another. Mere joint liability for payment of Government revenue is not co-partnership. If the Plaintiff had any right of pre-emption it was confined to 16 villages only. In the remaining her milkeat or estate was quite separate. Wahed Ali Khan v. Hunooman Pershad (2), Gobind Chunder v. Raj Kishore (3). Further the customary law of pre-emption on which the Plaintiff relies must be proved to prevail among the Hindus of this particular district in Behar. The Court below erred in taking judicial notice of the custom. Fukeer Rawol v. Sheikh Emamsbuksh (1). Again, Mr. Lowis, manager, was not competent to perform the ceremonies of talab-i-mawasibat and talab-i-istishad. The powers of a manager of the Court of Wards are defined by Bengal Act IX of 1879, secs. 39 and 40. Nundo Parshad v. Gopal Thakur (4). The Plaintiff could not ratify her agent's act. Ratification to be effective must be made within the time allowed for the exercise of the option and before our right became indefeasible. Reference was made to Indian Contract Act, 1872, sec. 200; Walker v. Furwell (5), Lyell v. Kennedy (6); Fry's Specific Relief (5th Ed.), p. 281, note A. The manager had no right to perform the ceremonies.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—What do you say as to the application of sec. 189, Indian Contract Act?]

It was not an emergency. The section does not supersede Act IX of 1879, B. C., and ought not to be extended to a case like the present. Cunningham and She-phard's Commentary on the Indian Contract Act, p. 425.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Eddis for the Respondent.—The pre-emptor's time to purchase the property does not expire till after the time fixed by the decree. Under the Mahomedan law a pre-emptor has the right of inspection of the property and of refusal to purchase it even after the passing of a decree in his favour. The preliminary demands are meant to indicate an intention to purchase. There is nothing to prevent a manager or agent to make the demands on behalf of his principal. The Respondent is a co-sharer within the meaning of the Mahomedan law.

Hidaya (Harrington's), p. 548, Bk. 38, Ch. I. The essence of the right is that he must be a partner in the land sold. A mehal in India is a unit of property. Every person who is a co-sharer in a mehal is a co-partner. There is a right of pre-emption applicable to a mehal because it is a unit of property and is marked out by boundaries.

(Their Lordships intimated that they did not wish to hear Mr. DeGruyther any further).

Mr. Brown replied.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the Plaintiff-Respondent to establish her right of pre-emption in respect of certain undivided shares in a number of villages comprised in Mehal Motihari, situated in the District of Champaran.

The shares in question belonged to a Mahomedan lady named Barkatunnissa, the first Defendant to this action, who sold the same to the Sahu Defendants by a deed of sale, dated the 28th of July 1904. Barkatunnissa owned an interest in 24 out of the 31 villages comprised in the mehal, whilst the Plaintiff possesses shares in 18. The vendees had admittedly no proprietary interest in Mehal Motihari prior to their purchase from Barkatunnissa.

The Plaintiff claims that as a co-sharer in the mehal she is entitled to the right of pre-emption in respect of the shares sold to the Sahus by the first Defendant.

Champaran appears to have been part of the Civil Division of Saran until some time after the institution of the suit. The action was accordingly brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saran, but owing to the subsequent amalgamation of Champaran with Tirhoot, it was tried before the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur (the Suddar station of Tirhoot) who decreed the Plaintiff's claim. This decree has been affirmed by the High Court of Bengal.

It has been urged on behalf of the Appellants that as the right claimed is a creation of the Mussulman law, and it is not proved that the Mussulman law of pre-emption is in force among the Hindus of the District of Champaran, both the pre-emptor and the vendees being Hindus, the action must fail.

The suit was instituted on the 7th of March 1905, the Sahu Defendants filed their defence on the 16th of June, and issues for trial were settled on the 27th of September 1905. It was not, however, until the 11th of July 1906, when, as the learned Judges of the High Court observe, "the suit was ripe for hearing," that the Sahu Defendants for the first time raised a question as to the existence of the right of pre-emption among the Hindus of Champaran. Both the Courts in India have, in their Lordships' judgment rightly, overruled the Defendants' objection.

The law of pre-emption, under which the Plaintiff claims the right, was introduced into India with the Mahomedan Government. The Province of Behar, to which the District of Champaran appertains, was an integral part of the Mahomedan Empire and consequently it would not be surprising to find that in Behar the right of pre-emption is enforceable irrespective of the persuasion of the parties concerned.

In the case of Fukeer Rawot v. Sheikh Emamsbuksh (1), a Full Bench of the High Court of Bengal gave judicial recognition to the existence of the right of pre-emption among the Hindus of Behar. In delivering the judgment the Chief Justice (Sir Barnes Peacock) reviewed the earlier cases bearing on the subject, and held that :—

" . . . a right or custom of pre-emption is recognised as prevailing among Hindus in Behar, and some other provinces of Western India ; that in districts where its existence has not been judicially noticed, the custom will be matter to be proved ; that such custom when it exists, must be presumed to be founded on and co-extensive with the Mahomedan law upon that subject, unless the contrary be shown ; that the Court may, as between Hindus, administer a modification of that law as to the circumstances under which the right may be claimed, when it is shown that the custom in that respect does not go the whole length of the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, but that the assertion of the right by suit must always be preceded by an observance of the preliminary forms prescribed in the Mahomedan law, which forms appear to have been invariably observed and insisted on through the whole of the cases from the earliest times of which we have record."

In their Lordships' judgment the decision in Fukeer Rawot's case (1) is conclusive on the point raised on behalf of the

(1) B. L. R. F. B. Rul. 85 ; W. R. F. B. 148 (1868).

Defendants. Their abstention from taking the objection in a definite and distinct form at the earliest stage of the case was, it may fairly be presumed, due to the explicit enunciation of the law in the ruling referred to.

It has also been contended that the formalities insisted upon by the Mussulman law as essential preliminaries to the assertion of the right, could not be performed by the manager of the Plaintiff's estate appointed by the Court of Wards.

It appears that the Plaintiff is a "disqualified proprietor" under the Court of Wards Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879), having been declared to be incompetent to manage her property, and her estate is in the charge of the Court of Wards. Sec. 40 of the Act which defines the general duty of managers appointed by the Court of Wards provides that he "shall manage the property committed to him diligently and faithfully for the benefit of the proprietor, and shall in every respect act to the best of his judgment for the ward's interest as if the property were his own."

The Mussulman law insists that the first formality technically called "the immediate demand" should be observed by the pre-emptor or someone on his behalf immediately on receipt of the news of the sale, otherwise the right of pre-emption falls to the ground. The second formality consists in the repetition of the "demand" with as little delay as possible under the circumstances, in the presence of witnesses either before the vendor or the vendee or on the premises. The Courts in India have found that the ceremonies were duly performed by the manager in accordance with the prescriptions of the law. Had he failed in performing either of the ceremonies, he would have caused irreparable loss to the Plaintiff, as her right would have been absolutely defeated by his laches. In their Lordships' opinion Mr. Lowis, as manager of the Plaintiff's estate, was competent, independently of the provisions of sec. 40 of the Court of Wards Act, to observe the formalities on her behalf. The section, however, which defines his duties appears to their Lordships to fully clothe him with authority to act as he did; the validity of his action, therefore, did not depend on its subsequent adoption by the Court of Wards. In this view the English cases cited at the Bar have no application [to the present case.

It was also urged that the claim to co-parcenary, on which the Plaintiff's right of pre-emption was based, arose out of the fact that the vendor and pre-emptor were jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the villages comprised in the mehal, and that this joint liability does not constitute the co-parcenary contemplated by the Mahomedan Law. This argument seems to proceed on a misconception of the land system of India. A mehal is a unit of property; it may consist of one village or of several villages: it may be owned by one or several proprietors who may have an interest in all or some of the villages comprised in the estate. Their joint liability for the Government revenue arises from the fact that they own undivided interests in the property; and that joint liability does not cease in the case of any co-sharer until his particular share has been partitioned by the Revenue authorities, when the share so partitioned becomes a separate unit of property.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

L. P. APPEAL No. 33 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J. N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1912, 15, March.	TIRTHABASI SINGH and others, Plain- tiffs, Appellants, v. PURNA CHANDRA Nag and others, Defendants, Res- pondents.
-------------------------------------------------------------------------	--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 149, sub-sec. (3), question of title if to be decided in suit under—Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 153—Suit framed as for determination of title.

Sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides a very simple and expeditious machinery for the purpose of protecting a tenant against the harassment of litigation consequent on rival claims of title to the reversion of the tenant's interest.

Sub-sec. (3) of sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates a suit which culminates not in a decree but in an order of a limited kind, an order restraining payment out of the money. It is not necessary to decide the question of title in issuing an injunction under that section.

In a suit brought under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which the Plaintiff keeps within the terms of the section and asks only for the relief contemplated by it, no question of title can be decided. It would be otherwise if the suit be framed as one for determination of the Plaintiff's title.

Semble—An appeal would not lie under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against an order under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3) of the Act.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent filed on the 11th of April 1910 against a decree of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, dated the 23rd of March 1910, passed in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 674 of 1908, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu A. C. Batabyal, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 13th of December 1907, reversing that of Babu Hem Chandra Bose, Munsif at Burdwan, dated the 1st of September 1906.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of D. Chatterjee, J., which was as follows :—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—In a previous suit brought by the Defendant No. 1 against the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 pleaded that the rent was not due to the Defendant No. 1 but to the Plaintiff in this case in whose favour they had in 1292 executed a kabuliyat in respect of the land in suit. Upon this plea being taken notice was served upon the Plaintiff under cl. 3 of sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Plaintiff brought the suit for the reliefs contemplated by that section.

The first Court decreed the suit of the Plaintiff holding that his possession and title by adverse possession was made out. The second Court on appeal has dismissed the suit holding that the possession of the Plaintiff by receipt of rent from the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 extended from 1292 to 1299 and that thereafter the Plaintiff had been prevented from the realisation of the rent from the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 by reason of the opposition made on behalf of the Maharaja of Burdwan and the Defendant No. 1 claiming through the Maharaja of Burdwan. The learned Sub-Judge therefore has held that since the title of the Plaintiff by adverse possession for more than 12 years fails the Plaintiff is not entitled to a decree.

It is contended in second appeal before me that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in that the Plaintiff has succeeded in showing that he brought the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 upon the land, that the Defendants were upon the lands under his lease and that the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were estopped from pleading that the Plaintiff had no title at the time when they obtained their lease from him and therefore his possession must be presumed to have continued notwithstanding non-payment of rent by the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 specially because no other persons are found to have received rent from the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 so as to operate as an ouster of the Plaintiff.

I find, however, from the record that long after 1299 up to which time the Plaintiff is found to have enjoyed possession by receipt of rent there was a suit for declaration of title by the Maharaja of Burdwan against the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and in that suit the title of the Maharaja of Burdwan was proved. In this case also it has been found upon investigation by the Civil Court Amin that the disputed land falls within the Maharaja's property. The title therefore in favour of the Maharaja or any person claiming through the Maharaja has been made out. The question of title being thus finally decided between the parties in a previous suit it was hardly open to the Court to hold otherwise. In any event the lower Appellate Court has found that the title of the Defendant No. 1 as putnidar under the Maharaja to the land in suit has been made out and if that be so the right to the rent would also lie in the Defendant No. 1 and the Plaintiff would not be entitled to an injunction under sec. 149, cl. 3. It is said that it is not competent to the Court in a proceeding under sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to consider the question of title as a main question in issue between the parties. I do not think that the contention is well supported by the decisions passed upon that section of the Act. On the other hand the section seems to contemplate a proceeding by which the third Party to whom notice is given under cl. 3 must come to Court to prove his right to injunction which cannot be given unless and until he proves that any right and title possessed by him is in jeopardy on account of any action taken by the Defendant. In order to entitle the Plaintiffs to an injunction questions both of possession and of title must be gone into. I think in this case both the questions have been gone into and found against the Plaintiff. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

[The Plaintiffs preferred this appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.]

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was described to us in the opening by the Appellant as one under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was made a matter of complaint that the onus was cast on the Plaintiff to his detriment and to the undue advantage of the Defendants. It was urged that this operated prejudicially to the Plaintiff in this suit and it could not have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting sec. 149 to alter the position of the rival parties as to matters of proof. This is a forcible argument taken in the abstract, but applied to the circumstances of this case, it has no value. To begin with, I fail to see that there has been any such possession as could have brought into play the provisions of sec. 28 of the Indian Limitation Act having regard to the findings of the lower Appellate Court. Therefore, it seems to me that in that respect the Plaintiff in this case has not been prejudiced, nor the Defendants advantaged by the course of procedure that has been adopted. That is probably sufficient for the disposal of the case.

But I would point out that while this suit is described as one under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3), it is more than that. Now, as I read the scheme of the Act and sec. 149 in relation to that scheme, this particular section was introduced for the purpose of protecting a tenant against the harassment of litigation consequent on rival claims of title to the reversion on the tenant's interest. The sections appears to me to afford a very simple and expeditious machinery. It enables a Defendant who admits that money is due from him on account of rent to plead that this money is due not to the Plaintiff but to a third person, and to utilize that plea, provided he pays into Court the amount admitted to be due. When this is done notice is to be given to this third person whose title the tenant sets up. Then it is provided in sub-sec. (3) that "unless the third person within three months from the receipt of the notice institutes a suit against the Plaintiff and therein obtains an order restraining payment out of the money it shall be paid out to the Plaintiff on his application." The final sub-section provides that nothing in this section shall affect the right of any person to recover from the Plaintiff money paid to him under sub-sec. (3). Now, I have said that this suit is not one exclusively under sec. 149, sub-sec. (3), and my reason for so saying is this: sub-sec. (3) contemplates a suit which culminates not in a decree but in an order of a limited kind, an order restraining payment out of the money. It is therefore an order not finally decisive of the substantial rights of the parties, but providing a machinery for the purpose of carrying out the scheme whereby it is sought to relieve a tenant from harassment. Here more than such an order was sought. Payment of the money was prayed and from the issues formulated in the suit on which the parties went to trial it is manifest that the contest between the parties was one of title. Cases have been brought to our notice for the purpose of determining what is the true effect of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 149, but in those cases the same course has been pursued as in this; the Plaintiff has gone beyond the provisions of of sec. 149, sub-sec. (3) with the consequences indicated. If a third person desires to retain the benefits which the procedure of this section would secure to him then he must keep his claim within the terms of this section and be content with an order. It is not for us now to say whether an appeal would lie from such an order, but I feel constrained to say that the language of sec. 153 does not sustain the argument that an appeal would lie under that section. I come back to that which is the matter immediately before us. For the reasons which I have indicated the findings of the lower Appellate Court appear to me to be conclusive against the claim now advanced by the Plaintiff-Appellant: and, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 160, cl. (g), 195—Protected interest—Mortgage by a putnidar if protected interest—Sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act—Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), sec. 11.

Where a putni kabuliyat provided as follows: "I in succession to my sons, grandsons, etc., heirs and representatives, shall, with felicity, hold and enjoy the aforesaid share, with right to make gift, sale, mortgage, etc., and dar-putni mourasi, mukurari, gantidari, etc., settlements at a proper jama and to every way make alienations and create encumbrances;" and the putnidar created a mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff,

Held, that the recitals in the kabuliyat merely set out the ordinary incidents of a putni grant as laid down in sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation and did not give the putnidar an express authority in writing by the landlords to create a mortgage and the mortgage created in favour of the Plaintiff by the putnidar was not a "protected interest" within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

KRISTA DAS LAHA v. JOTINDRA NATH BASU.

The right of a putnidar to give the tenure in mortgage is subject to the conditions imposed by sec. 11 of the Putni Regulation.

The "express authority" referred to in that section means such authority apart from the conditions of the lease.

The effect of sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act would further be subject to the saving provisions of cl. (e) of sec. 195 of the same Act.

This was an appeal preferred against a decree of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 31st of March 1909, affirming that of Babu Aghore Chandra Hazra, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 14th of July 1908.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows :—

Defendant No. 1 was a putnidar. The putni kabuliyat given by him to Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords, provided as follows :

"From the beginning of the year 1299, I take a putni settlement from you, settling Rs. 2,502-8-15 gundas (rupees two thousand five hundred and two, annas eight, and gundas fifteen only) as the annual putni jama. Becoming owner of the said 1 anna 12 gundas share of the aforesaid zemindari lot in putni right from the 1st of Baisakh of the current year 1299 (twelve hundred and ninety-nine), I, in succession to my sons, grandsons, etc., heirs and representatives, shall, with felicity, hold and enjoy the aforesaid share, with right to make gift, sale, mortgage, etc., and dar-putni mourasi, mukurari, gantidari, etc., settlements, at a proper jama and to every way make alienations and create encumbrances.

The Plaintiffs brought a suit to enforce a registered mortgage bond for Rs. 2,675, dated 20th November 1896, said to have been executed by Defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1, the putnidar, defaulted in paying the rent due on the putni tenure and in consequence Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords, in execution of the rent decree purchased the tenure themselves. Thereupon the Plaintiffs brought the present suit against Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to recover the sum advanced on the mortgage by sale of the putni tenure which then passed to the hands of the landlords. Defendant No. 1 did not appear in the Plaintiffs' suit. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 contested the suit. The question for determination before the lower Courts was whether the mortgage in question came within the meaning of "protected interests" under sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both the lower Courts found for the Plaintiffs and held that the mortgage was a "protected interest" and could not be annulled. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 then preferred the present appeal.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Debendra Nath Ghosh for the Appellants.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose, Surendra Chandra Sen and Sarat Chandra Ghosh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The present appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs as mortgagees to enforce a mortgage executed in their favour by the Defendant No. 1, who is a putnidar, by obtaining a decree against him jointly with the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 who are his landlords, and in satisfaction of the decree, by selling up the putni tenure which, after the mortgage had been given, had been sold by the landlords in satisfaction of a decree for the recovery of arrears of rent and had been purchased by them. What appears to have happened is that the Defendant No. 1 the putnidar after he had given the mortgage to the Plaintiffs, defaulted in paying the rent due on the putni tenure. In consequence, the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the landlords, brought a suit under the Tenancy Act against the putnidar to recover the rent, and obtained a decree. Thereafter they sold up the putni tenure in execution of the decree and purchased it themselves. By this sale the claim for rent was apparently satisfied. The mortgagees, the Plaintiffs in the present suit, seek to satisfy their claim under the mortgage by sale of the putni tenure which is now in the hands of the landlords, and both the lower Courts have held that they are entitled to do so as they have a protected interest under sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The landlords, the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, have appealed, and the question which we have to decide is whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for the recovery of the mortgage-debt against the landlords jointly with the mortgagor, and whether they can in execution of that decree, sell up the putni tenure which has now passed into the hands of the landlords. For the Appellants, reliance has been placed on the wording of cl. (g) of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is urged that the terms of the kabuliyat given by the putnidar at the time of the settlement which the lower Courts have regarded as an express authority given to the putnidar by the landlords in writing to create mortgages, are, in fact, nothing of the sort, but that the recitals in the putni lease merely set out the ordinary incidents of a putni grant as laid down in sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation and that in fact, these recitals gave the putnidar no right which he had not under the Regulation. In this contention we agree. Even if the recitals could be regarded as an express authority within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the effect of that section would certainly be subject to the saving provisions of cl. (e) of sec. 195 of the same Act, which provides that "nothing in this Act shall affect any enactment relating to putni tenures in so far as it relates to such tenures." We hold, therefore, that the mortgage created in favour of the Plaintiffs is not a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

At the same time it is clear that, under the terms of the putni lease, the putnidar had a right to mortgage the putni tenure, but that right was subject to the conditions imposed by sec. 11 of the Putni Regulation. That section provides:—"No transfer by sale, gift, or otherwise no mortgage or other limited assignment, shall be permitted to bar the indefeasible right of the zemindar to hold the tenure of his creation answerable, in the state in which he created it, for the rent which is, in fact, his reserved property in the tenure, except the transfer or assignment should have been made with a condition to that effect under express authority obtained from such zemindar." This evidently means an express authority apart from the conditions of the lease and it is not even suggested that any such express authority was obtained from the landlords in the present case. Thus, though the mortgagees undoubtedly would have had a right to discharge the landlords' claim for rent so as to save the property which was covered by their mortgage and so to save their security from sale for arrears of rent and, after they had done so, to sell up the tenure in satisfaction of their claim under the mortgage, certainly, after they had allowed the property to be sold in the exercise of the indefeasible right of the landlords for recovery of the rent due on the tenure, they had no legal right to come forward and claim to be entitled to realise the mortgage-debt by sale of the tenure, which had passed into the hands of the landlords and so be released from the burden of the arrears of rent. By their own default in failing to pay the rent, the security for the payment of their debt has passed out of the hands of the mortgagor and all that the mortgagors are, under the law, entitled to in the present suit is a personal money decree against the debtor for the recovery of the mortgage-debt. The judgments and decrees of both the lower Courts are set aside and the suit of the Plaintiffs is decreed with costs for the full amount of the debt against the Defendant No. 1 personally and dismissed against the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The appeal is decreed and the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are entitled to their costs in all the Courts against the Plaintiffs.

Lease, construction of—Permanency, inference as to—Dwelling-house—Long possession.

The mere facts that a lease of land was for dwelling purposes and that the lessees have been allowed to remain in possession of the land on payment of rent for a long period would not in themselves be sufficient to establish the permanent nature of the tenancy where there is nothing to show that the building was contemplated to be or in fact was a masonry building.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of December 1908 against the decree of Babu Ashutosh Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Backergunge, dated the 1st of September 1908, affirming that of Babu Bimal Chandra Chatterjee, Munsif at Barisal, dated the 20th of January 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray and Prokash Chandra Majumdar for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Gunoda Charan Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The present appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs to eject the Defendants from a piece of homestead land measuring $2\frac{1}{2}$ karas after service of notice to quit. The Court of first instance found that the notice had been duly served but that it was bad in law and it further held that the tenancy was a permanent one and therefore the Plaintiffs were not entitled to get a decree for ejectment but were only entitled to a decree for rent. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has found that the notice to quit was duly served and that the notice was valid in law; and on these points, no argument has been addressed to us at the hearing of this appeal. The lower Appellate Court has further found that, as the land was let out for the building of a dwelling-house on it, it must be presumed that the tenancy was a permanent one. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge has confirmed the judgment and decree of the first Court and has dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and, in this appeal, the only question which has been raised is whether the tenancy under the terms of the lease by which it was created is a permanent tenancy or not. The kabuliyat executed by the Defendant No. 1 who is one of the original lessees and by the father of the Defendant No. 2 who is the other lessee has been translated and we have had it before us. The document, after setting out the title of the lessor, goes on to say:—"We" the lessees, "having prayed for taking karsa malguzari settlement of the homestead lands of Sonatun Chang, etc., etc., for dwelling in the same, you granted us a pattah in respect of the said homestead lands at a jama of total Rs. 3." The description of the settlement is that which would apply to an ordinary lease for a year or for a term of years. There is nothing in the description to indicate that the lease was to be permanent or heritable. The document goes on to say that the lessees "shall raise houses on the homestead lands and dwell in the same and pay rents annually to the Sarkar." In fact, the lease, in its terms, appears to be nothing more than an ordinary yearly lease of a piece of homestead land for the purpose of building a house on it for dwelling purposes. There is no suggestion in the lease itself that the house is to be of a permanent character, that is to say, a masonry dwelling-house; and the fact that no selami appears to have been paid at the time when the lease was granted seems to us to support the conclusion that the intention of the lessor was merely to grant a yearly lease of the land.

On behalf of the Respondents, however, it has been urged that this lease must be interpreted to be a permanent lease because it was a lease for building purposes; and, in support of this view, we are first referred to a decision of this Court in the case of Johoorulal v. Dear (1). That was the case of a lease granted to an European pensioner. The judgment is not very clear as to what style of house was built on the land after the lease had been granted, but, from the fact that the house was surrounded by a wall, the building appears to have been of a permanent character, and would seem to have been a masonry building or something of that description. In the present case, it is to be observed that the lease was granted on the 16th Bhadra 1283, B. S., corresponding to 31st August 1876; that is to say, that the lessees or their successors in interest have been in occupation for the last twenty years or more. The learned Pleader for the Respondents relies on this circumstance as well as on the fact that the land was let out for building purposes to support the conclusion that the lease was a permanent lease. The mere fact, however, that the lessees have been allowed to remain in possession of the land on payment of rent for a long period would not in itself be sufficient to support the conclusion that the lease was in its inception a permanent lease ; and the most that the Respondents are able to say with regard to the second point, namely, that the lease was for building purposes is that, from the time that they obtained the lease, they have spent Rs. 500 in throwing earth, planting trees and making corrugated iron sheds. It cannot, therefore, be said in the present case that the expense incurred by the Defendants in building the house is of a very extravagant nature. From the fact, as appears from the written statement, that Rs. 500 was the total amount spent during thirty years, it is evident that the expenditure is certainly not very large.

The next case which is relied on is that of Gangadhur v. Ayimuddin (2). The facts of that case are, however, entirely different from the facts of the present case. In that case, the land had been let out for upwards of sixty years for building purposes and the building was of a substantial character and was built sixty years before by the ancestor of the Defendants. In those circumstances, this Court held that the Court was at liberty to presume that the land was granted for building purposes and that the grant was of a permanent character. We do not think, however, that that ruling can be accepted as any authority in the present case. There is nothing whatever to prove that the building is of a permanent character or that masonry building has been constructed on the holding. The last case relied on is that of Promoda Nath v. Srigobinda (3).

(3) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 648 : s. c. 9 C. W. N. 463 (1905).

In that case it was held that, when the lease was granted, the parties contemplated the possibility of a masonry building being erected on the land and, in fact, a permanent structure was erected on the land. In the present case, it has not been seriously argued that it was the intention of the parties that a masonry building should be constructed on the land. The learned Pleader for the Respondents argues that, as the lease did not restrict the lessees from constructing a masonry building, therefore, it should be presumed that the intention was that they should erect a masonry building. We do not think that from that omission in the document we should draw such a conclusion and we are of opinion that the absence of any words in the document itself indicating that the lease was intended to be permanent or that the rights under the lease were to pass to the heirs of the lessees supports the conclusion that the intention was to grant a yearly lease and not a permanent lease of the land. The learned pleader has, however, argued that because the word स्थलाभिविक्त is used in one clause of the lease which restricts the lessees from transferring the land by gift or sale or mortgage or by letting out the same, it must be concluded that the intention of the parties was to grant a permanent lease. The word used, however, does not, in our opinion, necessarily indicate that the lease was intended to be of a permanent character and we do not think that it is possible to arrive at the conclusion suggested by the learned pleader, especially as the expression occurs only in the paragraph restricting the rights of the lessees and in the body of the lease no words are used to show that the rights of the lessees under it were to be permanent or heritable.

BARADA PROSAD BARMAN v. PRASANNO KUMAR DAS.

We are unable to agree with the view which the lower Courts have taken that the lease granted by the Plaintiffs to the Defendant No. 1 and the father of the Defendant No. 2 created a permanent tenancy. In our opinion, it created a yearly tenancy terminable by six months' notice to quit, the period covered by the notice terminating at the end of the year of the tenancy. The lower Appellate Court has found that such a notice was duly served on the Defendants and, in these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree entitling them to eject the Defendants. We accordingly decree the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the suit be decreed with costs in all the Courts. The Plaintiffs will be given a decree entitling them to eject the Defendants from the lands in suit, reasonable time not less than six weeks from the date of the arrival of the record in the lower Court being given to the Defendants for the removal of the materials of the house from the land.

Lease—Presumption of permanency—Lease for building purpose—Long possession—Uniform rent—Permanency, question of mixed law and fact—Second appeal.

Where the origin of a tenancy was unknown, and it was established (1) that the original tenant and his successor had been in occupation of the land for over sixty years, (2) that the rent had never been varied, (3) that the tenancy had been treated by the landlord as heritable and (4) that the land was let out for residential purposes, the inference was held to be legitimate that the tenancy at its inception was permanent.

The question of the nature of the tenancy is a mixed question of fact and law; the inference as to the nature of the tenancy from the facts found is a question of law which can be gone into on second appeal.

This was an appeal preferred on the 27th of May 1909 against the decree of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Pubna and Bogra, dated the 24th of March 1909, reversing that of Babu Kumudini Kant Ray, Munisif at Pubna, dated the 6th of June 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Kishori Lal Sarkar and Harish Chandra Ray for the Appellants.

Babu Shyama Charan Ray for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Defendants in an action in ejectment. The case for the Plaintiffs-Respondents is that the Defendants who were tenants-at-will were in occupation of the disputed land, that their tenancy has been terminated by a proper notice to quit and that they have nevertheless refused to vacate the land. The Defendants resisted the claim substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that they held under a permanent lease granted to their predecessors on the 23rd May 1898: and, secondly, that if the lease was not established, there were cir-circumstances from which the Court could draw the inference that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. The Court of first instance found in favour of the genuineness of the lease and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has declined to give the Defendants the benefit of the lease for two reasons. He holds, first, that it is doubtful whether the lease is genuine, and, secondly, that if it is genuine, it is not proved to be binding upon the landlords inasmuch as, on the face of it, it appears to have been executed by a person whose authority has not been established. The Subordinate Judge then proceeds to hold that although the Defendants have proved that they have been in occupation of this land for many years at a uniform rate of rent and although the property had descended from the original tenant to his daughter, these circumstances are not sufficient to justify an inference that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character, because the Defendants have not proved that they raised substantial structures on the land. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has reversed the decision of the original Court and made a decree for ejectment.

In support of the appeal, it has been contended that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous and on both the branches of the case, reference has been made to a number of judicial decisions bearing upon the questions discussed. In our opinion, there is no room for serious controversy that the decision of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

In so far as the first branch of the case is concerned, as we have already stated, the Subordinate Judge has not explicitly found that the lease is not genuine. He suspects its genuineness and does not come to any specific finding; but he holds that it was not binding upon the landlords, because the authority of the executant was not proved. This view of the Subordinate Judge is clearly erroneous. On the authority of the decisions in Ubi-laiik Pal v. Dallial Rai (1) and Uggra Kant v. Hurro Chunder (2), the Subordinate Judge has held that the provisions of sec. 90 of the Indian Evidence Act merely establish that the document was executed by the persons whose signatures it purports to bear; but that cannot and does not prove the authority of the executants to bind the landlord. This view is unquestionably sound. But it must be remembered that the landlords did not suggest in either of the Courts below that the lease was not binding upon them, because it had been executed on behalf of their predecessors by a person who had no authority to bind them in this transaction. The question was not raised for very obvious reasons. No doubt the lease was originally granted on behalf of the landlords who were at the time infants; but upon attainment of majority, they ratified the transaction, recognised the predecessor of the Defendants as their tenant and for many years accepted rent from him at the rate mentioned in the lease. Under these circumstances it was not open to them to repudiate the transaction as wholly unauthorised. No question, therefore, arises in this case as to the authority of the executants to bind the landlords. In this view, it would be necessary for us to remand the case to the Subordinate Judge for a specific finding upon the question of the genuineness of the lease. It is needless, however, to adopt this course, because we are of opinion that the Appellants are entitled to succeed upon the second branch of the case.

(2) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 209 (1880).

In so far as the second branch of the case is concerned, if we assume for a moment that the lease of the 23rd May 1848 has not been proved to be genuine, the position is that the origin of the tenancy is unknown. It has been established that the original tenant Jugarnath was in occupation up to the time of his death in 1884. Jugarnath was thus in possession for at least 36 years upon payment of a small rent which was never varied in his life-time. Since his death, his daughter, the second Defendant, has been in occupation for at least 20 years up to the commencement of this suit. It has not been suggested on behalf of the landlords that the rent was ever varied during this period when the successor-in-interest of the original tenant was in occupation. We have, therefore, four facts firmly established in the case; first, that the original tenant and his successor have been in occupation of the land, for over 60 years; secondly, that the rent has never been varied; thirdly, that the tenancy has been treated by the landlord as heritable; and, fourthly, that the land was let out for residential purposes. Upon these facts, we are of opinion that the inference is legitimate that the tenancy in its inception was permanent: [Durga Mohun v. Rakhal (3), Tarakpada v. Shyama Charan (4), Posunno v. Rutton (5), Govinda Chandra v. Ayenuddin (6), Jahoorulal v. Dear (7), Nubodurga v. Dwarka Nath (8), Dunne v. Nobo Krishna (9), Casperss v. Sarbadhikari (10), Nabu Mondul v. Cholim Mullik (11), Beni Madhab v. Jai Krishna (12)].

The learned Vakil for the Respondent has, however, contended that the question of the nature of the tenancy is one of fact and that it is not open to us in second appeal to interfere with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge upon this part of the case. In support of this view, he has placed reliance upon the cases of Dulhin Gulab Koer v. Balla Kurmi (13), Gungadhur v. Ayemuddin (14) and Durga Mohun v. Rakhal Chandra (3). It may be conceded that there are possibly expressions in some of these judgments which lend some apparent support to the contention of the Respondent. But it is fairly clear from the decision of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (15) and Naba Kumari v. Behari Lal (16) that the question is really a mixed question of fact and law. No doubt, the question is one of fact to this extent that we are not in a position to interfere with the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to the length of the tenancy, the fixity of rent, and other similar matters. But in so far as the Court is invited to draw an inference as to the nature of the tenancy from the facts found by the Subordinate Judge, the question is undoubtedly one of law [Grant v. Robinson (17)]. Much reliance was, however, placed by the learned Vakil for the Respondent upon the decision in Smith v. General Motor Cab Co. (18). That case is clearly distinguishable. There the question arose whether the relation between the parties to the suit was that of master and servant or of bailor and bailee. The House of Lords in affirmance of the decision of the Court below held that the question was one of fact and not of law. It was observed that it was not argued by the parties that upon the admitted facts as a matter of law the relation of the parties was that of master and servant or bailor and bailee. One of the parties relied upon certain circumstances which unquestionably supported the view that the relation between the parties was that of bailor and bailee, while his opponent relied upon other circumstances which supported the position that the relation between the parties was that master and servant. As Lord Atkinson put it, there was thus a conflict of evidence and the Court was called upon to discover upon the evidence the true relation between the parties. Here the question is whether upon the facts which have been found by the Court below, it can legitimately be held that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. There can be no doubt that in view of the decision of this Court in the cases of Dinendra v. Tituram (19), Winterscale v. Sarat Chandra (20) and of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Gopal Lal v. Teluck Chunder (21), Dhunput v. Gooman (22), Ram Chunder v. Jogesh Chunder (23), Suttosurrun v. Mohesh Chandra (24), Upendra Krishna v. Ismail

Khan (25), Nilratan v. Ismail Khan (26) and Naba Kumari v. Behari Lal (16), the inference is irresistible that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. The Subordinate Judge himself indeed would have arrived at the same conclusion but for the error into which he fell when he assumed that to bring a case within this rule, it was essential to establish that there were permanent structures on the land. But the decision of the Judicial Committee in Naba Kumari v. Behari Lal (16) shows conclusively that although the presence of permanent structures on the land may be a very important factor, it is by no means essential to establish that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. The decree of the Subordinate Judge cannot consequently be supported.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

SURENDRA MOHINI DEBI v. LOHARAM CHATTOPADHYA.

The auction-purchaser was not a necessary party to a proceeding under sec. 311 of the old Civil Procedure Code to set aside a sale.

Where a sale under the said section was set aside by consent of the decree-holder without the knowledge of the auction-purchaser,

Held—That the order setting aside the sale was not without jurisdiction.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd of March 1910 against the order of H. E. Ransome, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 29th of July 1909, affirming the order of Babu Tarapada Chattopadhyaya, Munsif, 2nd Court of Krishnagar, dated the 15th of March 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumder for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Ray, Hara Prosad Chatterjee and Binaj Mohan Majumdar for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

A suit was brought by Shib Coomari Debi, who is described in the present Rule as the Opposite-Party No. 21, against other persons, who are also parties to this Rule, or against their previous representatives-in-interest, for the recovery of the rent of a certain dar-putni. Shib Coomari Debi obtained an ex parte decree, and the dar-putni was sold in satisfaction of that decree on the 12th June 1907, and purchased by the Petitioner in this Rule, Surendra Mohini Debi, who from her description, appears to be the wife of the Opposite Party No. 7, Jananendra Nath Chattopadhyaya. On the 31st July 1907, an application was made, under sec. 311 of the old Code of Civil Procedure by Debendra Nath Chattopadhyaya, Opposite Party No. 13, and, on the same date, three other judgment-debtors, namely, Opposite Parties Nos. 1, 14 and 17, filed a similar application. The three last-mentioned persons also filed an application under sec. 108 of the old Code to have the ex parte decree set aside. On the 4th January 1908, the applications came up for disposal, and a petition of compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors was filed, by which the decree-holder consented to the sale being set aside on receipt of the amount decreed. The application under sec. 108, C. C. P., was also dismissed on the same day.

These proceedings were taken without notice to the auction-purchaser, and the case which is set up by the auction-purchaser, who is the Petitioner in this Rule, is that she was not aware of these proceedings.

On the 27th March 1908, the Petitioner put in an application under sec. 312, C. C. P., asking that the sale to her might be confirmed and the sale-certificate issued. That application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that the sale, having already been set aside, could not be confirmed. There was an appeal against this order to the lower Appellate Court, and the case was remanded. On remand the Court of first instance arrived at the same conclusion as it had come to before. There was an appeal again to the District Judge against the decision on remand, and the District Judge dismissed the appeal, holding that, as the sale had been set aside, he could not interfere. At the same time he expressed the opinion that the auction-purchaser, not having been made a party to the proceedings for setting aside the sale, was not bound by them. Against this decision of the District Judge, the auction-purchaser first applied to this Court, on the 29th November 1909, and obtained the present Rule (No. 4178 of 1909) on the Opposite Party to show cause why the order of the District Judge, dated the 29th July 1909, should not be set aside, the sale confirmed and the sale certificate granted to her, or why such other order should not be made as to this Court might seem fit and proper. On the 3rd March 1910, the Petitioner also filed an appeal against the same order, which is Appeal from Order No. 95 of 1910, and the appeal and the Rule have now come before us for disposal.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that no second appeal lies as the present case between the auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtors cannot be regarded as a proceeding between the parties to the suit or their representatives under sec. 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. The learned pleader who appears on behalf of the Appellant does not oppose the objection and, in our opinion, it must prevail and the appeal be dismissed.

We have then to deal with the Rule, and the ground which the learned pleader has advanced in support of it is that the auction-purchaser was a necessary party to the application under sec. 311 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, and that, as she was not made a party, the provisions of the section were not fully complied with and the order of the Munsif was made without jurisdiction. In support of the contention that an auction-purchaser was a necessary party to an application under sec. 311 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, the learned pleader who appears for the Petitioner, relies mainly on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Keramat Khan v. Mir Ali Ahmed (1). The learned Judges who decided that case, appear to have held that, as from the terms of sec. 312 of the Code it was obvious that the auction-purchaser must be a party to a proceeding under sec. 312 it followed that he was also a necessary party in the case of an application under sec. 311 in order to fulfil the conditions of sec. 311. Reliance is also placed on a decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court, Ali Gauhur Khan v. Bansidhur (2). In that case, however, the question for consideration was whether the decree-holder was a necessary party to an application under sec. 311, and the learned Judge, in deciding that he was a necessary party, appears to have been influenced by the fact that, in the case of Keramat Khan v. Mir Ali Ahmed (1), to which we have already referred, it was held that the auction-purchaser was a necessary party. The learned Judge held that, if the auction-purchaser was a necessary party, therefore, much more the decree-holder should be held to be a necessary party; but he did not consider the question whether, in fact, the auction-purchaser was a necessary party or not. Reference has also been made to an unreported case of this Court (Appeal from Order No. 421 of 1906), which was decided on the 17th January 1908. That however was an appeal against a decision after remand, and, on referring to the judgment and the remand order, we find that the learned Judges of this Court, when remanding the case for a re-hearing, expressed the opinion that the auction-purchaser should be made a party to the miscellaneous proceedings,* and the learned Judges who decided the appeal after remand, having found that the directions of this Court had not been complied with and the auction-purchaser had not been made a party, held that the appeal was defective in form and that it should be dismissed with costs. The rulings to which we have been referred do not, in our opinion, give much assistance in the present case.

The learned pleader who appears for the Petitioner has, however, relied on the provisions of sec. 310A of the old Code, and he has contended that, as it has been held in certain cases that the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application under sec. 310A, it must necessarily follow that he is also a necessary party to an application under sec. 311. We have been referred to several decisions in which it has been held that to an application under sec. 310A the auction-purchaser is a necessary party, but on behalf of the Opposite Party in the present Rule it has been contended that those decisions are no authority for the contention which has been advanced before us in the present case. Sec. 311 itself contains no provisions to the effect that notice shall be issued to the auction-purchaser, and the ground on which a sale can be set aside under that section is not a ground on which, ordinarily, the auction-purchaser would have any interest or be able to offer any assistance. The ground is material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. As the auction-purchaser can have no part in a proceeding with regard to the publishing or conducting the sale, ordinarily, he would not be a person who would be directly interested in an application under that section. The learned pleader for the Petitioner has, however, contended that the auction-purchaser has interests in the property which might suffer if the proceedings were not conducted in his presence. He has not distinctly pointed out what those interests are; but we will take it that he refers to what was described in Adhar Chander Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo (3), as the equitable or inchoate right of the successful bidder awaiting completion by the grant of the sale-certificate. Sales in execution of decrees are, however, held for the benefit of decree-holders not of auction-purchasers, and it seems to us that the Legislature in 1882 evidently considered that the latter's interests would be sufficiently safeguarded by the provisions of sec. 315 of the old Code. Sec. 310A does not apply to the same set of facts as form the subject of an application under sec. 311, and in an application under sec. 310A, the purchaser certainly has an interest in seeing that the provisions of cl. (a) of that section are complied with. Moreover even in a proceeding under sec. 310A, it has been held by this Court in Bhairab Pal v. Prem Chand Ghose (4) that notice to the auction-purchaser is not necessary. We may further observe that sec. 313 gives the purchaser a right to make an application to set aside the sale on certain special grounds, and in that section there is a distinct proviso that the judgment-debtor shall have an opportunity of being heard against the order. In sec. 311, there is no such proviso and it is only since the passing of the new Code of Civil Procedure that a general provision has been inserted in Or. XXI, r. 92 giving all persons affected a right to be heard on an application made by the decree-holder or any other person to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting it. In our opinion, the ground advanced by the learned pleader on behalf of the Petitioner for setting aside the order of the lower Court cannot be maintained. So far as this Court is concerned, no authority has been produced before us to support the contention that the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application under sec. 311 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and the reasons given in the decisions of the Allahabad Court to which we have referred do not appear to us to be based on sound or sufficient grounds. We, therefore, see no reason to interfere with the order of the lower Court. The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs.

We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 1419 OF 1910.

HOLMWOOD, J.	RAM SARAN PATHUCK,
SHARFUDDIN, J.	1st Party, Petitioner,
	v.
1910,	RAGHUNANDAN GIR, 2nd
16, December.	Party, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 147—Offerings made to a deity, whether could be the subject-matter of a proceeding under sec. 145—Profits arising out of land, whether offerings are—Secs. 145 and 147, analogy between.

In a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make a declaration that a certain party is entitled to the possession of the offerings made to a deity in a temple.

The offerings given by worshippers for the worship of any deity are not profits arising out of land, e.g., the place of worship.

These offerings arise out of the deity irrespective of the building or the land upon which he may happen to dwell.

A case under sec. 147, Cr. P. C., is to be decided by the same procedure and on the same principles as a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

A dispute as to the possession of the offerings is a dispute about moveable property ; and it is now settled law that sec. 145, Cr. P. C., has no concern with moveable property.

This was a Rule granted on the 21st of November 1910 against an order of Babu Harbans Sahay, Deputy Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 23rd of September 1910.

The facts material to the report as they appeared from the judgment of the Magistrate were as follows :—

The subject-matter of dispute in this case is the temple of Pita Moheshwar in Gaya in which the deity is an idol of the God Shiva. It is open to the public for worship. Possession of the temple therefore as a matter of fact consists merely in receiving and appropriating the offerings made to the deity by the worshippers.

The 1st party is the hereditary Pujari and 2nd party has purchased the ownership from his vendor and mortgagor Kashi Lal under registered deed and claims to be in absolute and exclusive possession.

The proceedings in this case were started on an application of the 1st party filed on the 23rd May 1910 before the Magistrate in charge. The case as disclosed in the petition was that he had been for a long time the Pujari of the temple and performing pujahs, etc., and in lieu thereof he had been appropriating to himself $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the offerings. He urged that the 2nd party had only acquired the right of his vendor Kashi Lal who was a mere custodian of the remaining 12 annas offerings.

From the various documents which were exhibits in this case there was, the Magistrate held, no doubt that the temple was the private property of one Sita Dai who made a gift of the same to Chamman Lal. After him Kashi Lal came into possession of the estate under a will, dated 30th June 1896. From 1905 to 1907, this Kashi Lal executed several mortgages in favour of several persons mortgaging the temple and offerings in all of them. The 1st party, Ram Saran, himself is an attesting witness to the bond Ex. C which was in favour of Raghunandan Gir, purchased the temple with all rights of Kashi Lal therein under the kobala. Hence it was held that 2nd party and his predecessor in interest were absolute proprietors of the temple.

The Magistrate held as follows :—

“It appears that even admitting that 1st party used to do certain services in the temple as servant of the proprietors and owners of the temple, such possession cannot be pleaded in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. Possession that can be pleaded in such a proceeding must be possession based on a claim of right to possession. The possession of an agent or servant which is merely permissive cannot give a party to a proceeding locus standi as against his principal and master. Moreover on the evidence it is clear that Raghunandan Gir has been in actual possession of the temple and of the offerings from the time of his purchase, and so entitled to possession until evicted in due course of law.”

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri, Babus Hari Bhusan Mukherjee and Prokash Chandra Sarkar for the Petitioner.

Mr. Hyam and Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Gaya to show cause why the proceedings against the Petitioner under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be quashed on the ground that they are without jurisdiction and in direct contravention of the ruling, Guiram Ghoshal v. Lal Behary Das (1).

It has been pointed out to us by the learned Vakil who appears to show cause, and very properly pointed out, that so far as the declaration of possession of the temple and the land on which it stands in favour of Raghunandan Gir goes that declaration has been made with full jurisdiction, and is not in contravention of any ruling of this Court.

The only question which arises in this case is whether the declaration that Raghunandan Gir is in possession of the offerings is an order made with jurisdiction or not.

It is contended that the offerings made in a temple are of the same nature as the rents and profits arising out of lands.

Now, sec. 145, cl. 2 says “for the purpose of this section the expression ‘land or water’ includes buildings, markets, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, and the rents or profits of any such property.” It appears clear to us that the offerings given by worshippers for the worship of any deity are not profits arising out of a building. If the deity be in a cave or under a tree, as it originally was in years gone by, the offerings would accrue in exactly the same manner. The offerings arise out of the deity irrespective of the building or the land upon which he may happen to dwell. To hold otherwise would be to allow the Criminal Courts to interfere with the customary laws of this country. There are certain rules differing in various sects and in various districts as to the apportionment of the offerings between the ground landlord, the actual holder of the temple, the middle-man and the pujari, and the sums which are devoted to the up-keep of the temple. Now it is quite impossible for the Criminal Courts to go into these matters and it is quite impossible to say that the whole of these offerings belongs to the ground landlord, middle-man, pujari or to the endowment. This matter, which depends entirely upon custom and sometimes upon an ancient grant or other documents, can only be adjudicated upon by a competent Civil Court. And that was the view which appears to have guided the Judges who decided the case of Guiram Ghoshal v. Lal Behary Das (1). They say that "considering the scope of sec. 145, Cr. P. C., we think that the present dispute (which was with regard to the right to perform the duties of a pujari) is certainly not one which was intended that the section should cover."

The argument that this case was under sec. 147, Cr. P. C., and therefore does not affect the present case which is one under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., does not help the Petitioner. Because a case under sec. 147, Cr. P. C., is to be decided by the same procedure and on the same principles as a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. And as the Judges say "it may be that it is impossible to perform the duties of a pujari without entering upon the land upon which the temple is built." But when it comes to the question of the offerings being disputed and not the house or the land it is clear that the dispute is about moveable property; and it is now settled law that sec. 145, Cr. P. C., has no concern with moveable property.

We, therefore, consider that the order so far as it affects the offerings of the temple was made without jurisdiction, and that portion of the order of the lower Court must be discharged, the Rule being made absolute to that extent and to that extent only.

Rule made absolute in part.

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT IS REASSURING TO LEARN FROM REUTER'S telegram that the Government has decided to keep the Calcutta High Court as now directly under the Government of India instead of the local Government. This was one of the matters on which some uneasiness was felt by many people in connection with the Delhi changes. The direct connection with the Government of India is not only a source of added dignity to our High Court but also makes for greater independence in the Judges. It would surely have been a retrograde step if the High Court were placed under the local Government.

THE DEBATE ON THE SECOND READING OF THE India Bill in the House of Commons which has been telegraphed by Reuter does not throw much new light on the contents of the Bill or furnish much informed criticism on its provisions. Mr. Montagu contended that the Government of India had the power to create the provinces by a Proclamation as they did and in answer to one of his interrogators he referred to the provisions of various Parliamentary Statutes which in his opinion gave the Government the requisite power. We have discussed all those provisions in our article on the subject and have tried to show that these provisions do not cover cases like the constitution of the Province of Behar and the elimination of the Eastern Bengal Council. We do not think it necessary to labour the point any further as we think that in any case the Parliamentary recognition of these new Provinces and constitutions by the Bill under discussion will validate these acts of the Government of India.

IN THE COURSE OF THE DEBATE MR. MONTAGU threw out a suggestion which we cordially welcome. It was suggested that the Statutes which gave the Government of India the powers now claimed for them were obsolete. Mr. Montagu contended they were not obsolete; and in fact, whatever view we may take of the validity of the recent reconstitutions, it cannot be said that these Statutes which lay down the constitution of the Government of India are in any sense of the term obsolete. But this criticism forcibly brought out the fact that these constitutional Statutes are so numerous and of so bewildering a character, that it will surely be worth while to consolidate them. That would make the work of the student of the Indian constitution very much easier and will also save the Government from many a pitfall which the bewildering nature of the several statutes leads them into. Mr. Montagu expected that the statutes would soon be consolidated and in the interest of simplicity and clearness we cordially join with him in the expectation and hope that it will be shortly fulfilled. Ilbert's excellent Digest has made the work of consolidation very much easier than it would otherwise have been and it has always been a matter for wonder to most readers of that work why the statutes should not have been consolidated.

IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT MR. FREDERICK H. M. Corbet who is stated to have been long connected with Ceylon, has been appointed Advocate-General of Madras. Of the new Advocate-General personally we do not profess to have any special knowledge and we are not competent to offer any comments as to his personal fitness for the post. But we are, on principle, opposed to appointments like this from outside the local bar, at any rate from the bar outside anywhere in India. It is not only that the appointment of an outsider to a prize post of the bar is objectionable and unjust as denying the local bar the satisfaction of their just expectations and as taking away from them a great deal of the incentive to progress, but it is otherwise very much open to question on wider grounds of policy.

INDIAN LAW IS NOW NO LONGER IN THAT ELEMENTARY stage when any one familiar with English law might be expected to cope with its intricacies. Commencing very largely as an offshoot of the English law, the Indian law has in the course of over a century of British administration developed into a complex structure having an individuality of its own. A long course of legislation and judicial interpretation of the law has made wide departures from English law and built up a fabric of no mean dignity or complexity. In these circumstances it would be scarcely good policy to place an utter stranger to the Indian law in a position in which he will have to discharge important functions in its administration. There can be no denying that as the chief legal adviser of the local Government in all matters of importance and performing statutory duties of considerable responsibility the Advocate-General has great need to be fully equipped for his work; and, the law of India being what it is, it would be idle to expect that anybody would be quite capable of discharging his duties adequately simply because he has been a successful lawyer elsewhere. At any rate he will surely take some little time before he can do his work as well as the foremost Indian lawyers with their perfect familiarity with the ins and outs of Indian law and Indian life might be expected to do.

THERE HAVE OF LATE BEEN SOME CRITICISMS directed to the successive appointment of Vakils as Advocate-General in Madras and it has been suggested that unless Advocate-Generals are appointed from members of the English Bar the tone of the profession tends to suffer. We do not know if this criticism has had anything to do with the latest choice of the Madras Government. We for our own part are not disposed on this question to enter into a controversy as to the fitness or otherwise of any branch of the profession in India for the post. Assuming that it was necessary for the Advocate-General of Madras to be a member of the English Bar and assuming that there were no suitable candidates available among the Barristers in Madras, that does not justify an appointment from outside India. It may be suggested that Mr. Corbet has experience of Ceylon. But the laws of Ceylon are not exactly the same as those of India and surely there is a great deal more of uniformity in the laws and legal traditions of all India than between Madras and Ceylon. If a Barrister was wanted one might more profitably be secured from India than from outside.

IN THIS ISSUE WE PUBLISH A NOTE OF THE sensational trial of Mr. and Mrs. Seddon on a charge of murder by arsenic. Like the Crippen case this case also rested entirely on circumstantial evidence. Miss Barrow died of arsenic poisoning in the house of Seddon where she was living with the husband and wife, practically alone. The doctor who attended at the last illness of the deceased certified that he had not given arsenic in any of the medicines he prescribed. These facts taken along with the conduct of the accused in connection with the burial and with cashing some £5 notes of the deceased lady and some other matters were held by the jury to be sufficient to justify a conviction for murder.

MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL'S SUMMING UP IS A somewhat strong vindication of circumstantial evidence on which there is a stronger tendency to rely at present than ever before. "It is not necessary," his Lordship observed, "that a crime shall be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, for there were doubts more or less involved in every human transaction. There were crimes done in darkness and secrecy which could only be brought to light by presenting circumstances which pressed more and more as they increased in number."

THIS IS ENTIRELY IN LINE WITH THE MODERN view of the value of circumstantial evidence upon which the Crippen case was decided. There are people who doubt the policy or justice of attaching so much value to circumstantial evidence alone. Circumstances are more ambiguous and much harder to interpret than direct evidence and there are surely greater risks in deciding on circumstantial evidence specially when it is a question of capital sentence. This is one view of the question. But there is another view and that has been strongly put by Mr. Justice Bucknill, which takes into consideration the vast number of secret crimes in which circumstantial evidence must be very largely if not exclusively relied upon. Whatever view is held on principle, there is no question that the latter view is fast gaining ground in judicial practice in England.

GOODEVE'S MODERN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. 5th Edition. By John Herbert Williams, LL. M., and William Morse Crowdy, B. A. London: Sweet & Maxwell, Limited, 3, Chancery Lane, W. C. 1912. 20j.

A new edition of a standard work like the present is always welcome. The present edition has been chiefly necessitated by the changes introduced in various branches of the law by Statutes passed since the date of the previous edition (1904). The editors have had in consequence to re-write the chapters dealing with Trade-marks, Patents, Companies and Copy-rights and portions of the chapters dealing with Ships and Policies of Assurance. The chapter on Debts has been enlarged by including a short summary of the material provisions of the Money Lenders' Act of 1900. Recent cases, in so far as they help to elucidate the subject, have been referred to and the editors hope not without reason that the book though primarily intended for students will continue to be of service to practitioners as well.

THE PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT (V OF 1881) AND THE SUCCESSION CERTIFICATE ACT (VII OF 1889). By Irikamlal R. Desai, B. A., LL. B., Bombay. The 'Lawyer' Office, Girgaon. 1912.

This is a handy annotated re-print of the two enactments mentioned. The notes do not purport to exhaust the case-law bearing on the provisions of the Acts, but they contain nearly all that one may require for ready reference. The notes are not confined to Indian cases only, but select English cases are referred where they assist in elucidating the provisions of the Acts.

THE COURT FEES AND SUITS VALUATION ACTS. Completed by A. K. Nauniah, B. A., B. L. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy Row, from the Lawyers' Companion Office, Trichinopoly and Madras. 1912. Price Rs. 3-4.

This is re-print from the Lawyers' Companion series, revised and brought down to the end of 1911. The popularity attained by the series as a whole is a sufficient justification for the issue of the Acts annotated separately. We have no doubt that the excellence of the compilation coupled with its handsome get up will commend the publication to practitioners.

CHITTY'S STATUTES OF PRACTICAL UTILITY. Arranged in alphabetical and chronological order, with notes and indexes. Vol. 17, Part I, containing Statutes of Practical Utility passed in 1911 with incorporated enactments and selected statutory rules. By W. H. Aggs, M. A., LL. B., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane. Stevens & Sons, Ltd., 119 & 120, Chancery Lane. 1912. 10j6.

Out of 86 Statutes passed in 1911, 38 of general application to the United Kingdom and 3 local Acts have been selected and so far as practicable annotated by means of cross-references and otherwise. The National Insurance Act naturally occupies the greatest amount of space in this collection. Amongst other important enactments dealt with is the Act which consolidated the Statutes relating to Perjury (The Perjury Act). This it may be noted is the first annual continuation volume of the 6th edition of Chilly's Statutes. Considering the variety and complexity of the legislative output in England, the utility of annotated selections from them can hardly be questioned.

MEWS' ANNUAL DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASE-LAW. 1911. London: Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane; Stevens & Sons, Ltd., 119 & 120, Chancery Lane. 1912. 15j.

Mews' Digest having been consolidated up to 1910, the Annual Digest for 1911 now appears under the style of "the First Annual Supplement." As in the Digests of previous years, the present Digest is not entirely confined to English cases. Select Scottish and Irish cases and some Indian cases also are incorporated. We are glad to notice that the compilers of the present volume have followed our suggestion regarding the citation of Indian cases from the Indian Appeals series of the English Law Reports. Some of these decisions of the Judicial Committee are of more than local interest and the Digest is the richer by their inclusion.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Rex. v. Mr. and Mrs. Seddon. Before MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL AND A JURY. 4—14th March 1912.

Murder by arsenic—Conviction based entirely upon circumstantial evidence.

This was the trial of the two accused for murder of Miss. Barrow at their own house.

The case for the prosecution was that the deceased who was a spinster was possessed of leasehold property yielding an annual income of £120 and personal property chiefly cash of the value of £4,000. In July 1910, she went to live with the accused. Subsequently the leasehold property and some stocks were transferred to the male prisoner. She fell ill on September 1st and was nursed by Mrs. Seddon. She died on September 14th. A certificate of death from epidemic diarrhœa was given. She possessed a large number of £5 notes which were cashed by the male or female prisoner. It was alleged that on August 26th, Miss Seddon (daughter) went to a chemist to purchase fly-papers. The body was exhumed on November 15th, when it was found that arsenic was widely distributed over the body. By her will which was alleged to have been executed on September 11th, she bequeathed her jewellery, furniture, etc., to Mr. and Mrs. Grant. The motive alleged for the crime was greed of gold.

The evidence in support of the prosecution consisted chiefly of the (1) undertaker who deposed that Mr. Seddon said to him that only £4 odd must suffice for the funeral and doctor's fees as that was all that was left by the deceased, that no mourning coach was sent to the house; (2) of a chemist who deposed that he sold a 3d. packet of fly-paper which was labelled poison; (3) of an assistant in the same firm as the prisoner who saw a large amount of gold on the prisoner's desk on the evening of September 14th; (4) of doctors who used to attend the deceased before her last illness and of the doctor who treated her for diarrhœa in her last illness. The latter proved that there was no arsenic in the drugs prescribed by him; (5) of medical experts who deposed that death was due to acute arsenical poisoning or poisoning by small dose over a long period of time. Fly-papers contained arsenic which could be extracted by boiling. There was also evidence that several £5 notes belonging to the deceased were cashed by one or other of the prisoners under false endorsements.

The case for the prosecution being concluded, Mr. Marshall Hall submitted that there was not sufficient evidence against either of the prisoners upon which they could be put in peril on a charge of murder. In all the cases of alleged poisoning, especially where two people had been charged together there had always been evidence tracing poison to the persons accused. He challenged the Attorney-General to point to any direct evidence that either of the prisoners possessed arsenic in any shape or form or administered it. The balance of evidence was such and the uncertainty was such that the case could not be allowed to go to the jury. It was admitted that arsenic was a remedy for asthma, and the finding of it in the hair showed that it might have been taken for 12 months. The Marsh test was a splendid one for detecting the presence of arsenic, but not for the purpose of measuring the quantity.

Both prisoners gave evidence in their own defence and were cross-examined at great length. Miss Seddon denied purchasing the fly-paper as alleged. Evidence was given that the transfers of leasehold property and stocks were made in a perfectly open and business manner by Miss Barrow with the help of her solicitor and that Mr. Seddon got the leasehold in lieu of giving her an annuity of £52.

MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL, in summing up, said that the Crown had to prove the case, and that meant that unless the Crown proved it to the satisfaction of the jury beyond reasonable doubt the prisoners were entitled to be acquitted. It was not necessary that a crime should be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, for there were doubts more or less involved in every human transaction. There were crimes done in darkness and secrecy which could only be brought to light by presenting circumstances which pressed more and more as they increased in number. Their duty was calmly to investigate the case and see what was the conclusion pressed upon their minds as men of the world, men of sense, and men of solid justice. If they saw a reasonable doubt they must, as they would be very glad to do—not give them the benefit of it—but they should acquit them. This case was founded on circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence was made up of a series of circumstances, facts, or events, each of which was direct necessarily, otherwise they could not receive it, till at last the sum of these circumstances might very rightly and properly impel a jury to find a verdict of guilty. Therefore circumstantial evidence was very often as strong as the most direct evidence could be. These people were charged with poisoning Miss Barrow. Needless to say that if they were guilty, or either of them was guilty, then it was a crime which had been carefully thought out and committed in secret. Poisoning was one of those secret crimes done in the dark.

If the crime were committed by the male prisoner, it was for the love of gold. If he killed Miss Barrow for gold and his wife helped him to bring about the death by poison, she would be equally guilty. The jury might, however, see a great difference between the two. The case put forward by the Crown was that it was the cupidity of the man that brought about this unfortunate woman's death. There was, the jury might think, a difference between his cupidity and the position of his wife. Every point that could be taken in her favour must be taken by the jury, and those in favour of the man also. Although motive had been made so much of, and was—if it existed—so important a factor in the case, motive was not proof of the crime. It was brought into the case to assist the jury to come to the conclusion that the murder was the act of the Seddons or one of them, and that it was a murder not of passion or hatred or done in hot blood, but was designed for the purpose of getting money, or if they had got it before by illegal means, that they should not be punished for what they had done—if they had done it. If there was a motive there was certainly an opportunity for the murder because Miss Barrow, except for the little boy Grant, was living in their house alone.

The learned Judge recapitulated the circumstances of the case and asked the jury whether they were satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mrs. Seddon was guilty—that she had caused the death or actively helped her husband to kill the woman by the administration of poison. His Lordship pointed out that Mrs. Seddon's case was not on parallel lines with that of her husband. In reference to Miss Barrow's transferring her leasehold and other property to the male prisoner in return for an annuity, his Lordship pointed out that everything was done perfectly in order. In the matter of the transference of her leasehold property she and Seddon were each represented by separate solicitors and a proper deed was drawn up. She was a free agent, and she freely and voluntarily assigned the property to him. It was said by the prosecution that the murder was committed for the purpose of getting Miss Barrow's money. It was for the jury to consider that. They must take all the facts into consideration—the transfer of the property, the possession of the notes, and the cashing of them by Mrs. Seddon. Did those circumstances, coupled with the conduct of the man after the death, make out such a case against him that they could have no reasonable doubt that he was the man who administered the poison? Did Miss Barrow die of arsenical poisoning? The jury would probably say "Yes," because Dr. Willcox and Dr. Spilsbury said so. But that was not enough to justify a verdict of guilty. Was the arsenic which caused her death administered by the prisoners or either of them? He implored them to remember that the Crown had to make out the guilt. If the Crown had been able to satisfy them beyond reasonable doubt then they must return a verdict of Guilty; but if they were not satisfied their verdict must be Not guilty. The presumption that a woman was acting under the coercion of her husband did not apply in a charge of murder.

The jury retired to consider their verdict, and after deliberating for about an hour they found Frederick Henry Seddon Guilty, and Margaret Ann Seddon Not guilty.

MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL said that Mrs. Seddon was discharged and she left the Court.

MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL—I am satisfied that the jury have done well and rightly in acquitting her. I am satisfied that they have done justice to you.

The learned Judge then passed sentence of death upon the prisoner.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Sun Insurance Office v. Surveyor of Taxes. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR AND LORDS HALDANE, ALVERSTONE AND ATKINSON. 7th March 1912.

Income tax assessment of an Insurance Company—No fixed rule for estimating profits and loss—Question of fact and figure.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal which reversed a decision of Bray, J. The Appellants carried on fire insurance business in different parts of the world.

The practice of the office had been, to carry forward annually 40 per cent. of its premium receipts as being unearned and as a reserve or allowance in order to bring about the correct incidence as between year and year of the income which has to answer the accidental incidence of fire losses. This 40 per cent. amounted at December 31, 1901, to £466,138; and rose during the next three years to £522,472. For the three years the increase in the reserve thus amounted to £56,344, and affected the returns for the year of assessment to the amount of £18,778.

The Commissioners held the allowance to be reasonable and proper and their decision was confirmed by Mr. Justice Bray.

The Court allowed the appeal.

In the course of his judgment the Lord Chancellor said that in assessing such fire insurance companies one must proceed wholly or in part by estimate. An estimate being necessary and the arriving at it by in some way using averages being a natural and probably inevitable expedient, the law could not lay down any one way of doing this. It was a question of fact and of figures whether what was proposed in each case was fair both to the Crown and to the subject.

In this appeal, said his Lordship, there is a competition between two methods of estimate. That which I call the second is propounded by the Crown. That which I call the third is propounded by the company, who deduct 40 per cent. of the premiums at the end of each year. The relevant facts are here the reverse of what they were in the case of McGowan. The third method has been examined by the Commissioners and is stated in the special case to be right in this case. It was in terms admitted by the Surveyor of Taxes before the Commissioners that the fair and reasonable allowance for this company to make, if entitled to make any allowance, was 40 per cent. The surveyor's point was that no allowance or deduction at all ought to be made, because he said the proper method according to law was the second method. He did not prove, or try to prove, that it was fair in this case. So that all the evidence and the finding in the present appeal was in support of the Appellant's contention. In these circumstances it seems to me quite obvious that the third and not the second method must be applied here for the plain reason that upon the materials before us it is the fair and only way presented to us by which the truth can be approximately attained.

In the hope that it may help to prevent future misunderstanding, I will recapitulate my own opinion. There is no rule of law as to the proper way of making an estimate. There is no way of estimating which is right or wrong in itself. It is a question of fact and figures whether the way of making the estimate in any case is the best way for that case. Experience seems to have satisfied Courts of law for a considerable time that the method which I have described as the second is a useful working rule. But no one has said in this House that there is any constraint to accept it. It may be that the character or mode of carrying on this insurance business may alter or may have altered, and what was a good method once may become inaccurate or even obsolete.

I am equally anxious that your Lordships should not be supposed to have laid down that the method applied by the Commissioners in the present case has any universal application. If the Crown wishes in any future instance to dispute it they can do so by evidence, and it is not to be presumed that it is either right or wrong. A rule of thumb may be very desirable, but cannot be substituted for the only rule of law that I know of—vis., that the true gains are to be ascertained as nearly as it can be done. I think this appeal must be allowed.

LORD HALDANE, in the course of his judgment, said that the question of what was net profit or gain must primarily be one of fact to be ascertained by the tests applied in ordinary business. Mr. Justice Bray had put the case as analogous to one in which if goods were brought their value could not be treated as profit without deducting the value of the liability to pay for them which the buyer had incurred. Such cases as Imperial Fire Insurance Company v. Wilson (35 L. T., 271) and Scottish Union and National Insurance Company v. Smiles and Northern Assurance Company v. Russell (2 T. C., 551) were not, when carefully examined in the light of what appeared to be the true principle, reliable as authorities for a proposition which would run counter to the practice and good sense of the commercial community.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re H. M. S. Hawke. Before LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS, FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 13th March 1912.

Admission of additional evidence—General principles discussed.

This was an application by the Plaintiffs for leave to produce further evidence upon the hearing of the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS discussed the general principles applicable to such motions. He said that a suggestion was made by Mr. Laing that if this evidence was of such a nature that it would assist those who were investigating the facts with the intention of arriving at the truth, it would be an injustice to shut it out, and further, that where the Court had the opportunity afforded to it of getting at the truth before arriving at a final decision in the matter, it would be unjust not to take advantage of that opportunity.

He (the Lord Justice) did not agree. The Court, of course, always wished to arrive at the truth, but there were certain rules governing the trials of actions, rules which led to the conclusion that when once the trial took place, prima facie further evidence should not be allowed to be called unless a strong case had been made out for so doing. On this point of the case he only proposed to read a short passage from the judgment of Lord Chelmsford in the case of Shedden v. Patrick and the Attorney-General (L. R., 1 Sc. and D., 470, at p. 545) where His Lordship said:—"It is an invariable rule in all the Courts, and one founded upon the clearest principles of reason and justice, that if evidence which either was in the possession of parties at the time of a trial, or by proper diligence might have been obtained, is either not produced, or has not been procured, and the case is decided adversely to the side to which the evidence was available, no opportunity for producing that evidence ought to be given by the granting a new trial. If this were permitted, it is obvious that parties might endeavour to obtain the determination of their case upon the least amount of evidence, reserving the right, if they failed, to have the case retried upon additional evidence, which was all the time within their powers."

He thought the principle was there laid down on which he ought to act on the question of allowing further evidence to be given. The reason the present case had given him so much trouble and anxiety was this—that it was almost impossible on a short statement of the case to grasp the facts, or form an absolute judgment as to whether the owners of the Olympic were deliberately content to go to trial with the evidence then in their possession and to take the risk of judgment in their favour on that evidence. He would have expected the affidavits filed on behalf of the Plaintiffs to say that this new evidence was not available at the trial, because it had not occurred to them, or if it had occurred to them, that they could not by due diligence have produced it before. But not having sufficient materials to enable him to judge or to form the conclusion that the owners of the Olympic were deliberately content to fight the case on the lines they did, he was reluctantly driven to say that this matter of the further evidence ought to be postponed until the hearing of the appeal, and it would be so postponed if he allowed the further evidence to be taken de bene esse.

The Court would then be able to judge as to whether it should be admitted or not. He had, therefore, reluctantly come to the conclusion that the application should be granted.

Application granted.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Hendon Urban District Council v. Bass. Before LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS, FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 12th March 1912.

Volunteers, theory of common employment applied to—Boys called on to move fire escape—Liability for negligence.

This was the Defendants' application for new trial in an action tried by Darling, J., with a Jury. The Respondent who was a minor aged 14 sued for damages for injuries received. The Defendants maintained a fire brigade composed of tradesmen. The brigade used a fire escape pulled by men. The brigade were having a fire-drill, and when it was over one of the men cried out to the boys in the street who were witnessing the fun, "Now, boys, help to pull this truck home." They did so and in so doing an accident occurred in which the Plaintiff was injured.

At the trial the learned Judge left the following questions to the jury:—First, were the Defendants themselves guilty of negligence; secondly, was the fire escape a fit and proper one for its purpose; thirdly, were the Defendants' servants guilty of negligence in the management of the fire escape or in allowing the Plaintiff to pull it; fourthly, was the boy aware of the danger? The jury answered the first question in the negative, the second and third in the affirmative, the fourth in the negative, and assessed the damages at £100.

Hence this appeal which was allowed. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:—

The findings and the evidence showed a strong force for saying that the plaintiff and the other boys who were with him were volunteers to assist those who had the management of the fire escape, and that they were in the same position for the purposes of this case as if they had been servants of the Defendants in receipt of wages.

This case was covered by authorities which placed volunteers in the same position as employed workmen, and which had the effect of making these boys persons in common employment with those who had the management of the fire escape. He did not wish to be supposed to mean that in a case like this, where a boy was allowed to help in pulling a fire escape, the owners of the fire escape could not possibly be held liable for injuries sustained by him while so doing. They might be in some cases, as e.g., in a case where the second question put to the jury in this case was answered differently. If the answer to that question had been in the negative, probably the Plaintiff would have had a good cause of action against the Defendants.

Again, he was far from saying that, if there had been evidence that boys frequently played with this fire escape, not only when it was stationary, but while it was being moved, and that the attention of the Defendants had been called to this, and that some accident had previously occurred in consequence, there would not have been a manifest duty on the Defendants to instruct their men to prevent boys from interfering with the machine or assisting in the use of it. No such case, however, had been made out.

This was a simple case of a boy, not of very tender years, being invited by those in the management of this machine to help as a volunteer in pulling it, and getting damaged while so doing. In these circumstances it seemed to him to be impossible to say that the Defendants were under any liability at all. He was clearly of opinion that the doctrine of common employment did apply to this case.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 236 OF 1911. BABAR ALI BASAR, Appellant v. SHEIK KUMAD BOSE RAI CHOWDHRY, Respondent. Heard, 10th and 11th April, 1912. Judgment, 11th April 1912.

Decree, adjustment of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 2—Admission by father—Son, if can execute decree.

A suit was brought by the father of the two Respondents in the present appeal and by his brother Sudhanya Roy against the present Appellant and a decree was obtained on the 9th September 1907. In October 1907, a sum of Rs. 200 was admittedly paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holders. Afterwards, Sudhanya Roy, the brother of the father of the Respondents, brought a partition suit against his brother Sital Roy and, in his plaint, he alleged that Sital had not entered in the assets of the family property the decree which they had obtained on the 9th September 1907, against Babar Ali. Sital, in his written statement, put in an objection to this allegation. He said that, at the time when this decree was obtained by the two brothers against Babar Ali, there was enmity between them and Babar Ali, that afterwards Babar Ali had come under their influence and Rs. 200 was accepted in full satisfaction of that decree and that Babar Ali was given to understand that he was exempted from further liability. Afterwards when satisfaction was certified to the Court, the payment was certified as made only in satisfaction of one instalment due under that decree. Sital afterwards died and Sudhanya, his brother, after putting in a petition admitting receipt of another Rs. 200 from Babar Ali in Aghran 1316, filed a certificate admitting full satisfaction of his half share of the decree and then put in the application which gave rise to the present appeal, in which he sought on behalf of the two minor sons of Sital for execution of the decree for the balance which, he alleged, was outstanding in their favour.

The Court of first instance dismissed the application. The order was set aside on appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the point for consideration was not one falling under the provisions of r. 2 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but was, whether in the face of the admission made by the father, the two sons were entitled to succeed in the present application.

In ordinary cases, no Court should accept any payment in satisfaction of a decree or any adjustment made in satisfaction of a decree which was not certified to the executing Court as contemplated by Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 63 AND 64 OF 1911. SRI SRI GODS GOPINATH JEW AND ANOTHER, by their shebait BHARAT RAMANUJA MAHANTA, Appellant v. THE MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD. 12th April 1912.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 5 (5), 6, 158—Tenure-holder—Rent, permanently fixed—Rent, if becomes enhancible because amount changed by agreement.

The appeals arose out of a proceeding under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the only point was whether the Appellant was a tenure-holder or a raiyyat holding at fixed rates, and if a tenure-holder, whether his rent was liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenure.

The terms under which the tenure was held from 1848 and possibly before, were to the effect that "there shall be no increase or diminution of the above rent," that is the rent of Rs. 17 sicca. As a result of litigation and possibly to buy peace, the Mohant entered into an arrangement with the zemindars that if they restored him to the right to which he was entitled, he was quite willing to pay rent of Rs. 108-13-12.

The Court of first instance held that the Appellant was a raiyyat holding at fixed rates. On appeal to the District Judge it was held that he was a tenure-holder and his rent was liable to enhancement. On second appeal it was held by Mr. Justice Coxe that he was not in a position to interfere with the decision of the lower Appellate Court, though the inclination of his mind was in favour of holding that the present Appellant was not a tenure-holder, but a raiyyat. From his judgment, the present appeals were preferred.

Held, that the Appellant was a tenure-holder; he was one to whom the presumption for which provision is made in sub-sec. (5) of sec. 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, applied.

That the effect of the whole arrangement was that in place of Rs. 17 sicca Rs. 108 was the rental, but subject to the same provisions as were contained in the original tenancy. That his rent was not liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenure.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, Babus Biraj Mohan Mojumdar and Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Joges Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

Hindu Mitakshara joint family—Mortgage of family property executed by adult brother alleging same to be impartible to pay off father's debt—Minor brother signing deed as assenting party, how far bound—Minor, deed executed by, if void or voidable.

Where during the minority of the younger of two Mitakshara co-parceners who were brothers the elder executed a mortgage of the family property falsely declaring the same to be impartible and to have descended to him alone and that his brother was entitled only to an allowance for maintenance, and the infant brother also joined in order that the fact of his having signed the deed might afford evidence that he had assented to the taking of the loan by his brother and the granting of the mortgage :

Held—That even if it was established that the elder brother had taken the loan for the purpose of discharging a debt contracted by their father the debt could not on the face of the deed be regarded as one contracted by the elder brother as manager of a joint family consisting of himself and his younger brother.

That the deed did not affect the minor or his interest, being, so far as he or his interest was concerned, not merely voidable but void and of no effect.

These were consolidated appeals from two judgments* and decrees of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, dated the 27th March 1906, which modified a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 14th April 1903.

The principal question raised on the present appeals was the extent of the liability in law of the Respondent Maharaj Singh to discharge a debt evidenced by a bond executed on the 28th October 1892 in favour of the Bank of Upper India.

The facts giving rise to the litigation were as follows :—

The original owner of the property in suit was one Dilsukh Rai, to whom certain villages were granted by Government under sanads, dated the 20th May 1859 and 22nd September 1864, in consideration of services rendered by him in the Indian Mutiny, and the title of Raja was also conferred upon him. He died on the 11th March 1880 and was succeeded by his only son Shankar Singh who died on the 24th August 1891 leaving him surviving two sons the elder of whom was Sheoraj Singh and the younger Maharaj Singh, the Respondent. The title of Raja had been conferred on Shankar Singh also.

Shankar Singh died considerably indebted, and on the 28th October 1892 Sheoraj Singh and Maharaj Singh borrowed the sum of three lacs of rupees from the Bank of Upper India, Limited, to discharge existing debts and executed a mortgage bond in favour of the said Bank. The material portion of the bond is set out in their Lordships' judgment. The money so obtained was proved to have been applied in part to the discharge of the debts of Shankar Singh.

On the 2nd August 1897, the said Bank assigned their mortgage to Raja Balwant Singh who instituted the present suit on the 26th September 1901, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh. The Defendants to the suit were Sheoraj Singh, Maharaj Singh and several persons who were in possession of portions of the mortgaged property. Among the latter was the Respondent, the Reverend Rockwell Clancy, as representing the Mission Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church of India, who on the 28th July 1899 had purchased some lands in the village of Kasgarj from Sheoraj Singh. The plaintiff claimed payment of the mortgage money, and in default of payment prayed for a sale of the mortgaged property.

Sheoraj Singh filed a written statement in defence and pleaded that the property in suit being a grant from Government was inalienable, and that he had made an oral agreement with the Appellant modifying the terms of the registered mortgage. These defences were negatived by both Courts in India.

Maharaj Singh also filed a written statement. His main defences were that he was a minor, i.e., under the age of 18 years at the time of the execution of the bond in suit and that by the Hindu law he was under no obligation to discharge his father's debts all of which were contracted "for unlawful and immoral purposes." He alleged further that the estate was not impartible; that he was separate from his brother; that he had not consented to the mutation of names in favour of Sheoraj Singh, and that the bond in suit had been signed by him in consequence of the undue influence of his brother and the fraud of the said Bank.

After recording evidence, both oral and documentary, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment on the 14th April 1903. He held that the bond in suit was validly executed and attested; that the evidence given by Maharaj Singh and his witnesses as to the time and place of execution was false, and that the evidence as to execution under the pressure of undue influence was equally false. He came to the conclusion that Maharaj Singh had in October 1892 already attained majority, and that the evidence produced by him as to the date of his birth was untrue and unreliable. He found that the whole of the consideration was duly paid and in fact applied to the discharge of previous debts. He was also of opinion that the previous debts were not contracted for immoral or illegal purposes by Raja Shankar Singh, and that by the ordinary Hindu law Maharaj Singh was under a legal obligation to discharge them, whether he had or had not attained majority in October 1892. Lastly, he held that the property sold to the mission was covered by the said mortgage. In accordance with the above findings he made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

Against the said decree Maharaj Singh and the Reverend Rockwell Clancy lodged separate appeals in the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, and both the said appeals were disposed of by judgments* delivered on the 27th March 1906. The High Court (Sir J. Stanley, C. J., and Sir W. Burkitt, J.) came to the conclusion that Maharaj Singh was under the age of 18 years at the time the mortgage in suit was executed. The High Court also decided that the debts contracted by Raja Shankar Singh were incurred for illegal and immoral purposes creating no liability on Maharaj Singh to discharge them even if a liability under the general Hindu law could be enforced in the present suit. In the result the High Court made a decree affirming the liability of Sheoraj Singh alone and directing a sale of his half share in the property mortgaged, while it reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge qua Maharaj Singh and exempted him and his property from all liability in connection with the deed in suit. It also allowed the appeal of Reverend Clancy to the extent of a moiety of the property purchased by the said church. Hence this appeal.

* Reported in I. L. R. 128 All. 508 (1906).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellant submitted that the conclusions of the Court of first instance were right. The Court had seen and heard the witnesses and its finding that Maharaj Singh was a major was amply supported by documentary evidence and the conduct of Maharaj Singh. The evidence produced by the other side was unreliable. Further, even supposing that Maharaj Singh was a minor he was liable to pay his father's debts under the Hindu law. The debts have not been shown to have been incurred for unlawful or immoral purposes. Sheoraj Singh was the elder brother and was naturally the manager of the joint family. Maharaj Singh was bound by his acts. The debts were binding on the joint family property, and the bond in suit was executed by Sheoraj Singh to pay debts for which both he and his younger brother were liable. The form of the bond was immaterial. It is settled law that Courts in India ought not to give effect to technicalities, but ought to do substantial justice. It is proved here that the assignors of the Appellant discharged the antecedent debts for which the family was liable.

In equity the Appellant ought not to suffer, for what was done in reality was that the bond in suit was executed by the major brother on behalf and for the benefit of the joint family. Reference was made to Cazee Oahud Buksh v. Bindoo Bashinee (1), Succaram Moraji v. Kalidas Kalianji (2), Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (3), William McLean v. Allexander McKay (4). And further, onus lies on the son to prove that the debt is immoral. Bhagbut Pershad v. Girja Koer (5). There was no difference in principle whether the property has passed out of the family or not. What is necessary for the lender is to look at the actual pressure on the estate at the time of the loan. If a purchaser takes without notice the transfer is absolutely good. So also when there is a pending sale and execution and a transfer is made to release the property from sale, the sons cannot set up immorality. In any case mere proof that the father generally led an immoral life was not enough—some connection must be shown between the debt in question and immoral conduct. RAJA BALWANT SINGH v. THE REVEREND ROCKWELL CLANCY.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Brown for the Respondent submitted that the minority of Maharaj Singh was established by cogent evidence, and that being so the bond in suit was absolutely void. Sheoraj Singh was throughout endeavouring to set up an exclusive title in himself and in fact he alone executed the bond. He was acting adversely to Maharaj Singh, and could not be said to have been acting as a manager of the joint family on behalf of Maharaj Singh. As to whether Sheoraj Singh was or was not a managing member it was question of fact and was not put in issue before the lower Courts.

Mr. L. DeGruyther replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are two consolidated appeals from decrees of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, dated the 27th March 1906, which varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 14th April 1903.

The suit in which these appeals have arisen was brought on the 26th September 1901 by the assignee of a mortgage to recover Rs. 5,67,978-8-0 principal and interest, claimed under the deed of mortgage. The mortgage deed, which is dated the 28th October 1892, purports to have been made between Raja Sheoraj Singh Bahadur, mortgagor, of the first part, Maharaj Singh, the only brother of the said Raja Sheoraj Singh, of the second part, and the Bank of Upper India, Limited, of the third part. Sheoraj Singh and Maharaj Singh were, with others, made Defendants to the suit.

Sheoraj Singh was the sole mortgagor, and by the deed of mortgage, Sheoraj Singh, declaring that he was the absolute owner in possession of the several villages, lands, hereditaments, and premises in the deed mentioned, and that there was no sharer in the said property, purported to mortgage the property to the Bank of Upper India, Limited, as security for the repayment with interest of Rs. 3,00,000 lent to him by the Bank. Maharaj Singh was not a mortgagor, nor did it appear by the mortgage deed that he had any proprietary interest in the mortgaged property or was obtaining any benefit from the loan to his brother Sheoraj Singh; Maharaj Singh was made a party to the deed of mortgage in order that the fact of his having signed the deed might afford evidence that he had assented to the taking of the loan by Sheoraj Singh and the granting of the mortgage. The suit is one for sale of the property mentioned in the mortgage deed, and by the suit the Plaintiff sought to make Maharaj Singh personally liable for the mortgage debt and interest, and to bring to sale Maharaj Singh's share in the mortgaged property, which in fact was the ancestral property of the joint Hindu family which at the date of the mortgage consisted of Sheoraj Singh and Maharaj Singh. The mortgage was assigned on the 2nd August 1897 by the Bank of Upper India, Limited, to Raja Balwant Singh, who was the Plaintiff in the suit. Raja Balwant Singh is now dead, and his minor son, Raja Surajpal Singh, is represented in this litigation by the Collector of Etah, who is in charge of his estate.

Sheoraj Singh, the mortgagor, is the elder of the two sons of Raja Shankar Singh, now dead. The younger of the two sons of Raja Shankar Singh is Maharaj Singh, a Defendant in the suit, and the Respondent in one of these two appeals. Raja Shankar Singh was the only son of Raja Dilsukh Rai, long since dead. At the time of the Indian Mutiny of 1857-58, Dilsukh Rai, who was then a patwari, did good and meritorious service for the Government. In recognition of those services the Government granted to Dilsukh Rai a considerable estate, now said to produce annually some Rs. 50,000 gross income. The lands granted to Dilsukh Rai were not granted as an impartible estate. They are the lands which were mortgaged by Sheoraj Singh to the Bank of Upper India, Limited. In further recognition of his services the Government conferred upon Dilsukh Rai the title of Raja as a personal distinction. Raja Dilsukh Rai was a saving and apparently a penurious man. On his death the estate was unencumbered, and he left a large sum of money which he had accumulated. The Government also conferred upon Shankar Singh the title of Raja as a personal distinction. The title was never made hereditary, and although Sheoraj Singh was described in the mortgage deed as a Raja he was not entitled to be so described. Raja Shankar Singh borrowed considerable sums of money, and died on the 24th August 1891 leaving debts which he had contracted undischarged. It was to discharge those debts of Raja Shankar Singh, and also some debts which had been contracted by Sheoraj Singh, that the mortgage on which this suit has been brought was made by Sheoraj Singh.

Several issues were raised and tried in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. One of those issues arose on a defence of Maharaj Singh that at the date of the mortgage he was under the age of 18 years, and being at that date a minor was legally incapable of entering into any contract or of binding himself or his interest in the estate by his execution of the deed of mortgage as an assenting party to the taking of the loan and the granting of the mortgage by Sheoraj Singh. Another issue which was tried by the Subordinate Judge related to an alternative case which the Plaintiff put forward, by which he sought to make Maharaj Singh and his interest in the estate liable for the payment of the money due under the mortgage, on the alleged ground that it was his duty as a Hindu son to pay with interest the money advanced by the Bank of Upper India, Limited, to Sheoraj Singh, as that money had been lent by the Bank to Sheoraj Singh to discharge the debts which had been contracted by Raja Shankar Singh and had been applied by Sheoraj Singh to the discharge of those debts. On behalf of Maharaj Singh it was alleged in answer to the Plaintiff's alternative case that Raja Shankar Singh had contracted those debts for the purposes of immorality, and it was consequently contended that there was no duty on his sons to discharge them by payment, and that the payment of those debts by Sheoraj Singh out of money lent to him by the Bank of Upper India, Limited, for that purpose, created no liability on Maharaj Singh or his interest in the family estate.

The Subordinate Judge found as a fact that at the date of the mortgage, the 28th October 1892, Maharaj Singh was of full age, and being apparently under the impression that in obtaining the loan from the Bank of Upper India, Limited, and in making the mortgage, Sheoraj Singh might be regarded as having acted as the manager of the joint Hindu family, the Subordinate Judge dealt with the Plaintiff's alternative case and found that it was not proved that the debts which had been contracted by Raja Shankar Singh had been contracted for the purposes of immorality, and exempting certain portions of the property which were held by persons who are not parties to either of these appeals, made a decree for sale of the rest of the property mentioned in the deed of mortgage. With the portions of the property which were exempted from sale these appeals are not concerned.

From that decree of the Subordinate Judge Maharaj Singh and another Defendant, the Reverend J. B. Thomas, who is now represented by the Reverend Rockwell Clancy, filed separate appeals in the High Court. The High Court on a careful and exhaustive review of the evidence found as a fact that Maharaj Singh was a minor on the 28th October 1892, and consequently that the mortgage deed as against him and his interest in the estate was void. Although the High Court obviously considered that an inquiry into the origin and nature of the debts which had been contracted by Raja Shankar Singh was irrelevant in this suit, the High Court reluctantly, and only in view of the question possibly becoming material in an appeal from their decree, carefully considered the evidence bearing on that question, and found as a fact that the debts which Raja Shankar Singh had contracted had been contracted by him for the purposes of immorality. The High Court allowed the appeal of Maharaj Singh, dismissed the suit so far as Maharaj Singh and his interests in the estate were concerned, and, by a separate decree allowed the appeal of the Reverend J. B. Thomas to the extent of a moiety of the property claimed by him. From those decrees of the High Court these consolidated appeals have been brought. In support of the appeal in which the Reverend Rockwell Clancy is a Respondent no argument has been addressed to their Lordships to show that the appeal against the decree of the High Court which was passed in the appeal of the Reverend J. B. Thomas could be supported if the appeal against the decree obtained by Maharaj Singh in the High Court should fail.

Some of the questions which had been considered in the Courts below were on behalf of the Appellant argued at considerable length before this Board, and it was also contended on his behalf that in borrowing the Rs. 3,00,000 from the Bank of Upper India, Limited, and in making the mortgage of the 28th October 1892, Sheoraj Singh had acted as the manager of the family, and for the benefit and protection of the estate, and consequently, as it was urged, that it was immaterial whether Maharaj Singh was or was not of full age at the date of the mortgage. It will be convenient to deal with that contention at once. The contention that Sheoraj Singh had acted as the manager of the family in borrowing the Rs. 3,00,000, and in making the mortgage, is unfounded. Evidence, oral and documentary, which their Lordships accept as reliable, proves that Sheoraj Singh, after the death of his father, Raja Shankar Singh, assumed without authority the title of Raja, and asserted that the family estate was impartible, and as an impartible estate had descended to him as the elder son of Raja Shankar Singh, and that his brother Maharaj Singh was entitled only to an allowance for maintenance. It was in that assumed position as the absolute owner of an impartible estate, and not as manager of a joint Hindu family, that he obtained the loan from the Bank of Upper India, Limited, and made the mortgage in favour of the Bank. The mortgage deed was drawn up by an official of the Bank, and in that deed Sheoraj Singh is described as Raja Sheoraj Singh Bahadur, mortgagor, and it is recited that—"the said mortgagor is the absolute owner or proprietor of the several villages, lands, hereditaments, and premises hereinafter mentioned, and more particularly described in the schedule hereto attached and intended to be hereby mortgaged in possession free from all incumbrances save and except being mortgaged and under attachment of decrees as mentioned hereinafter . . . and the said Maharaj Singh, brother of the said mortgagor, has been made a party to this Indenture in order to make known his consent and approval to this loan being taken, and the said villages, lands, hereditaments, and premises, being mortgaged as security for the same, and the said mortgagor doth hereby declare that the said property is absolutely his own and he has full power to alienate the same by a mortgage sale or otherwise, and that he has only one brother, the said Maharaj Singh, and no sons or any sharer in the said property."

In face of that deed it cannot be contended that the Bank of Upper India, Limited, lent the money to Sheoraj Singh, or that Sheoraj Singh made the mortgage in favour of the Bank as manager of the joint Hindu family, which consisted of himself and Maharaj Singh. The Bank of Upper India, Limited, made some inefficient enquiries, and lent the Rs. 3,00,000 to Sheoraj Singh, not as the manager or even as a member of a joint Hindu family, but in his assumed position as the absolute owner of an impartible estate. Sheoraj Singh, on his own behalf and in his own interests, and not as representing Maharaj Singh, discharged the debts which Raja Shankar Singh had contracted. It need hardly be observed that Sheoraj Singh was not an ancestor or a predecessor of Maharaj Singh; he was at the date of the mortgage merely a co-sharer with his brother Maharaj Singh in the property of the joint Hindu family of which they were members.

The evidence on the question of Maharaj Singh's age on the 28th October 1892 is partly oral and partly documentary. According to the evidence, oral and documentary, which the High Court considered to be entirely reliable, Maharaj Singh was born on the 20th December 1874, and consequently was under the age of 18 years on the 28th October 1892. The Subordinate Judge had treated the oral evidence that Maharaj Singh had been born on the 28th October 1874, as the false evidence of perjured witnesses, and had treated the documentary evidence as fabricated on behalf of Maharaj Singh for the purposes of his defence to the suit. Before coming to the conclusion that Maharaj Singh was born on the 20th December 1874, the High Court, bearing in mind the adverse comments of the Subordinate Judge on that oral and documentary evidence, and with the object of ascertaining how far, if at all, the comments and findings of the Subordinate Judge were justified, had carefully considered the oral evidence of the witnesses, and had examined the documents and papers which had been put in evidence. There was some other documentary evidence which standing alone and unexplained would suggest that Maharaj Singh had probably arrived at the full age of 18 years before the 28th October 1892.

The oral and documentary evidence upon which the High Court relied for their finding that Maharaj Singh was a minor when he signed the mortgage deed on the 28th October 1892 has been criticised minutely and at length by the learned Counsel who argued these appeals on behalf of the Appellant, but their Lordships are unable to see any reason for doubting, on the question of the date of birth of Maharaj Singh, the evidence of Pandit Ganesh Ram, Pancham Ram, Jhamman Lah, Ram Prasad, Ganesha Ram, the barber, and the Defendant-Respondent, Maharaj Singh. If the evidence of those witnesses is believed, Maharaj Singh was born on the 20th December 1874. The documentary evidence as to the date of birth of Maharaj Singh is in their Lordships' opinion not open to suspicion. Pandit Ganesh Ram proved that he prepared the tewa or abstract horoscope on the day when Maharaj Singh was born, and from it prepared the horoscope which was presented to Raja Dilsukh Rai on the day of the Daston ceremony. The tewa and the horoscope were put in evidence. The horoscope bears upon it in the writing of Raja Dilsukh Rai the name Maharaj Singh which Raja Dilsukh Rai gave to his grandson at the Daston. That horoscope was produced and examined on the occasion of the marriage of Maharaj Singh, and it has been clearly and amply identified as the original horoscope relating to the birth of Maharaj Singh. Ram Prasad, who with other pandits, was called in on the birth of Maharaj Singh to prepare a horoscope, produced the almanac in which at the time he had entered the birth of a son in the house of Kunwar Shankar Singh under the date 12th Aghan Sudi, Sambat 1931, which was the 20th December 1874. Ganesha, who was the family barber, took the news of the birth of a son of Shankar Singh from Bilram to Raja Dilsukh Rai at Etah, and received from him a present of Rs. 2. Ganesha also said in his evidence that on that occasion Raja Dilsukh Rai gave Rs. 50 to Balwant Singh for household expenses. The original accounts of the expenditure of Raja Dilsukh Rai, which according to the evidence bear his signature, on the occasions when he examined them, show that in December 1874 Rs. 2 were given to Ganesha, barber, who brought the news of the birth of a son in the house of Kunwar Sahib, who was Raja Shankar Singh, and which show that Rs. 50 was sent to Bilram on account of the birth of a son in the house of Kunwar Singh, who was Raja Shankar Singh. Ganesha, the barber, proved that that son was Maharaj Singh, and there is no evidence to show that Raja Shankar Singh ever had more than two sons. Their Lordships cannot regard that oral and documentary evidence as false or even as open to suspicion. In their opinion it conclusively proves that Maharaj Singh was a minor when he signed the mortgage deed on the 28th October 1892. There is, however, documentary evidence that prior to the 28th October 1892, Maharaj Singh had acted as if he was of full age. For instance, on the 26th May 1892, Maharaj Singh signed a vakalatnama appointing Muhammad Tahir Husain, a pleader, as his attorney in a suit in which he and Sheoraj Singh were Defendants, and authorising Muhammad Tahir Husain to appear for him, to file documentary evidence, and to refer the matter to arbitrators or to enter into a compromise. In that suit Sheoraj Singh, in his written statement of the 26th May 1892, made an allegation in reference to sec. 444 of the Code of Civil Procedure which can be construed only as meaning that Maharaj Singh was at that date a minor. For another instance, in a suit in which Sheoraj Singh and Maharaj Singh were Plaintiffs, they, on the 13th August 1892, signed a vakalatnama appointing Muhammad Tahir Husain, pleader, their attorney, and authorising him to act for them in the suit. On the other hand, on the 19th August 1892, a decree was made in a suit which had been instituted on the 14th July 1892, and in which Maharaj Singh had been treated throughout as a minor under the guardianship of his brother, Sheoraj Singh. It is probable that until it became necessary in this suit to ascertain the actual date of the birth of Maharaj Singh, neither he nor Sheoraj Singh knew his precise age. However that may have been, their Lordships find as a fact on the clear and reliable evidence to which they have referred, that Maharaj Singh was a minor under the age of 18 years when he signed the mortgage deed of the 28th October 1892.

Having found as a fact that Maharaj Singh was a minor on the 28th October 1892, it is not necessary for their Lordships to consider any other issue. This suit has been brought on the mortgage deed of the 28th October 1892 by the assignee of that mortgage, and as their Lordships have held that the mortgage was not made by Sheoraj Singh as the manager of the family, or in any respect as representing Maharaj Singh, and as Maharaj Singh was then a minor, the mortgage deed as against him and his interest in the estate was not merely voidable, it was void and of no effect, and must be regarded as a mortgage deed to which he was not even an assenting party and as a mortgage deed which did not affect him or his interest in the estate.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decrees of the High Court be affirmed and these appeals be dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal against a decree of Babu Aditya Charan ChukraburTTY, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 18th of September 1909, affirming that of Babu Debendra Nath Pal, Munsif of Tangal, dated the 27th of April 1909.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows:—

The Defendant No. 1 in this suit executed a mortgage in favour of the Plaintiffs on the 11th Baisak 1312, in respect of certain properties. The document was not registered in time and after four months had elapsed from the date of execution of the mortgage the mortgagor Defendant changed the date 11th Baisak into 11th Asarh, and got the document registered on that basis. Subsequently the mortgagor granted a lease and a putni to the other Defendants in respect of some of these properties. The mortgagees now sued on the mortgage and the lessee Defendants opposed his suit on the grounds inter alia that as the mortgage deed had been presented for registration out of time the Sub-Registrar had no jurisdiction to register it, and the registration by him did not have the effect of binding the mortgaged property. Both the Courts below found against the Defendants on this point. The lower Appellate Court in the course of its judgment observed as follows :—

“I hold that notwithstanding the alteration in the date the document is a valid mortgage bond enforceable against the mortgagor and the subsequent puttanidars under him. It is clear from the evidence in the record that the bond was executed by the mortgagor on the 11th Baisak and that it was on that date duly attested by witnesses and that the consideration money stated in the bond did pass. The Plaintiff is an inhabitant of Dacca District. The mortgagor is an inhabitant of Tangail Sub-Division within Mymensingh District. The mortgagor presented the document to the Sub-Registrar for registration of it and he appears to me to have made the alterations in the date adding a kaisiat and putting his signature thereunder. It is therefore reasonable to believe as is the case under ordinary course of things that the Defendant No. 1, the mortgagor, obtained the deed from the Registration office after its registration and made it over to Plaintiff's officer. Thus if there was any fraud in altering the date in the bond, the mortgagor did it and he alone is to blame. So the mortgagor and the Appellants who derived their title from the mortgagor about a year after the registration of the deed cannot in equity, justice and good conscience take advantage of that fraud and alterations to the prejudice of the Plaintiffs who are in no way to blame. The Court should not in this case go behind the certificate granted by the registering officer who had full jurisdiction to register the deed. The rulings cited by the learned pleader for the Appellants do not apply to the facts of this case. It is not a case where Sub-Registrar had no jurisdiction as the lands covered by the bond in suit are within his jurisdiction. Had the alteration been made without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagor, then the rulings reported in Indian Law Reports, 33 C. S. 812 and 12 M. S. 239, would apply. But in this case the alteration was made by the mortgagor himself and without the knowledge of the Plaintiff.

The lessee Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Nares Chandra Sen-Gupta for the Appellants.

Babus Harendra Narain Mitter and Rajendra Chandra Guha for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Defendants in a mortgage suit. The mortgage was executed by Defendant No. 1 who is not a party to the appeal. The Appellants are two persons, one of whom took a lease of some property comprised in the mortgage and the other took a putni lease of properties equally encumbered. The Plaintiffs sued on their mortgage and recovered judgment. The objection taken by the Defendants is that the mortgage deed was presented for registration more than four months after the execution, that to enable it to be registered under the law the date was altered by the mortgagor and thereby registration was obtained which was not warranted by law. The mortgage was executed on the 24th April 1905. It was registered on the 21st September 1905, the date having been altered to the 25th June 1905. The lease taken by one of the Appellants was not taken till September 1906, and the other some time after. The result therefore is that the leases were taken long after the registration of the mortgage deed. Now no question of fraud of any kind arises in the case because the mortgagor wrote on the deed an explanation pointing out that this change in the date of the deed had been made. The mortgagee accepted the deed with the altered date; so it must be taken that as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee the alteration was consented to; and as between them the mortgage would take effect only from the later date to which the document had been altered. That being the state of things, in our opinion it is not open to the Defendants, the lessees, to complain. Supposing it be assumed for the purposes of argument that the deed was wrongly registered, there being no fraud, the mortgagor would be estopped from setting up this alteration in the deed as an answer to the claim of the mortgagee. In our view, the Appellants having taken their leases subsequent to the alteration, in the absence of any fraud, cannot stand in any better position than the mortgagor and are equally estopped from taking the objection which they rely upon. The matter would have been different if in any way the Appellants had been defrauded. As prudent men they ought to have enquired at the registration office to see whether there was any encumbrance. If they had done so they would have discovered that there was this mortgage before their leases. Under these circumstances we must affirm the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), sec. 54—Purchaser of share of revenue-paying estate—Suit to recover from person in wrongful possession from before sale—Limitation.

A purchaser at a revenue sale of a share in a revenue-paying estate is not a person claiming from or through the defaulter but rather adversely to him and under a paramount title.

A person who has not acquired title as against the defaulter by adverse possession for the full statutory period, cannot resist the purchaser's suit for recovery unless his possession has been adverse to the purchaser's for the statutory period.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

Taluk Hari Narayan was originally one property. It was subsequently divided into three separate taluks. Taluk Hari Narayan T. N. 75, Taluk Gouripriya T. N. 76, Taluk Rampriya T. N. 77. These three taluks lay to the east, north and west of a Government khas mehal named Uddamdi No. 37. There was a river named Goomti or Titas between the khas mehal and these taluks. This river shifted northwards and cut away the lands of the three taluks and as the river receded these diluviated lands have reformed and the present suit is in respect of lands reformed in situ of the three taluks 75, 76 and 77.

The Government khas mehal No. 37 was from time to time settled temporarily with the proprietors of the three taluks until 1885, when it was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by one Bango Chandra Gope as the benamdar of the contesting Defendants who in return for his services gave him an one anna share in the purchase. We may take it as the result of the findings as admitted at the Bar that the possession of the contesting Defendants became adverse to the owners of taluks 75, 76 and 77 in respect of the disputed lands which they claimed as parts of their newly-purchased mehal, khas mehal No. 37, from the year 1885. In this state of things the residuary share of Taluk Hari Narayan No. 75 was sold for arrears of revenue in 1892, and purchased by the predecessor-in-title of the Plaintiffs who subsequently purchased the entire Taluks Gouripriya and Rampriya in 1894.

The present suit was brought just within 12 years of the purchase of the residuary share of Taluk Hari Narayan by the predecessor-in-title of the Plaintiffs and the main question in this appeal is whether the suit so far as that taluk is concerned is barred by limitation. It is admitted that the sale was under sec. 54 of Act XI of 1859. The section says the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners. The learned Judge has held that on the principle laid down in the case of Kalanand Singh v. Sarafat Hosein (1), the purchaser "becomes entitled to recover possession of the share in the same manner in which the former owner would have done" i.e., "the time of adverse possession which has run against the former owner counts against him also." If this view of the law were correct, the adverse possession commencing from 1885, had run for about 7 years up to the date of sale in 1892 and the Plaintiffs would have about 5 years more to bring this suit and the suit would be barred as it was not brought within that time. It is necessary therefore to examine whether that view of the law is correct.

The case of Kalanand Singh v. Sarafat Hosein (1) does not lay down the rule derived from it by the learned Judge. There is an observation that the purchaser steps into the shoes of the former owner and becomes entitled to recover possession in the same manner in which the former owner would have done, but the next observation is—"It follows therefore that whether the adverse possession is completed before or whether it is completed after the date of default the purchaser at the revenue sale in either case becomes entitled to the possession of the share." It does not lay down that if time has begun to run against the former owner it will continue running against the purchaser and it could not lay down such a rule as the adverse possession had in that case been completed before the sale.

It is contended that the last part of sec. 54 indicates that the purchaser can get no rights not possessed by the defaulter at the time of the sale. That part of the section has been interpreted however in the case of Annoda Pershad Ghose v. Rajendra Kumar Ghose (2), as meaning that the purchaser shall not acquire any right not possessed by the previous owner at any time. The same view was held in the case of Bhowani Koer v. Mathura Proshad (3). The purchaser purchases the share and not the right, title and interest of the defaulter. In the case of a sale of a share in the possession of a Hindu widow it was contended that only the life-interest passed, this contention was however overruled; see Debi Das v. Bipro Churn (4), Banalata Dasi v. Monmotha Nath Goswami (5). It is not contended that possession for less than 12 years is an encumbrance but that as the sale was admittedly subject to encumbrances the Plaintiff claims from or through the defaulter and the adverse possession against the defaulter was adverse against the Plaintiff within the meaning of Art. 144 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act. We do not find any authority for this proposition. In respect of sales of entire estates and tenures free of encumbrances under the sale laws it has been held that the purchaser does not claim from or through the defaulter and is bound neither by his acts nor by his laches: Munshi Bazloul Rahman v. Prandhun Dutt (6) and see Watson & Co. v. Nobin Mohun Baboo (7), Nuffar Chandra Pal Choudhury v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (8); nor is he bound by any judgments binding on him: Radha Gobinda Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji (9), Gadadhar Bose v. Radha Charan Poddar (10). If the purchaser of an estate free from encumbrances under sec. 37 is not a person claiming from or through the defaulter the person who purchases a share subject to encumbrances under sec. 54 is also not a person claiming from or through the defaulter. Subject to the restrictions imposed by the statute each of them purchases the property sold by the Collector and claims under a paramount title not derived from the defaulter but obtained so to say adversely to him. In a suit for possession by him, when he has never been in possession after his purchase the Defendant must show that his possession has been adverse to him for more than 12 years. This the Defendants have admittedly not shown. In this view of the law the suit of the Plaintiff is not barred by limitation and the appeal must be allowed and the suit of the Plaintiffs decreed with costs in both Courts. They will recover the lands

No. 95 of 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J. CARNDUFF, J. 1911, Heard, 8 and 15, August Judgment, 28, August.)	LAL MOHAR THAKUR and another, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. SHEW GOLAM LAL and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Contribution, suit for—Revenue-paying estate—Owner of specific villages paying entire revenue—Proportion in which other owners should contribute—Assets as basis of calculation, if those at revenue settlement or those at the date of default to be considered—Collectorate Registers, admissibility—Public document.

Where Government revenue payable in respect of an estate was fixed in perpetuity on the basis of assets as they stood at the time of the settlement, and the assets were at that time determined village by village and revenue proportionate to the assets of each village was also calculated, although the proprietor of the entire estate was made liable for the aggregate amount of revenue,

Held—That as between persons in whom in course of time different villages in the mehal became vested the liability to contribute towards the revenue was to be fixed on the basis of the assets of the villages as determined at the settlement and not as found on valuation at the date of default.

Collectorate Registers giving details as to the areas of the different villages and the Government revenue chargeable thereon at the time of the settlement were admissible in evidence as public documents, although it might not be possible to specify with absolute certainty for what purpose the measurements had been made and the registers prepared.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of January 1909 against the decrees of M. Smither, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Shahabad, dated the 26th of August 1908, reversing the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Arrah, dated the 31st of March 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against a decree by which the District Judge, in reversal of the decree of the Court of first instance, has dismissed a suit for contribution. The Plaintiffs and second and third Defendants are the joint-proprietors of the residuary share of an estate Sahia which bears No. 1211 on the Revenue Roll of the Collector of Shahabad. This residuary share comprises several villages and the aggregate Government revenue payable in respect thereof is Rs. 564-10 as. 6 p. annually together with road and public works cesses to the extent of Rs. 76-5. The Plaintiffs allege that the Defendants made default in the payment of revenue and cesses, with the result that they were driven to pay the same so as to save the

LAL MOHAR THAKUR v. SHEW GOLAM LAL.

† property from inevitable sale. They now seek contribution from the Defendants. The substantial question in controversy between the parties upon which the two Courts below have differed, relates to the principle upon which the respective liability of the parties is to be determined. It is necessary to mention at this stage that the different villages comprised in the residuary estate have become vested in different persons who are parties to this suit. As they are not in possession each of the same share in all the villages, their respective liability to pay the Government revenue cannot be specified as a defined share of the total revenue. The liability of each, it is not disputed, must be proportionate to the assets of the land allotted to him. The question in dispute relates to the point of time with reference to which the assets are to be determined. The Plaintiffs contend that the assets to be taken as the basis of contribution are the assets upon which the Government revenue was fixed. The Defendants contend, on the other hand, that the assets to be accepted as the basis of calculation, are the assets as they stand at the time of default in payment of Government revenue. The contention of the Plaintiffs found favour with the original Court, while that of the Defendants met with acceptance from the District Judge. In our opinion, the contention of the Plaintiffs is well-founded and must prevail.

The Government revenue is fixed in perpetuity and was based upon the assets as they stood at the time of settlement. In the case before us, the assets were determined, village by village, and the revenue proportionate to the assets of each village was also calculated, although the proprietor of the entire estate was made liable for the aggregate amount of revenue. The villages, as already stated, have, in course of time, become vested in different individuals. The question arises, if default is made by one of these persons, and the sale is averted by another, is the extent of the liability to be determined with reference to the assets on the basis whereof the revenue was calculated or upon the assets at the time of the default. It is obvious that if the present assets be adopted as the basis of calculation, grave injustice may be done to those amongst the proprietors who have improved the condition of the properties, vested in them, by their skill, capital or labour. According to the Defendants, the liability of the proprietors inter se must be adjusted from year to year. If a proprietor has by successful litigation increased his rent-roll, another proprietor who has been less diligent or possibly less adventurous, at once becomes entitled, on this theory, to bear a smaller share of the burden of the Government revenue. Again, if one proprietor judiciously lays out his capital, and thereby increases the assets of his village, his fellow-proprietor, who has taken no risks, finds himself in a position to transfer a portion of his burden to the other. To take another illustration, if the proprietor of one of the villages has the misfortune to lose a portion of his lands by diluvion (as has possibly happened in the case before us) or if part of his land has become sandy and unculturable or has relapsed into jungle, he can claim to throw the burden of revenue upon his fellow-proprietors who have in no way profited by the calamity which has befallen him and whose assets have remained unaltered from year to year. If the contention of the Defendants be adopted, it would thus furnish an inducement to the less prosperous and successful proprietor systematically to make default in the payment of revenue, with the result, that his honest fellow-proprietor must save the estate with his own money and then establish the extent of his right of contribution by proof of assets of villages which are not in his possession and of the condition whereof he has prima facie no knowledge. This process must be repeated from year to year, and in every successive suit for contribution there must be an elaborate enquiry as to the assets during the particular year in which the default has been made. We are unable to hold that the principle thus put forward by the Defendants is consistent with justice, equity and good conscience which, after all, must guide the Court in adjusting the respective liabilities of joint-owners of properties in contribution suits. On the other hand, the view maintained on behalf of the Plaintiffs does not lead to any injustice. The assets of every village, with reference to which the revenue, fixed in perpetuity, was originally assessed, is known. The person into whose hands a particular village passes, knows definitely the amount of revenue, which as between himself and his fellow-proprietors, he may be called upon to contribute. If by his diligence, skill, foresight or capital, he successfully increases the assets of the village vested in him, he does not on the mere ground of increase of assets, become liable to contribute a larger share of the revenue than before. In the same manner, if to his misfortune his assets are diminished, he cannot justly call upon the other proprietors to bear a portion of the burden which hitherto had been justly borne by him. But it has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the Defendants that sec. 10 of Reg. I of 1793, as also secs. 5 and 9 of the Estates

Partition Act (V of 1897, B. C.) militate against this view. The statutory provisions mentioned are, however, of no real assistance to the Defendants, for no question of permanent separation or apportionment of the revenue arises in the case before us. Nor do the decisions in Poorna Chandra v. Kishen Chandra (1) and Jugobundoo Roy v. Fyez Buksh (2), to which reference was made at the bar, throw any light upon the matter; the Court was not called upon in these cases to consider the point of time with reference to which the assets are to be determined for purposes of contribution. For the reasons we have explained, we are of opinion that, whenever as here, information is available, the assets accepted as the basis for assessment of the revenue, should also be adopted as the basis for purposes of contribution. We are not now called upon to consider what basis should be adopted in cases where such information is not forthcoming; in cases of that description, the Court may possibly assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the assets have remained unaltered and thus base the calculations upon the present assets.

We may add that a question appears to have been raised in the primary Court, and possibly also in the Court of Appeal below, as to the admissibility of Registers produced from the Collectorate. We are satisfied that there is no substance in the objection. The Registers are public documents, and give details as to the areas of the different villages and the Government revenue chargeable thereon at the time of the settlement though it may not be possible to specify with absolute certainty the purpose for which the measurements were made and the Registers prepared.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed, and the decree of the District Judge discharged. The case will be remitted to the District Judge in order that he may re-hear the appeals preferred to him by the Plaintiffs as well as by the Defendants on the basis of the information contained in the Registers. The Appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court, to be paid by the second and third Defendants. The other parties to the appeal will bear their own costs in this Court. The costs in the Court of first instance, as also the costs on the Court of Appeal below, both before and after this remand, will be in the discretion of the learned Judge who will re-hear the appeals.

Case remanded.

Contract of sale—Bought note signed by agent of trader residing out of jurisdiction, agent carrying on business within jurisdiction on behalf of principal—Breach of contract—Suit if lies—Letters Patent, sec. 12—Suit against firm—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 30, r. 10—Agent's authority—Failure to take delivery—Power of resale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 83—Appropriation of goods to fulfilment of contract—Measure of damages—Pleadings.

Where the Defendants by a power-of-attorney authorised their agent to carry on their business on their behalf with a limitation in the power that nothing therein contained should authorise the attorney to speculate in gunnies, opium, shares or exchange, and the agent under the power signed a bought note for the purchase of sugar from the Plaintiff on behalf of the Defendants :

Held—That the transaction was outside the express prohibition on speculation and that the mere imprudence of an act did not make it unauthorised.

Where in the contract power to resell was reserved in default of the buyer taking delivery on a certain date, but the seller on that date had in stock a much larger quantity of the goods in bulk than was required for the purpose of the contract, and the goods agreed to be sold had not been separated and made ready for delivery to the buyer at the time the buyer was asked to take delivery, and the buyer not having taken delivery of the greater portion of the goods the seller by virtue of the power of sale gave notice and resold the goods about a month after due date and claimed as damages the difference between the contract price and the resale price :

Held—That as the sellers had not appropriated the goods for the purpose of the contract, there were no goods to which the power of resale applied and the seller was not entitled to recover the difference between the contract price and the price at which the goods were resold.

Per HARRINGTON, J.—Sec. 12 of the Letters Patent gives the High Court in its Original Side express jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within its local limits and a suit for damages for breach of contract would lie against a person not residing within such local limits when he has been carrying on business within those limits through an agent. Or. XXX, r. 10 which says nothing about residence either within or without the jurisdiction does not curtail the Court's power over persons carrying on business within its local limits.

In respect of a firm transaction, the Defendant was properly sued under Or. XXX, r. 10 under the name in which he traded.

This was an action by sellers against buyers for damages for breach of contract to take delivery of certain bags of Java sugar. The contract was made on the 28th of February 1910. By it the Defendant purchased 750 tons of Java sugar, delivery to be made in five equal shipments in August, September, October, November and December 1910. Notice was given in September of the arrival of the August shipment amounting to 150 tons. After some pressure, the Defendant took delivery of 25 tons, but in spite of repeated notices, he failed to take delivery of the balance of the 125 tons. After due notice that they would resell the 125 tons the Plaintiff advertised and held a sale. The 125 tons were sold at a loss of Rs. 2,341-14-9 and to recover that sum together with the expenses of the sale and the charges made by the Port Commissioners and other items, making it up to a total of Rs. 2,745-12-6 this action was brought.

The contract in question was signed by a man named Misree per pro. Misree was the manager of the Defendant's business in Calcutta, the Defendant himself being a resident of Singapore.

The defence set up was, first, the Court had no jurisdiction over the Defendant a resident out of its jurisdiction, secondly, that Misree had no authority to enter into the contract sued upon, and, thirdly, that no goods had been appropriated to the fulfilment of this contract and that, therefore, the Plaintiffs have no right to resell and charge the Defendant for the difference between the contract price and the price at which they sold certain bags of sugar.

The case came on for hearing before Harington, J. His Lordship by his judgment, dated the 21st March 1911, overruled the first and the second pleas taken as above-mentioned by the Defendant, but upheld the third. His Lordship nevertheless was of opinion that the suit should not be dismissed inasmuch as the Plaintiff would have a right to recover the difference between the market price and the contract price of sugar at the date of the breach, assuming that the market had gone against the Defendant. The latest date as disclosed in the correspondence, on which the Defendants could have delivered was, his Lordship found, October 20th. His Lordship accordingly directed a reference to ascertain the market price of the undelivered portion of the 150 tons on October 20th and ordered that the Plaintiff would recover judgment for the difference as stated above if the market price fell below the contract price. The material portions of his Lordship's judgment were as follows :—

HARINGTON, J.—On the first point, a number of cases decided in English Courts have been cited for the purpose of showing that the Court would not seek to exercise jurisdiction over a single trader residing out of its jurisdiction notwithstanding the fact that he had an office within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. In my view those are cases which are not applicable in this country. The jurisdiction of this Court with regard to persons who are liable to be sued in it is derived from cl. 12 of the Charter. That clause gives the Court express jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within the local limits of its jurisdiction. In the present case, in two documents which have been put in, namely, in the power-of-attorney and in the printed notice circulated by the Defendant repudiating certain contracts, the Defendant describes himself as carrying on business in Calcutta. He brings himself thus within the express provision of cl. 12 of the Charter. It is true that he is sued in the firm's name instead of in his own name but the Plaintiffs are entitled in respect of a firm transaction to sue the Defendant under the name in which he traded by virtue of Or. XXX, r. 10. There is nothing in that Rule which says anything about residence either within or without the jurisdiction and it certainly has not the effect of curtailing the powers which this Court derives from the Charter under which it has jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within its local limits. In my view, therefore, the first point raised by the Defendant fails.

The second issue is as to the authority exercised by Misree. Now it is contended by the Defendant that, inasmuch as the contract was signed per pro. the Plaintiffs had notice that Misree was acting under the authority of a Power of Attorney. They were, therefore, put upon an enquiry as to what the limits of Misree's authority were. Then it is said that the Power of Attorney only entitled Misree to carry on business in the same way in which the Defendant carries on his business in Singapore and that, therefore, to show that the contract was one which Misree had authority to make it is necessary to show that a forward contract of this nature could be made in the ordinary course of business by the Defendant at Singapore. Now the Power of Attorney empowers two persons, namely, Faiz Ali Fazul Husen Kassim Ali of Singapore and Kassim Misree of Bankok, jointly or severally "to contract, superintend, manage and control and carry on in Calcutta aforesaid in the name of M. S. E. Angullia and Company the business of General Merchants as now carried on by me (the Defendant) in Singapore and elsewhere under the style and firm aforesaid" and inter alia it authorises them to contract, buy or sell goods and merchandise, and then, after reciting many powers which he places in the hands of attorneys, there is a proviso limiting their powers in these terms: "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorise my said attorneys or attorney to speculate in gunnies, opium, shares or exchange or to become sureties or surety for or in any way guarantee the debt or liabilities of any person or firm." Now, in the present case, there is evidence to the effect that the entering into forward contracts in the sugar trade is part of the business of the general merchants. There is evidence that, in fact, the Defendant's firm was accustomed in Calcutta at any rate, to enter into such contracts. There is the evidence of the present manager that, with respect to forward contracts made by Misree which resulted in a gain, he has been endeavouring to realise for the benefit of the Defendant that gain. It is only apparently with respect to those dealings which resulted in the loss that the Defendant's firm has repudiated the authority of Misree. It is true that there is no evidence as to whether the Defendant usually makes forward contracts in his trade at Singapore but it is a very significant fact that Kassim Ali, the manager sent to Calcutta, it is stated, to succeed Misree, is unable to say what the course of business at Singapore is, and if the Power of Attorney is construed in the way in which the Defendant says it ought to be construed, it results in this absurdity that although Kassim Ali is sent to Calcutta with authority to carry on business as it is carried on at Singapore, he is not given any intimation as to the way in which the business at Singapore is carried on. That, in my view, reduces the matter to an absurdity and I have no doubt that the managers appointed under the Power of Attorney were authorised to carry on the business of general merchants in the way in which it was actually carried on in Calcutta and in course of that business they were authorised to make contracts such as that in the present suit. The second contention therefore, that the contract was made without the Defendant's authority fails.

Now the third question is one which, to my mind, is rather more difficult. The evidence is that the Plaintiffs called upon the Defendant to take delivery of 150 tons of sugar from the Port Commissioners' warehouse. At that warehouse, the Plaintiffs had a large quantity of sugar in bags, a great deal more than sufficient to satisfy the contract which they had with the Defendant. It is admitted that no particular bags were selected for delivery to the Defendant but that the course of business was for the Defendant to pay for the sugar he was prepared to take, and on payment to obtain a delivery order. On presentation of the delivery order at the warehouse, sufficient bags to meet the delivery order would be taken out of the bulk lying in the warehouse and then and there delivered to the Defendant. It is conceded that in this case no particular bags were selected from the bulk because the Defendant failed to pay for and obtain a delivery order for the balance of 125 tons as he was bound to do. The Plaintiffs sold off 135 tons out of the bulk and now claim to charge as against the Defendant the difference in the price at which they sold this quantity and the price the Defendant contracted to give. On one side, it is contended that the circumstance that no goods had been appropriated to the contract makes no difference, the sale being held under the condition in the contract. On the other side, it is contended that as no bags had ever been tendered or set apart for the purpose of satisfying this particular contract there is nothing to show that the bags sold by the Plaintiffs were the actual bags that the Defendant ought to have taken and, that being so, the Defendant says that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the difference between the two sales but they say the measure of damages is the difference between the market price on the date of the breach and the contract price.

The cases which have been cited during the argument do not bear on the question because in each case the goods of which the buyer had refused to take delivery had been ascertained; in this particular case they had not been ascertained. If they had been ascertained or if there had been a tender of a particular parcel of goods to satisfy the contract no difficulty would have arisen.

On the whole I have come to the conclusion that the Defendant's contention on this point is the correct one. The clause in the contract giving a power of resale refers to the goods covered by the contract and until the particular goods to be delivered in accordance with the contract have been ascertained there is nothing to which the power of resale under the contract can attach.

The Plaintiffs will get their costs of action on Scale No. II.

[The Defendants appealed].

Mr. Knight (with him Mr. Pugh) for the Defendants-Appellants.

Mr. Sinha (with him Messrs. S. R. Das and N. Sarkar) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This litigation has been occasioned by the alleged breach of a contract for the sale of sugar. The terms of the contract are set forth in the bought note, Ex. A to the plaint.

This document is dated the 28th February 1910 and is signed by M. C. Misry on behalf of the Defendants' firm.

By it the Defendants' firm purports to buy from the Plaintiff 750 tons of white cane Java sugar, the shipments to be made during August, September, October, November, December, equally. The price was Rs. 7-14-9 per bazar maund ex-jetty or docks. Delivery was to be taken by the buyer ex-jetty or dock within 3 days and it was expressly provided as follows :—

"The goods to be at the buyer's risk and peril from the time of landing of the sugar until they be removed from jetty, dock, ghat or godown, and should the buyers fail to take delivery of the sugar the sellers will have the option of reselling the same in the open market by private sale or by public auction and hold the buyers responsible for all consequences."

On the 14th September the Plaintiffs wrote to the Defendants' firms in reference to 150 tons of sugar on board the S. S. Okora, being the August shipment under the contract, and gave notice of the expected arrival of the steamer on or about that day. The steamer arrived on the 15th, and on the 6th of October delivery was taken of 25 tons under the contract, but beyond this no delivery was taken.

On the 8th of November the Plaintiffs sold the balance of 125 tons, and it is their case that this was done in exercise of the power of resale vested in them by the contract. On this footing they demanded from the Defendants' firm a sum of Rs. 2,341-14-9 as representing the difference between the contract price and the amount realised on the resale; and further sums for interest and charges, which brought the whole of their demand up to Rs. 2,745-12-6.

The claim was resisted by the Defendants' firm, and so this suit was brought.

The case came for trial before Harington, J., and the three following issues were raised: (1) whether the suit lies under Or. XXX, (2) whether the manager Misry had authority and (3) there could be no resale of unascertained goods. The learned Judge decided the first and second issues in the Plaintiffs' favour, and on the third against them. He, however, directed an enquiry as to damages.

From this decree the Defendants' firm have appealed. The objection of want of jurisdiction embodied in the first issue has been abandoned, and the points made before us are these.

First, it is said that the contract was unauthorized, and, secondly, that as the Judge decided against the Plaintiffs' contention that the price on the resale furnished the measure of damages, he should have dismissed the suit and not directed a reference.

For the Respondent it has been contended that the Judge was in error in deciding adversely to his contention as to the resale, and though no cross-appeal or cross-objections have been filed, it is urged that Or. XLI, r. 33 empowers the Court to give effect to the Defendants' contention as to the resale.

First, I will deal with the Defendants' contention that the contract was unauthorized.

I do not propose to deal with this at length for I am in complete agreement with Harington, J., on this point.

True it is that the contract was signed not by the Defendant but by Misry, his agent; but Misry was acting under a power-of-attorney which authorized him to direct, superintend, manage, and control and carry on in Calcutta in the name of Mr. S. E. Angullia & Co. the business of general merchants as then carried on by the Defendant in Singapur and elsewhere. For that purpose the widest powers were vested in Misry, followed no doubt by the gratification that nothing therein contained should be deemed to authorize the attorney to speculate in gunnies, opium, shares or exchange.

It is urged that the transaction in suit was a speculation and so in contravention of the power-of-attorney.

But even if it was a speculation—and this is a view that has not been established—it is outside the terms of the power-of-attorney on speculation.

It is also urged that the transaction is not within the business in which business was carried on by the Defendant at the time the power-of-attorney was given. But the evidence shows that the business was carried on by the Defendant at the time the power-of-attorney was given, and that the power-of-attorney was given for the purpose of enabling him to carry on the business. In my opinion there is no force in this contention, and I am confirmed in this view by the fact that at the hearing the request for a commission was not advanced.

And I think there was very good reason for this. The words "as now carried on by me in Singapur and elsewhere," are merely descriptive of the general character of the business and were not intended to limit the articles in which business was to be done or to define the terms on which it was to be conducted. It is not suggested that the agent could not purchase sugar, or that a forward contract could not be made; the objection when analysed is as to the prudence of the transaction and its mere imprudence would not render it unauthorized. Then it is contended that as the Plaintiffs claim the damages as formulated in the plaint and the issues rests on the resale the Court should not have directed a reference as to damages on a totally different basis. I think this contention is entitled to great weight, and all the more in view of the fact that the Plaintiffs when challenged by the Defendant refused to amend their plaint so as to make a case of damages on the difference between the contract price and the market price at due date and was supported in this refusal by the Court. And there is yet another circumstance which lends strength to the Defendants' contention.

The due date under the contract is the 21st September, and there is no evidence of damage on that date, on the contrary, the evidence, such as it is, points the other way.

To avoid this difficulty it is suggested that the due date was postponed, and in fact the learned Judge treats the 1st of October as the day of breach.

But postponement was not pleaded, nor was it made the subject of an issue.

Nor does the matter rest there, for Mr. Sinha, when challenged, could not point to any agreement, or clear indication, that the due date should be postponed ; all he could contend was that it might be inferred from the fact that late delivery was taken of 25 tons.

M. S. E. ANGULLIA & Co. v. E. D. SASOON & Co.

In my opinion it would be wrong in view of the case made by pleadings and issues, and of the mode in which the Plaintiffs' case was conducted, to hold that there was a postponement of the due date or to direct a reference as to damages.

But then the Plaintiffs claim that they were entitled to have the damages estimated on the footing of the resale. Harington, J., decided this against the Plaintiffs, holding there was nothing to which the power of resale under the contract could attach. For the Plaintiffs it was contended that the learned Judge in so deciding failed to follow the decision of the Full Bench in Moll Schutte & Co. v. Luchmi Chand (1).

But when the essential facts of that case and the present are contrasted, they present significant differences.

In Moll Schutte & Co.'s case (1), the Plaintiffs sold to the Defendants under an Indent Contract 10 cases of tobacco to be shipped by steamer to Calcutta. The Plaintiffs ordered ten cases only of tobacco and caused them to be shipped and consigned to themselves for the purpose of fulfilling this contract.

The goods duly arrived but the Defendant refused to pay for and take delivery of the goods on the ground that they were not the goods contracted for.

The goods were tendered to the Defendants, and were in accordance with the contract. Now, to use the phraseology of the Contract Act, the goods had been appropriated but possibly not ascertained, I say possibly not ascertained, because it seems to have been thought by the Full Bench that the property in the goods had not passed (see sec. 83).

The position then was that the vendors had done all in their power to make the specific goods the subject-matter of the contract.

Now in this case it is otherwise ; here there was neither ascertainment nor even appropriation. The sugar was in bulk, and the vendors had not even appropriated the goods for the purposes of the agreement. That condition of affairs continued until after the resale.

Can it be then said that there even were goods to which the power of resale applied so as to make the result of that resale the measure of damages ? Now the answer to this depends on the construction of the agreement between the parties as did the decision in Moll Schutte's & Co.'s case (1) turn on the construction of the agreement there under consideration.

Neither in that case, nor in this, was any general principle or rule of law involved.

What then is the scope of his power of resale the words of which I have already read ? The goods would have come within its operation if they had been ascertained or even if they had been appropriated for the purpose of the agreement. But in my opinion it would be going beyond the true meaning of the words to extend the operation of the clause to goods which had not even been appropriated and thus had in no sense become the subject-matter of the contract.

I do not say that a clause could not have been so framed as to have this extended operation : there would be nothing illegal in it. But I do hold that the clause as it has actually been framed cannot have this operation.

(1) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 505 (1898).

(1) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 505 (1898).

M. S. E. ANGULLIA & Co. v. E. D. SASOON & Co.

This is the view taken by Harington, J., and he too arrived at this conclusion by the same process of reasoning. I think he used the word "ascertained" not in the technical sense in which it is employed in the Contract Act but in the sense of appropriated, for I feel very sure the learned Judge had no intention of disregarding the Full Bench decision.

The result then is that while I agree with the view of the learned Judge as to the scope of Misry's authority and the interpretation of the power of resale, I think, for reasons I have already stated, that a reference as to damages should not have been granted, as this was opposed to the Plaintiffs' own case.

The appeal must therefore be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Where in a case more than one person were jointly charged with the offence of criminal breach of trust under sec. 408, I. P. C., with respect to a sum of money:

Held—That there was a misjoinder of charges in the case.

The wording of sec. 222, Cr. P. C., refers to a single accused; and it must be so because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. Sec. 239 therefore has no application to such a case.

When two persons are implicated in a case of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust with respect to a certain sum of money, the charges against them must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriator of abetment.

Rule No. 1449 was granted on the 27th of November 1911 against the order of Mr. A. F. Sharling, District Magistrate of Bhagalpur, dated the 20th of October 1911, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 408, I. P. C., and sentencing him to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment; which order was, on appeal, affirmed by Mr. J. C. Twidell, Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur, on the 11th of November 1914.

Rule No. 1526 was obtained by the Petitioner's co-accused Jhontu Lal Mitter against the same order.

The facts material to the report were briefly as follows:—

The Petitioners in these two revision cases were charged with another in the Court of the Magistrate at Bhagalpur in the following terms:—

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE SECOND CALCUTTA CRIMINAL SESSIONS WILL commence its sittings from date, the Chief Justice presiding.

THE RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY THE INNS OF Courts in respect of the call of Indian students to the Bar were coincident with the outburst of political unrest in India. It is a fact much to be deplored that some Indian law-students at the Inns of Court, with immature and unbalanced minds, had thrown in their lot with some designing men of extreme views. But these raw youths have paid sufficient penalty for their indiscretion in England as well as in India by either being refused to be called to the Bar or being punished by Courts of law. It is quite well-known that it is for political reasons that the Secretary of State for India moved by the Government of this country induced the Benchers of the Inns of Courts to impose special restrictions with regard to the admittance of Indian students to the Inns of Courts. The Benchers following up the suggestion of the Indian executive made it a rule that no Indian student, unless he was a graduate of an Indian University or an undergraduate of any of the Universities in Great Britain, will be entitled to join the Inns of Courts. While students from the Colonies are being freely admitted to the Inns of Courts, such restrictions imposed on Indian students are legitimately regarded in this country as most unjust and invidious. It is also considered unworthy of the honourable Societies of the Inns of Courts, with the noble traditions of the English Bar behind them, to make such invidious distinction between one class of His Majesty's subjects and another. Their action in this matter has been therefore strongly resented both by the youths and their guardians in India.

THE INDIAN UNIVERSITIES ARE THE MOST EXACTING educational institutions on the face of the earth both in the matter of attendance and examination. They have little regard for the severe physical and mental strain that their regulations impose on the youths of this country. It is a well-known fact that Indian youths, after they have passed through the exacting system of University education in India, lack much of the vigour of health and fund of energy which are so essential for their success in the hard struggle of life. It has been a practice amongst parents and guardians of youths in this country, when they find that any of their boys or wards are unfitted by reason of health or disinclination for the omnibus and exacting system of studies at our Universities, to send them to England for study at the Bar. The most eminent and respected leaders of the Calcutta Bar have hailed from this class and type of men. It is no disparagement to any member of the Calcutta Bar to say that the places left vacant by Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Mr. Manamohan Ghose and Mr. T. Palit have not been filled to this day. So it is widely believed in this country that the restrictions imposed against Indian youths getting called to the English Bar are due more to a short-sighted policy of the Indian executive than to any real or supposed interests of the legal profession in India. The feeling in the country is that if we are to be regarded as citizens of the British Empire, as it has been affirmed by repeated Royal pledges that we are, no difference should be made between our youths and youths from other parts of the Empire either at the Inns of Courts or any other educational institutions in the United Kingdom.

WE MAY, THEREFORE, REASONABLY EXPECT THAT the High Courts in India should at any rate frame regulations for the admission of advocates which should obviate the invidious distinction between Indians and non-Indians. For instance, an Australian and a South African may at present go to England, pass the Matriculation, attend the Inns of Court, get called to the Bar, come out to India and get admitted as an advocate of the Calcutta High Court under conditions very different from those that have been or are about to be imposed in respect of the children of the soil. There is no reason why an Indian should be less favoured in his own country and privileges should be reserved for outsiders alone. We have, therefore, been painfully surprised that the High Court of Calcutta instead of exercising its influence for doing away with the restrictions imposed at the instance of the Indian executive is about to forge further restrictions against Indian youths getting admitted as advocates of the High Court.

BEFORE CONSIDERING THE NEW HIGH COURT Regulations in detail we must point out generally the mischief of imposing such restrictions as would surely mean a denial of an honourable career to many people in this country. It should be remembered that almost all the avenues of employment such as the army, the higher grades of the Police, the Customs, the Public Works Department, the Forests and in fact all the fat berths in the gift of the Government are practically closed to the educated youths of this country. The Anglo Indian theory that education does not confer on our youths a preferential claim to be employed in Government service has long since been exploded. In Germany the enormous expense of education is justified on the ground that it enables the Government to train and select the best men for public service. It is our misfortune, however, that the very opposite practice is in the ascendancy to this day in India. In disregard of these facts it has become quite a fashion now-a-days to deplore the growth of lawyers in this country and also to decry them. But these critics would not go to the root cause of the congestion in the different branches of the legal profession. They would not move their little finger to open out other avenues of employment for them but are always too eager to close up the ranks of the only independent career that is available to them. Indian barristers who got called to the English Bar under the old conditions have held their own against odds and have thoroughly maintained the high traditions of the English Bar. We therefore see no occasion or reason for the framing of any further restrictive rules regarding the admission of members of the English Bar as advocates of the High Court of Calcutta.

WE ARE INDEED NOT A LITTLE PAINED TO find that the High Court of Calcutta has framed some draft rules imposing additional restrictions in respect of the admission of the members of the English Bar as advocates of the High Court. The draft rules are as follows :—

"78. Any person may be admitted as an advocate of the High Court who is entitled to practise as a barrister in England or Ireland or as a member of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland and intends to practise in the High Court or the Courts subordinate thereto:

Provided that he has (unless he is a member of the said Faculty) read for not less than one year in the chambers of a practising barrister in England and that he has also either—

- (a) been educated in the United Kingdom for not less than three years exclusive of the year prescribed for reading in chambers as aforesaid, or
- (b) taken a degree in a University in the United Kingdom, or
- (c) taken a degree in law in the University of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad or the Punjab.

"79. Every applicant for admission as an advocate of the High Court shall submit his application in the form of a letter addressed to the Registrar on the Original Side and accompanied by certificates showing that he is qualified under rule 78; and the Registrar shall circulate the letter, with its enclosures, to the Chief Justice and Puisne Judges.

"80. The High Court may, in any particular case, relax the foregoing rules 78 and 79 to such extent as it may think fit."

THE FIRST RESTRICTION IMPOSED IS THAT ONE must have read for not less than one year in the chambers of a practising barrister in England to be entitled to be admitted as an advocate here. This means the levying of a tax of 100 guineas on every Indian student in addition to the 100 that he has to pay to the Inns of Court for qualifying himself to practise as a barrister. This is sure to prove very burdensome to most of the Indian parents and may be prohibitive to many. Then it is no secret that many of the practising barristers who take pupils in England feel happy if their pupils do not trouble them at all after the payment of a fee of 100 guineas to them. The rule will give rise to a practice of colourable compliance with it in other ways, which we are afraid would be more demoralising than educative in its effect.

THE ABOVE RULE IS COUPLED WITH THE FURTHER condition that for persons other than graduates of any University in the United Kingdom or graduates in law of any of the Indian Universities it would be enough if they have been "educated in the United Kingdom for not less than three years exclusive of the year prescribed for reading in Chambers." With reference to this rule we do not quite understand whether by the three years' education is meant legal education or general education. If it is the latter, it is to be regretted that this rule may also be said to be to the special advantage of non-Indians. For under this rule any one from the United Kingdom or the Colonies who has read in any sort or description of private school in the United Kingdom for three years, will on coming out to India be admissible as an advocate, whereas an Indian under the recent Inns of Court regulations must be either a graduate of an Indian University or an under-graduate of any of the Universities of the United Kingdom to be entitled to get called to the Bar. If any privilege should be reserved for any community, in common fairness it should be reserved for the people of the country. In any case we have a right to insist that none of the rules should be invidious. If it be the policy of the Government of India that none but graduates or University men should be allowed to practise as barristers in India, the High Court should insist on the same condition being observed in the case of Indians and non-Indians alike.

THE EXCEPTION MADE IN FAVOUR OF LAW GRADUATES of the Indian Universities under draft rule 78 (c) deserves special consideration. Ordinary Indian graduates in law are required to complete three years' term at the Inns of Court before getting called. But a practice has of late grown up under which a Vakil of the High Court can go to England at the fag end of the Trinity term, eat 12 dinners and thereby keep 2 terms and then in another 4 terms he can get called to the Bar. To do so he must take honours and attend a barrister's chambers. Thus his fourteen months' stay in England is fully occupied in cramming for the Bar final examination. He can, under the circumstances, hardly get any opportunity of associating with the English people, assimilating their thoughts and ideals either in respect of the administration of justice or in respect of professional conduct. Unless a man has resided in England or in any part of the United Kingdom for at least three years and mixed freely with the people, it is physically impossible for him to visit, much less study, their time-honoured institutions, familiarise himself with their ideas and sentiments, follow their trend of thought or grasp the unwritten code of honour and self-respect that prevail amongst the profession and the cultured people at large.

THE PASSING OF THE BAR EXAMINATION PLAYS practically no part in the educational outfit of our young men in England. We are accustomed to pass much stiffer examinations in our own country. The chief value that we attach to the education of our youths in England is that it serves to widen their views, discard the narrow interests associated with caste, creed and social life in India, develop healthy and noble ideals of humanity, engender a robust sense of honour and self-respect, and that it enables them to assimilate and appreciate the modern outlook of life and of the world. It follows therefore, that the present system under which Vakils may pass examinations at the Bar in about a year's time of their arrival in England deprives them of the opportunities of assimilating what we consider the most valuable assets of English education. We are of opinion therefore that whatever facilities may be offered to them by the Inns of Court to pass examinations and get called to the Bar, the High Court here should, except in the case of men of assured position and standing in this branch of the profession, insist on their completing a three years' course of education in England before admitting them as advocates. This is all the more necessary because as Vakils the conditions of their practice are very different from those of counsel. After they have had direct connection with clients, witnesses, mukhtears and other law-agents for some time, a sufficient time should elapse under very different environments to enable them to develop in themselves a different ideal of professional duties as advocates or counsel. We are therefore decidedly of opinion that the conditions of admission of Vakil-barristers should be the same as for those who are specially trained for the English Bar.

AS WE HAVE SAID THE CONDITION FOR READING in chambers of a barrister would inflict a penalty on Indian students studying for the Bar in England without conferring on them any substantial advantage. This would be all the more serious for ordinary students, for besides the 100 guineas fee it would require an additional year's residence in England which would in any event cost him not less than £150 more. We fail to see any occasion or reason for imposing this toll of £250 on every Indian student desirous of study at the Bar. Neither in England nor in the Colonies a fourth year's study in chambers is insisted on as a condition precedent for enrolment. Why should then this restrictive clause be imposed on India alone? If it is for preventing congestion, we might say India is a vast country and Indian barristers for a long time yet to come will find a decent amount of work or honourable employment if they would spread over the country. It cannot be seriously urged that the Indian barristers are in any way a less honourable body of men than their brethren in any other part of the world. If any individual members offend against professional etiquette, the Bar here resent it as much as any Bar in the world. It is therefore highly desirable that every facility should be given to barristers to enlist themselves as advocates of the High Court so that they may keep in view the standard of their brethren practising in the High Court.

WE WOULD THEREFORE SUGGEST THAT IF READING in chambers is made a condition precedent for enrolment, liberty should be given to read in chambers either in England or in this country before enrolment. If a junior barrister works with a senior member of the Bar here for a year before enrolment he may also attend Court with him and that would benefit him more than reading in chambers in England. We must also say in conclusion that we do not at all approve of the draft rule 80 which leaves wide powers in the judges to make exceptions to the above rules. The rules for admission, whatever they may be, should be uniform for all and no loophole should be left for conferring special favour on particular individuals.

In Raimoni v. Mathura Mohan, REPORTED AT p. 606 of this issue, their Lordships D. Chatterjee and N. R. Chatterjee, JJ., have, after a review of authorities, re-affirmed a proposition of law which before the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Nilmamud v. Boul Das, 14 C. W. N. 73, has never been questioned in these provinces, that a kabuliyat by itself may create a valid lease provided it is assented to by the landlord and, in cases requiring the lease to be registered, is registered, according to law. In Nilmamud Sirkar's case, however, the learned Judges purported to follow the decision of the Madras High Court in Turof Saheb v. Esuf Saheb, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 322. There has undoubtedly been a considerable amount of authority both in Madras and in Allahabad supporting the view adopted in Nilmamud's case that the lease should be executed by the lessor. It is satisfactory to note however that the Madras High Court in a recent Full Bench case, Syed Ajam Saheb v. Madura Sree Menatchi, I. L. R. 35 Mad. 95, has resiled from this view and affirmed in unmistakable language that a lease may be created by a registered instrument signed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor; whilst judging from the language of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sheokaran Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh, I. L. R. 31 All. 276, which did not actually decide the point, it may be presumed that that High Court also is not unprepared to review its previous decisions and come to the same conclusion as the Madras and Calcutta High Courts.

IN ARRIVING AT THE DECISION THAT A pottah executed by the lessor is not essential to the creation of a valid lease, the learned Judges of both the Madras and the Calcutta High Courts have laid stress on the fact that secs. 105 and 107 of the Transfer of Property Act do not in terms require the lease to be executed by the lessor. But the same observations would seem to apply to the case of sales (sec. 54). Their Lordships have had therefore to call in aid the provisions of sec. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act and sec. 3 of the Registration Act. The former requires that the registration sections of the Transfer of Property Act should be read as supplemental to the provisions of the Registration Act which in sec. 3 lays down that a "lease" includes a kabuliyat, and it is argued that this clearly indicates the intention of the Legislature to give effect as leases to kabuliyats executed by the tenants only. With due deference to their Lordships we confess our inability to assent to this reasoning. The Registration Act only lays down that certain written instruments should not be allowed to be proved unless registered. These provisions of the Act were not intended to affect or modify the substantive law relating to the creation, transfer or termination of interests in property, moveable or immoveable, or of other rights. For instance, the Registration Act requires "agreements for leases" if executed in writing (sec. 3) and "authorities to adopt" if embodied in a document other than a will (sec. 17) to be registered but an agreement for a lease and an authority to adopt may be oral and quite effective as such, in spite of the provisions of secs. 3 and 17 of the Registration Act.

HOWEVER THAT MAY BE, THE BEST JUSTIFICATION for the decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts is to be found in the fact, as noticed by N. R. Chatterjee, J., that it is a common practice in this country where no pottah is executed to treat a kabuliyat accepted by the lessor as a lease, that this had been the practice in all parts of India before the Transfer of Property Act (Krishnaswami Ayyar, J., I. L. R. 35 Mad. p. 102), and that the Transfer of Property Act which does not specifically require a lease to be executed by the lessor ought not to be construed as interfering with this practice. Sec. 58 of the Registration Act which is referred to in the judgment of the Madras High Court does no more than require the executant of a registered lease to admit its execution, implying thereby that a written lease which requires registration must be executed by somebody, either the lessor or the lessee, who must admit its execution. The same implication arises with reference to a sale-deed which accordingly must also be signed by a party to the sale-deed, but as there is no practice in this or any other country of sale deeds being executed by vendees, it may be inferred that a registered sale-deed must be executed by the vendor. On the other hand, instruments of sales and leases which do not need registration would not, on the same reasoning, seem to require execution by either party to the deed.

HIS LORDSHIP WHITE, C. J., OF THE MADRAS High Court whose judgment in Syed Ajam Saheb

v. Madura Sree Menatchi, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 95, contains a clear exposition of the law on this point, confesses that he at first found the proposition that there could be a lease enforceable against the lessor which had not been signed by him to be somewhat startling, and this in spite of the fact that according to the English law of deeds signature is not an essential in the case of a lease under seal. No such difficulty need, in any event, be felt by an Indian, whether lawyer or layman, and we do not feel the necessity of calling in aid the analogy drawn from the English law relating to deeds which, the Madras Full Bench rightly holds, should not be applied to this country.

BUTTERWORTH'S YEARLY DIGEST, 1911. Edited by Harry Clover. Price Rs. 11-4, Rs. 9 for cash. London: Butterworth & Co., 12, Bell Yard, Temple Bar. Calcutta: Butterworth & Co., (India) Ltd., 8½, Hastings Street.

This is the fourth yearly supplement to Butterworth's Ten Years' Digest and is compiled on a plan similar to that of that work. The value of a digest lies in its arrangement and in this respect this volume is inferior to no other work of a like nature. The copious cross-references also add to the value of the work. Besides the cases fully reported in the Law Reports this volume also refers to all cases of 1911 which have been reported in the Times or noted in other publications. So far as we have been able to examine this work we have found it to be quite up-to-date. There are a number of Indian cases decided by the Privy Council referred to in this volume but the references given are not to the easily accessible and familiar Indian Appeals Series of the Law Reports but to the Times Law Reports. We hope that in future editions the editor will give references to the Indian Appeals Series.

TRIAL OF WILLIAM PALMER: NOTABLE ENGLISH TRIALS SERIES. Edited by George H. Knott. London: Butterworth & Co., 12, Bell Yard, Temple Bar. Calcutta: Butterworth & Co., (India) Ltd., 8½, Hastings Street. Price Rs. 4-8.

This is the fourth volume of the series and perhaps more interesting to the student of law than any other. The trial of William Palmer was one of the earliest cases of strychnine poisoning known and came on at a time when very little was known of the effect of strychnine and less of strychnoid poisons like bruchsia, which the editor supposes was used by Palmer in poisoning his victim. The greatest importance therefore attaches to the trial from the point of view of Medical Jurisprudence and the vast body of medical evidence adduced on both sides forms by far the most important and, to the medical jurist, the most interesting portion of the record printed in this volume. Some of the foremost medical men such as Sir Benjamin Brodie, Dr. Taylor, the author of the "Medical Jurisprudence" and Mr. Rees his colleague in his researches on poisons, were examined in this case and the student of this subject will find considerable light and food for thought in the evidence given by them. The editor has done his work with great care and judgment and his able introduction and the table of principal dates is of great assistance in following the evidence which has been recorded in this volume.

The trial of Palmer was, as Sir James Stephen observes, one of the greatest trials in the history of English Law and eminently deserving of the attention of the students of law. It was one of the longest and most sensational trials of the day and the excitement over it was certainly not less intense than over the Crippen case in more recent times. The feeling against Palmer was so great that his case had to be removed from the assizes to London to give Palmer the chance of a fair trial. The statute which was passed by Parliament for that purpose has since been availed of in many cases. The trial is brimful of interest and the speech of Mr. Sergeant Shee for the defence is a fine specimen of the type of forensic eloquence which has now grown out of fashion. In the course of his address he stated his own conviction of the innocence of his client—a breach of the rules of advocacy which Lord Campbell sharply rebuked. The prosecution was conducted by Sir Alexander Cockburn as Attorney-General and his examination and cross-examination of witnesses as well as his final speech would be well worth perusal by a lawyer aspiring to distinction. We do not doubt that this volume would be read with considerable interest by the lawyer no less than by the lay public interested in the study of human nature.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Seddon. Before JUSTICES DARLING, CHANNELL AND COLERIDGE. 2nd April 1912.

Jury's verdict—"Not guilty," meaning of—Circumstantial evidence—Misdirection—Omission to place points before the jury—Counsel's arguments, supplementing defect.

The report of the trial of the prisoner before Mr. Justice Bucknill and a Jury appeared at p. cxlvii of this volume.

On appeal the verdict and sentence passed on Seddon was affirmed. In the course of his judgment dismissing the appeal Mr. JUSTICE DARLING said :—

Various points had been taken in the case. First, it was said that there was not sufficient evidence that Miss Barrow died from acute arsenical poisoning. It was sufficient to say that in their opinion there was ample evidence, and they might say conclusive evidence. Secondly, that there was no evidence that the Appellant ever was in possession of arsenic, or that he administered it to the deceased. It was true that there was no such evidence. But such evidence as that was not essential. If that kind of evidence had been forthcoming, this would not be a case of circumstantial but of direct evidence. Then it was said that the evidence of the identification of Maggie Seddon in buying the flypapers was insufficient and untrustworthy. They could only say that the evidence was fairly left to the jury, and that the jury had decided the question, and that their decision appeared by no means unreasonable and the Court could not interfere with their finding. Fourthly, it was contended that the evidence as to the wife's having cashed bank-notes was inadmissible, and that the Judge omitted to point that out to the jury.

It was sufficient to say that a sufficient connexion between the wife and the husband as to the affairs of Miss Barrow had been shown to make the evidence admissible, and that the wife had been called as a witness, not in the usual way as a prisoner on her own behalf, but as a witness for the Appellant, and she could be asked any questions that could be asked of any other witness. The questions asked were perfectly legitimate. It was then said that the Appellant and his wife had been jointly charged with murder, and that the evidence was directed equally against them both, and that there was no evidence which could enable the jury to discriminate between them, and that, therefore, the verdict was unreasonable. It was said that the Judge omitted to point out that she was called as a witness for the Appellant, and that her evidence went to establish his innocence as well as hers. On that (said the learned Judge) it was necessary to consider the logical effect of the verdict.

The Appellant was found guilty. That meant that he, either by his own hand or that of another, administered poison to Miss Barrow, so that she should die. It meant as to Mrs. Seddon that she did not administer the poison, or that if she did so she did so not knowing it was poison. It was a mistake to suppose that "not guilty" meant "had nothing to do with the affair." In this country there were no means of expressing in a verdict the difference between innocence and not proven. The fallacy that it meant anything else was shown by this : that over and over again it was insisted on during the course of this trial that the Crown were bound to prove their case. If that was so, the verdict of not guilty of necessity meant that the Crown had not proved their case—"not proven"—and it might mean more. It must therefore be apparent that there was nothing illogical in acquitting the wife for want of proof, and it did not follow that the Appellant should be acquitted.

With regard to the wife's being called for the defence, they had no means of knowing how much of her evidence the jury believed. It was very seldom that a witness with a very strong interest told the whole truth. Therefore there was no logical dilemma involved in the acquittal of the wife and the conviction of the husband.

A further contention was that the Judge did not caution the jury that the Appellant's conduct after the death pointed to larceny and not to murder. In their opinion that would have been a misdirection; for it would be untrue. The evidence showed that he wanted to conceal something, and the jury found that it was murder he wanted to conceal. Taking his conduct with regard to the relatives of the deceased, it was not conceivable that the jury could believe that he ever sent the letter he spoke of. Then the fact that he did not publish the death in the paper was enough to make any one believe that he desired to conceal the death.

Another circumstance was the hurried way in which the funeral was arranged. If Miss Barrow died of arsenical poisoning it was not a natural death, and the sooner the body was put out of the way the better. All this pointed to a concealment of murder, not of larceny. There was no point of law upon which any wrong decision was given. The only point taken was that there was no evidence against the Appellant at the close of the case for the prosecution. They were of opinion that there was ample evidence. It was true that the case was much strengthened after the defence had closed, the case having been fairly left to the jury, and they found the Appellant guilty. It did not necessarily follow that because a Judge did not put a point to the jury that point was not before their minds, for counsel had addressed them several times.

It was true there were points in the case which ought to have been in the minds of the jury which were not alluded to in the summing-up; but they were quite satisfied that those points were not absent from their consideration. They must, for example, have had it in their minds that when Mrs. Seddon was giving evidence she was saying things which they must consider in deciding on the Appellant's case. It often happened that a Judge did not mention points in summing-up because it was absolutely unnecessary to do so. They saw no reason whatever for thinking that the jury was wrong in coming to their conclusion. That being so, they had to ask themselves if the verdict was unreasonable. They could not say so.

The main point which distinguished this from other cases of circumstantial evidence was that no poison was traced into the manual possession of the Appellant. That it was traced into his house was amply proved. But the mere absence of that evidence did not justify them in saying that the jury were unreasonable in giving the verdict they did. Miss Barrow died of poison: the Appellant had a strong motive for killing her. He had, by means which could not be described as commendable, become possessed of all her property except some £200 in gold. He had given her nothing for it in return except his promise to pay her £1 a week for life. The fact that that was at a higher rate than the market rate made the motive still stronger for killing her. His conduct on the night of her death was that of a man anticipating it; and the facts that he did not do the natural thing and go for a doctor: that immediately death occurred and before the body was cold he was searching about her room for all that she had left; that he had made a will for her constituting him her executor, and therefore, in control of her property; that he never notified her death; that he used extreme hurry in getting her buried, and interred her, not in the natural way in her vault, but in a common grave, and that he invited no one to the funeral; all these were grounds for saying that the verdict was not unreasonable.

No other person had been suggested as having any interest in poisoning Miss Barrow. The suggestion that she committed suicide or accidentally drank the arsenic was not seriously maintained. The jury came to the conclusion that the case was proved, and there was evidence upon which they could come to that conclusion, and the Court did not wish to indicate that they would have come to any other conclusion.

COURT OF APPEAL.—London County Council v. Jackson. Before LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS, FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 1st April 1912.

Liability of the County Council as managers of a school for injury caused to a pupil by the negligence of a contractor.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Bray who tried the case with a jury. The Defendant London County Council were managers of a school of which the Plaintiff, a boy of 13, was a pupil. Chappel was a contractor for certain repairs of the school building. He sent certain materials, sand, lime, etc., in a truck which was left on the boys' play ground. The headmaster noticed the truck and thought it was dangerous, but Chappel, although asked, did not remove it. The Plaintiff played snow balls with the lime, etc., and his eye was hurt by his playmate throwing a snow ball. He sued Chappel and the Council for damages. The jury found in answer to questions left to them (1) That the boys were on the school premises when the accident happened; (2) that the London County Council were, by their servant's, guilty of negligence, which was the cause of the accident; (3) that Chappel, by himself or his servants, was guilty of negligence, which was the cause of the accident. They found £50 damages against both Defendants, of which they apportioned £25 against each Defendant.

The Defendant appealed, but the Court dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:—

The jury had in substance found, in the first place, that the accident was one which might have been anticipated from the mere fact of leaving the barrow where it was. But that, in itself, would not be enough; it would only be the first step. It would only mean that the barrow was something that the boys would be likely to play with. The next step, however, was this, that it was dangerous when it was left where it might be a convenient plaything for the boys. The jury, by their answers, had found that both Defendants were negligent.

The jury must have found that this barrow was a dangerous thing to leave where it was left. He (the Lord Justice) did not know whether the jury were influenced by sentimental sympathy in favour of the boy. The evidence against the schoolmaster was that he recognized this barrow as a source of danger, and with regard to the contractor it was clear from the evidence that he was told to take some steps to remove the barrow, but that he had not acted sufficiently.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Cardwell. Before MR. JUSTICE WARRINGTON. 6th March 1912.

Is an Attorney-General entitled to costs?

This case raised the question whether an Attorney-General who had taken out a summons for ascertaining the meaning and construction of a testator's will, was entitled to recover his costs. The learned Judge decided that he was. In the course of his judgment he said:—

An Attorney-General's position was as stated in Tudor on Charities and Mortmain (Fourth edition), p. 376 :—"The Attorney-General, as representing the Crown, is the protector of all the persons interested in the charity funds. He represents the beneficial interest; consequently in all cases in which the beneficial interest requires to be before the Court the Attorney-General must be a party to the proceedings. In this capacity he represents all the objects of the charity, who are thus in effect Plaintiffs through him." What was his position in regard to costs so incurred? There was no question that if a summons was taken out, not by the trustees, but by the beneficiaries, if the litigation was for the purpose of ascertaining the true construction of the testator's will, and was not in any way a hostile proceeding, the Plaintiffs as a general rule received their costs as between solicitor and client out of the fund the subject of the litigation. What reasons were there for putting the Attorney-General in a different position from any other Plaintiff?

It was said that inasmuch as the Attorney-General could not be ordered to pay costs, so he ought not to receive costs. That rule did not apply to a case like the present; it did apply to hostile litigation, but not to proceedings like these in a Court of first instance.

Mr. Beaumont for the Attorney-General.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before D. CHATTERJEE and N. R. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1471 OF 1909. ABDUL KADER, Appellant v. ALI MEA AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 29th February. Judgment, 22nd April 1912.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 283, scope of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 53—Plea, if can be taken in defence—Judgment-creditor, if can bring a suit for declaration—Execution-purchaser, to what extent may object.

During the pendency of a suit on a handnote by the Defendant No. 1 against Defendant No. 2, the latter sold his homestead with a tank to the Plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 700. The Defendant No. 1 subsequently obtained a decree on the handnote and attached the said land. The Plaintiff put in a claim under sec. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it was disallowed and the property was sold and purchased by Defendant

No. 1 for Rs. 40 only, his decree being for Rs. 348 odd. The Plaintiff brought this suit under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code for declaration of title and confirmation of possession. The Defendant pleaded that the purchase of the Plaintiff was benami for the debtor and fraudulent.

The first Court held that the purchase was not benami, and that there was no evidence that the Plaintiff knew of the decree or the suit and decreed the Plaintiff's suit.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge set aside the decree of the first Court holding that although consideration had been paid and Plaintiff was in possession, the Defendant No. 2 living on some other land, the Defendant No. 2 made the sale with the object of defeating the claim made by Defendant No. 1, that the Plaintiff was aware of the fraudulent motive of Defendant No. 2 in selling the property to him and helped him in carrying out the fraudulent object.

Held—That the purchase of the Defendant No. 1 was made after the present suit of the Plaintiff and was therefore subject to the result of the present suit.

A suit under sec. 283 was essentially a suit for the review of a summary decision. The summary decision in a claim case is confined to a consideration of the possession of the judgment-debtor at the time of the attachment; any other discussion in such a decision is material only so far as it is relevant to the determination of that essential matter.

As the finding in the present case was that the Plaintiff was in possession after a purchase for valuable consideration and not the judgment-debtor, Defendant No. 2, the present suit under sec. 283 should have been decreed unless there was anything in the pleadings outside the scope of sec. 283 to restrain or restrict such a result.

A judgment-creditor can have a declaration that the conveyance was void as against his own claim.

If there are more creditors and the particular creditor impleaded as a Defendant stands on the same footing as other creditors, he must plead for all and may perhaps be allowed to do so even as a Defendant if the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim or claims of all the creditors.

A plea under sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act by way of defence was competent.

That the Defendant's claim being only for Rs. 348 odd under his decree, the Plaintiff's purchase could be impeached only to the extent of Rs. 348.

Dwarka Mandar	16th Sep. "	10	0	0

Rs. 53 11 4½"

The accused Nos. 1 and 2 were convicted and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment, while the accused No. 3 was acquitted in the first Court with these observations :—

"I am of opinion that he cannot be strictly speaking called a clerk or servant of this estate and that the charge under sec. 408, I. P. C., would not be legal against him. Coupled with this is the fact that he is about 16 years of age and the rent receipts and counterfoil receipts and the entries in the Rokar books proved to be made by him were made at the instigation of accused No. 2, Jhontu Lal Mitter. He is not paid by the estate like the other two accused and is said to be learning the work of patwari. He stands therefore in a different position to the other two accused."

On appeals being preferred by the two accused, the Appellate Court found that the evidence showed beyond doubt that there had been misappropriation of collection money. The question that arose in the appeal was whether the Appellants were or either of them was guilty. The Appellate Court mainly agreed with the findings of the first Court and the appeals were dismissed. The question of law that arose in revision in the High Court were also urged in the Appellate Court which disposed of them by the following observations :—

"Some questions of law were raised by this Appellant (accused No. 1). He urged that 4 separate items could not be included in one charge. But although the charge specifies items, it is a charge of a general deficiency under sec. 222, C. Cr. P., even though the items can be separately proved, such a charge is legal. There is much authority on this. The latest case appears to be XXXIII All. 36. The second contention is that the two Appellants ought not to have been tried together. But this depends on the first point, the contention being that sec. 234 only applies to a single accused. But this is not a case to which sec. 234 has application."

Both the Rules were granted on the same ground.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur to shew cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner should not be set aside on the grounds, firstly, that there has been misjoinder of charges, and, secondly, that the findings on the evidence do not show that there was specific misappropriation of any portion of the money by either of the accused persons, or that there was complicity between them.

We have heard the learned Vakil in showing cause and we have carefully considered the explanation given by the District Magistrate; but we are still of opinion that having regard to the provisions of sec. 222, cl. (2), there has been a misjoinder of charges in this case. It is unnecessary to refer, as the learned Judge does, to sec. 234. It is enough to point out that in sec. 222 also the wording of the section refers to a single accused; and it must be so, because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. One may be guilty of misappropriating a portion of it or one may be guilty of abetting the other. The misappropriation of the actual money must be the act of a single person, and therefore sec. 239 has no application, because more than one person could not be charged with this particular offence of misappropriation of a single sum. This really covers the second ground of the Rule, which show how easily an accused may be prejudiced by a charge drawn up in this vague manner.

As far as the finding that there was complicity between the two Petitioners goes that would only amount to a finding that one of them abetted the other. It is extremely difficult upon the judgment of either of the Courts below to discover which of the accused was in their opinion the principal and which was the abettor. Ordinarily speaking the person into whose hands the money came and who was bound to account for it and who has not accounted for it is the person who would be liable to be charged with misappropriation.

Now if the patwari was bound to account to the estate through the tahsildar for moneys collected by him, and the tahsildar made false entries and thereby facilitated misappropriation of the money the tahsildar would be liable to be charged with abetment, but the specific act of misappropriation in the absence of any evidence that the money passed into the hands of the tahsildar would lie against the patwari alone. The difficulty in this case is that there is no finding that the actual money passed into the hands of the tahsildar. If the patwari handed over the money he collected to the tahsildar and the tahsildar falsified the accounts then of course the tahsildar alone would be responsible for the misappropriation, and there would then have to be a clear finding on evidence that the patwari abetted him. But be that as it may the charges against these two persons must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is open of course to the Court to frame charges in the alternative; firstly, that the patwari received money and misappropriated it, the tahsildar being the abettor; or, secondly, that the patwari handed over the money to the tahsildar who misappropriated it and that the patwari abetted him in such misappropriation. But if it is found necessary to draw up such charges in the alternative clearly the different items will have to be distinguished, because the evidence as regards the receipt and credit of each item is different.

In setting aside the conviction and sentence and directing a new trial we therefore leave it to the District Magistrate to decide which items should be charged as misappropriated by the tahsildar or by the patwari with or without abetment of the other. But if these two persons are tried together the charge against one must be of misappropriating a sum of money and the charge against the other must be of abetting him in so doing. The materials before us are not sufficient to give any more specific directions.

The Rule is made absolute, the conviction and sentence are set aside and there will be a retrial according to law.

The Petitioner will remain on the same bail pending the re-hearing.

This judgment will govern both the Rules.

1911, | SRIMATI SASHIBALA

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13—Res judicata—Maintenance, successive suits for—Brittipatra, held not binding in previous suit—Claim based on same document in later suit if maintainable.

Where a previous suit of the Plaintiff for recovery of maintenance alleged to have been charged on property in the hands of the Defendants by a brittipatra was dismissed upon the finding that the document had as between the parties no effectual binding power over the estate and did not affect it in any way, a second suit by the Plaintiff for a declaration of his right to receive maintenance under the brittipatra and of the same being a charge on the property and for recovery of arrears of maintenance was barred by the rule of res judicata.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 26th of July 1904, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshahye in Bengal.

The appeal had been filed in the ordinary course and the main question for decision in it was whether the claim of the Appellants was barred by the rule of res judicata.

The litigation between the parties arose in the following manner: In the year 1795 the son of one Ram Kanta Lahiri, the predecessor in title of the Appellants, married a daughter of Raja Binode Ram Roy Chowdhuri. At that time the Raja executed a brittipatra upon which the Appellants based their claim. It was a deed of maintenance in favour of the said Ram Kanta Lahiri and his heirs for ever, and it purported to be granted for the benefit, or support, of the Raja's daughter, and to create a charge upon a portion of the estate of the grantor, to the amount of Rs. 301 per annum in favour of the grantees.

In 1894 the Appellants brought a suit, 346 of 1934, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye against four of the present Respondents, in which they prayed for a decree for the recovery of Rs. 3,210-1-6 being the balance of the said maintenance allowance and for other relief. The defence was that the brittipatra was not a genuine document and was never acted upon and that it created no lien upon the property.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim in part and declared that the Plaintiffs should have a lien to sell the property which purported to be charged in the brittipatra.

On appeal, the High Court at Calcutta set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiffs. The finding of the Court was :—

"The utmost, therefore, that the Plaintiff has been able to prove, is, that he and perhaps his father received some allowance from the Defendant's family, an allowance which varied from time to time, and the amount of which depended entirely upon the good-will of the Raj representatives. He has entirely failed to prove that he ever received, either in full or in part, any allowance which he claimed, and which was acknowledged as his right by reason of its being due under the brittipatra upon which he bases his claim.

"We are forced, therefore, to the conclusion, judging from the absence of proof of any act done under this brittipatra or referable to it, that it was not intended to be and was not in effect, a grant creating a perpetual charge on the Defendant's estate in favour of the alleged grantee and his heirs. In other words the Plaintiff has failed to establish his claim."

The judgment and decree of the High Court were dated the 6th of September 1897, and the contention of the Respondents in the present appeal was that they operated as a bar to the claim of the Appellants by reason of the doctrine of res judicata.

On the 4th of September 1900 the Appellants, as Plaintiffs, brought the present suit against five Defendants, three of whom (Nos. 1, 3 and 4) in the first Court entered into a compromise with the Plaintiffs. The Defendant No. 2 was a descendant of one of the original grantors of the maintenance allowance who had a one-sixth share in the property; and Defendant No. 5 acquired that share by purchase from Defendant No. 2.

The suit after a certain stage was contested by the fifth Defendant alone.

In their plaint, dated the 4th of September 1900, the Plaintiffs sought to obtain a declaration that under the said brittipatra, dated 17th Magh 1201 (January 1795), executed by the said Raja, the predecessor of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4, they were entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 301 per annum, and to have their maintenance declared a charge upon the zemindari of the Defendants. They also sued to obtain arrears of maintenance for the years 1296 to 1306 with interest.

The fifth Defendant in her written statement pleaded by way of defence to the suit inter alia that the Plaintiffs' claim was barred by res judicata, as in the previous suit, brought on the same cause of action by the Plaintiff in 1894, their claim had been finally dismissed by the High Court.

The principal issues framed for trial were :—

"1st. Is the suit barred as res judicata?

3rd. Whether the Tankapatra propounded by the Plaintiffs is genuine, and has it ever been acted upon?

5th. Is the Plaintiff's maintenance a charge on the property mentioned in the plaint?"

By his decree, dated the 10th of March 1902, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs as against the second and fifth Defendants, and, as against the first and fourth Defendants, he disposed of it in accordance with the terms of the compromise above-mentioned.

The Plaintiffs appealed from the said decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court at Calcutta. The appeal was heard by a Division Court consisting of Brett and Woodroffe, JJ., who on the 26th of July 1904 gave judgment and by their decree of that date dismissed the appeal with costs.

DURGA PRASAD LAHIRI CHOWDHURI v. SRIMATI SASHIBALA DEBI.

They observed: "The Plaintiffs have appealed, and the point urged in support of the appeal has been that the effect of the judgment of this Court in the previous suit decided on the 6th of September 1897 was not to decide that the brittipatra was not an invalid document, and not genuine, but merely to decide that it had not been acted upon, and that, therefore, the Plaintiffs in that suit were not entitled to recover the maintenance for the years for which it was claimed."

The learned Judges, however, after considering the language of the said judgment, dated the 6th of September, were of opinion that the High Court intended to decide that the brittipatra was not only inoperative, but that it was not a genuine document, and that the claim of the Plaintiffs for maintenance, so far as it was based on that document, failed.

They concluded their judgment as follows:—

"In the present case the main issue on which the suit was tried was whether the Plaintiffs had a right to recover the maintenance claimed for the years in suit on the basis of the same brittipatra.

"It was contended in this case as in the previous case that the brittipatra was a valid and genuine document, that it created a recurring right in favour of the Plaintiffs, and that they were entitled to recover the maintenance under it. The title on which they claim in this case is the same as that under which they claimed in the previous case, and the issue which the Court had to decide in order to come to a conclusion on the claim in the present suit was the same as that which this Court had to decide in the previous case in 1897. In our opinion, therefore, the plea of the Defendants in this case was a good one, and the claim of the Plaintiffs, based as it was on a title which they alleged they had under the brittipatra was barred by the doctrine of res judicata by reason of the previous judgment of this Court in appeal, dated the 6th September 1897.

"We, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge that the Plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed with costs as against Defendants Nos. 2 and 5 who alone contested the suit in the Court of first instance and who alone have appealed to this Court. So far as the other Defendants are concerned the decree of the Subordinate Judge will also stand.

"This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Ross for the Appellants submitted that the Plaintiffs' claim was not barred by res judicata. The previous judgment of the High Court only decided that the brittipatra was not acted upon for some-time. It did not hold that it was not a genuine document.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and Kyffin for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The High Court having decided in the former suit that the document in question has no effectual binding power over the estate, and does not affect it in any way as between the parties, that issue must be considered to be decided, and the suit fails.

That being so, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and the Appellants must pay the costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 107, 4—Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 3—Kabuliyat alone, if constitutes a lease—Acceptance by lessor and registration—Mistake, mutual, inclusion in lease of lands not belonging to lessor, by—Remedy—Specific Relief Act (I of 1872), secs. 26, 28.

If the lessor and the lessee agree that the lessee is to have a right to enjoy a property on certain terms and that the fact of the transfer of such right is to be embodied in an instrument to be executed by the lessee only and accepted by the lessor, the lease can be effected by such an instrument provided it is registered as required by sec. 107, Transfer of Property Act.

A valid lease may, therefore, be created by a kabuliyat only, which is accepted by the lessor and registered according to law.

be set aside but that there should be an apportionment of rent for the remaining land.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of July 1909 against a decree of Mr. J. E. Phillimore, District Judge of Zillah Sylhet, dated the 16th of March 1909, confirming the decree of Babu Adaitya Chandra Chakravarti, Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated the 5th of October 1907.

The Appellants who were the Plaintiffs in the suit out of which the present appeal arose sued to recover Rs. 2,100 from the Defendant as being arrears of rent due by the Defendant upon the basis of a registered kabuliyat executed by the latter in favour of the predecessor in interest of the Appellant. The Defendant inter alia objected that there was no completed lease in the case, as no pattah had ever been executed by the alleged lessor, that the kabuliyat was a fraudulent document inasmuch as 9 plots of lands belonging to the Defendant in his own right had been included in it without Defendant's knowledge, that the Defendant was never allowed to take possession of the demised land, and that the Defendant had shortly after the execution of the kabuliyat relinquished the lease on the ground of the lessor's failure to correct the error alluded to in the kabuliyat.

The Subordinate Judge before whom the case came on for trial in the first instance held that the lessor had failed to execute a pattah and thus act up to the contract between the parties, that 9 plots as alleged by the Defendant had been included in the kabuliyat through the fraud and misrepresentation of the lessor's agent, that the Defendant had executed the kabuliyat without reading the contents thereof, that the kabuliyat was never acted upon and had in fact been rescinded by the Defendant. Upon these findings he dismissed the suit.

Upon appeal the District Judge held that the absence of a pattah did not invalidate the transaction, and that the registration of the kabuliyat was a sufficient compliance with the terms of sec. 107, Transfer of Property Act, that the inclusion of the 9 plots which already belonged to the Defendant was due neither to fraud nor to misrepresentation but to mutual mistake; that the mistake was regarding a matter of fact essential to the agreement and that in consequence the whole agreement was void and the Plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover rent. In this view he dismissed the appeal.

Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of ijara rent, based upon an ijara kabuliyat executed by the Defendant in favour of the predecessor in interest of the Plaintiffs, whereby the Defendant undertook to collect rent of 48 and odd hals of lands for 4 years and agreed to pay to the lessor Rs. 400 a year.

The defence was that the contract was not completed as no pattah was granted by the lessor, that the lessor never allowed the Defendant to take possession of the lands, that one hal of land (nine plots) which really belonged to the Defendant had been fraudulently included in the kabuliyat which was executed without full knowledge of its contents and that as the kabuliyat was not corrected the Defendant surrendered the lease, that the kabuliyat was never acted upon and that the Defendant was not therefore liable to pay anything.

The Court of first instance finding all the above pleas in favour of the Defendant dismissed the suit. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the registration of the kabuliyat was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the absence of a pattah does not invalidate the contract, that the kabuliyat was duly executed and there was no fraud or misrepresentation practised on the Defendant to secure its execution.

As regards the nine plots of land the lower Appellate Court held that there was some difficulty in ascertaining the actual facts as there had been no local investigation but that he agreed with the Subordinate Judge who had gone into the question incidentally in holding that the nine plots were in possession of the Defendant and his co-sharers from long before the date of the kabuliyat as maliks. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that an agreement to pay rent for land already in the lessee's possession as owner is void and that the mistake in including the nine plots of land was regarding a matter of fact essential to the agreement and therefore the agreement was altogether void and Plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent.

The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and it has been contended on their behalf that the lower Appellate Court having held that the kabuliyat constituted the contract of lease and was duly executed, and the case of fraudulent misrepresentation having been found against the

RAIMONI DASSI v. MATHURA MOHON DEY.

Defendant, the lower Appellate Court ought to have decided the question whether as a matter of fact the nine plots really belonged to the Defendant, and even if they belonged to the Defendant, the Plaintiffs ought to have been given a decree for proportionate rent for the remaining lands.

On behalf of the Defendant-Respondent it has been contended that in the absence of a pattah, the kabuliyat could not constitute a lease within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has been further contended that even if the kabuliyat operated as a lease and if the case should be remanded at all there was a number of questions raised in the case which were decided by the Court of first instance, but was not decided by the lower Appellate Court and that the latter should be directed to decide the said questions.

So the first question for consideration is whether a registered kabuliyat executed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor operates as a lease within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act.

There can be no question in this case that the kabuliyat was accepted by the lessor, as the suit has been based upon it.

Sec. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act defines a lease of immoveable property as a transfer of a right to enjoy such property made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee who accepts the transfer on such terms. The section does not prescribe how the transfer is to be effected. Sec. 107 prescribes the mode in which a lease is to be effected and provides that a lease of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent can be made only by a registered instrument. Sec. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that sec. 107 and certain other sections shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1877, which means that it is to be read as supplemental to all the provisions of the Registration Act. Under sec. 3 of the Registration Act of 1877 a lease includes a kabuliyat. Reading secs. 4 and 107 of the Transfer of Property Act together with sec. 3 of the Registration Act of 1877 it would appear that a lease in sec. 107 includes a kabuliyat. Sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act does not require that the instrument shall be signed by the lessor. The only thing required by it is that the lease (i.e., the transfer of a right to enjoy property) should be effected by a registered instrument. Now if the parties to a lease, viz., the lessor and the lessee, agree that the lessee is to have a right to enjoy a property on certain terms and that the fact of the transfer of such right is to be embodied in an instrument, to be executed by the lessee only and accepted by the lessor, there is no reason why a lease cannot be effected by such an instrument provided it is registered which is the only condition required by sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. The argument that in order to constitute a lease there must be a pattah, i.e., a writing signed by the lessor, proceeds upon the assumption that the kabuliyat is only an unilateral expression of intention on the part of the lessee only, but it is, as I have said above, the embodiment of the whole contract between the lessor and the lessee, viz., the transfer by the lessor of the right to enjoy the property on certain terms and the acceptance by the lessee of the right on those terms.

The case of a sale does not stand on the same footing as there is no provision in the Registration Act relating to sales such as is contained in sec. 3 relating to a lease, vis., that it includes a kabuliyat.

It is a common practice in this country where no pattah is executed to treat a kabuliyat, accepted by the lessor, as the instrument creating a tenancy and there can be no question that before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act a lease could be effected by an instrument signed by the lessee only and registered in cases where registration was compulsory. Under sec. 3 of the Registration Act, 1877, a lease includes a kabuliyat. So that before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act in cases where a registered instrument was necessary under the Registration Act, a kabuliyat executed by the lessee if registered was legally sufficient to constitute a lease. It was not necessary for the creation of a lease that the landlord should grant a pattah. It was sufficient if the tenant executed a kabuliyat which was accepted by the landlord. See Akram Ali v. Durga Prasanna Roy Chowdhuri (1). Sec. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act does not introduce any change in the legal conception of a lease which before the passing of that Act could be effected by a registered instrument signed by the lessee only. The provisions in sec. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act that sec. 107 and certain other sections of that Act shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1877, was introduced into that Act by the Amending Act of 1885 (Act III of 1885). So far therefore from laying down that an instrument of lease does not include a kabuliyat and therefore must be an instrument signed by the lessor, it makes sec. 107 supplemental to all the provisions of the Registration Act including sec. 3 and the provision in sec. 3 of the Registration Act III of 1877 that a lease includes a kabuliyat has been re-enacted without any modification in sec. 2 (7) of the Registration Act of 1908.

The Legislature has prescribed no form for a lease and in the absence of any provision in the Transfer of Property Act that a lease in order to be valid must be signed by the lessor, I am unable to hold that a registered kabuliyat which is accepted by the lessor is not a lease within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act.

As to the authorities on the point the earlier cases in the Allahabad High Court were in favour of the view that a kabuliyat cannot be considered as a lease within the meaning of sec. 107, Transfer of Property Act. In Nand Lal v. Hanuman Das (2), Blair, J., followed an earlier decision of Edge, C. J., and Burkitt, J., in which the learned Judges held that a kabuliyat is merely an agreement executed by a tenant to take the tenancy and that in itself it contains no agreement of the landlord on his part to lease the land. It does not appear whether in that case there was acceptance of the kabuliyat by the landlord. Blair, J., was of opinion that the word 'instrument' in sec. 107 shows that the document must be one which must have certain executive force and that upon its execution the lease is completed. Banerji, J., did not desire to express any opinion on the question having regard to the fact that it is a common practice in these provinces to treat a kabuliyat as the instrument creating a tenancy and that a ruling upholding the contrary view may unsettle titles. The case of Kashi Gir v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (3) was heard by Blair, J., sitting singly and he followed his judgment in Nand Lal v. Hanuman Das (2).

(2) I. L. R. 26 All. 368 (1904).

RAIMONI DASSI v. MATHURA MOHON DEY.

The question was raised before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (4), but the Full Bench expressed no opinion on the point inasmuch as they found that under the circumstances of the case the Plaintiff was clearly entitled to recover compensation for use and occupation. The Full Bench seem to have been in doubt as to the correctness of the earlier decisions as they declined to express any opinion as to their correctness.

In the Madras High Court, Benson and Wallis, JJ., held in Turof Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (5), that a lease must be an instrument bearing the signature of the lessor, and that case was followed by Benson and Miller, JJ., in Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (6). In none of the cases cited above except in the last case was any reference made to sec. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not necessary to consider however the cases in the Madras High Court in detail because in the recent case of Ajam Sahib v. Madura (7), a Full Bench of that Court held after an exhaustive discussion of the matter that the registered instrument referred to in sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act in order to be valid need not be signed by the lessor.

In our Court in the case of Nilmamud Sarkar v. Boul Das (8), the learned Judges (Chitty and Carnduff, JJ.), agreeing with the cases of Nand Lal v. Hanuman Das (2), Kashi Gir v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (3), Turof Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (5), held that a kabuliyat which is only an undertaking by the prospective tenant to take the tenancy is not a lease. Of course a kabuliyat executed by a lessee in itself does not create a lease unless it is accepted by the landlord; and that case is distinguishable as in that case one of the landlords at any rate did not accept the lease.

In a later case, Akram Ali v. Durga Prasanna Roy Chowdhuri (1), Mookerjee and Coxe, JJ., held that it was impossible to maintain the view that for the creation of a permanent lease before the Transfer of Property Act it was necessary that the landlords should grant a pattah. The kabuliyat in that case was executed before the Transfer of Property Act but the learned Judges with reference to the case of Nilmamud v. Boul Das (8) observed "we need not therefore decide whether under the Transfer of Property Act the law is different, but we observe that a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ajam v. Madura (7) has assigned weighty reasons in support of the view contrary to that maintained in Nilmamud v. Boul Das (8).

The result of the authorities therefore is this:—In the Madras High Court the earlier cases which held the contrary view must now be taken to have been overruled by the recent Full Bench which supports our view. In the Allahabad High Court although the earlier cases took a contrary view, a Full Bench of that Court declined to express any opinion as to the correctness of the earlier rulings and in our own Court though in one case the learned Judges agreed with the earlier Allahabad cases and one of the Madras cases, the case is distinguishable on the ground that one of the landlords did not accept the kabuliyat, and in the latest case, Akram Ali v. Durga Prasanna (1), the learned Judges observed that the reasons given by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court were weighty though the observation was by way of obiter dictum.

The weight of authority therefore appears to be rather in favour of the view I take than against it and I am of opinion that a registered kabuliyat signed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor is sufficient to constitute a lease within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The first contention raised on behalf of the Respondent, therefore, must be overruled.

The next question is whether the inclusion of the 9 plots of land in the possession of the Defendant in the kabuliyat renders it void. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no fraud or misrepresentation in the matter and that there was only a mistake, but held that the mistake was regarding a matter of fact essential to the agreement and therefore the agreement was void.

I cannot agree to this view. In the present case the lands in the possession of the Defendant which are included in the kabuliyat are small in comparison with the total lands demised and I am unable to hold that in the absence of any fraud or misrepresentation the mere inclusion by mistake of some lands in the possession of the Defendant or belonging to him in the kabuliyat renders it altogether void. In such a case, I think, there should be an apportionment of the rent for the remaining lands.

I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court should come to proper findings upon the following questions :—

First, whether the Plaintiffs had a title to the 9 plots (one hal) of land of which the Defendant was already in possession? How long was Defendant in possession and whether he had acquired any title by such possession?

Second, whether the Plaintiff failed to deliver possession of the remaining 47 hals of land and failed to supply the Defendant with the touzi and collection papers in order to enable the Defendant to collect rent?

Third, whether the kabuliyat was acted upon?

Fourth, whether the Defendant surrendered the ijara and was there a valid surrender?

If the last three questions are found in favour of the Plaintiffs, and the first question against them, the lower Appellate Court will apportion the rent with respect to the remaining lands. If the last three questions are found against the Plaintiffs the first question need not be gone into. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the case sent back to that Court for a decision of the case in accordance with the observations made above.

Costs to abide the result.

 1911, Appellant,
 Heard, 4, 21 & v.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 41, r. 22, sub-r. (1)—Cross-objections against co-Respondent, when may be entertained—Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 47—Mortgage, execution—Collateral agreement postponing operation till fulfilment of conditions—Fulfilment of conditions—Operation as from date of execution—Delivery, if essential.

The language of Or. XLI, r. 22, sub-r. (1) of the Civil Procedure Code is comprehensive enough to admit of a cross-objection being preferred by one Respondent against another.

As a general rule, the right of any Respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it only against the Appellant, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one Respondent may urge a cross-objection as against another Respondent; but as to this no exhaustive rule can be formulated and the entertainment of cross-objections against co-Respondents cannot be limited to those cases only where the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be reopened as between the co-Respondents. The true test ought to be whether for the ends of justice it is necessary upon the appeal of one party that the matter should be reopened so far only as he is concerned or whether the whole case should be reviewed and some of the Respondents allowed to urge a cross-objection against their co-Respondents.

Where a mortgage is executed but there is a collateral agreement that no obligation should attach under the instrument till payment of money on the one hand, and delivery to the registering officer on the other, the moment the condition is fulfilled, obligation attaches with effect from the date of execution and attestation of the document.

There is no analogy between a common law deed in England and a mortgagee deed in this country in this respect.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th of September 1909 against the decree of Babu Durgadas Bose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 10th of July 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Raj Kishore, Munsif of Behar, dated the 14th of December 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Appellant.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Siva Nand Roy for the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Respondents.

Babus Jnanendra Nath Bose and Biraj Mohun Majumdar for the Defendant No. 5, Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal is directed against the decree in a suit to enforce a mortgage security executed by the first Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff. The second Defendant is alleged to have subsequently acquired an interest in the equity of redemption and has been joined as a party in that character. The third and fourth Defendants claim to be mortgagees under an instrument, dated the 21st January 1908: the fifth Defendant sets up a mortgage alleged to have been granted on the 13th January 1908. The sixth De-

JADUNANDAN PROSAD SINGH v. DEO NARAIN SINGH.

Defendant holds a mortgage executed on the 14th September 1907, and the seventh Defendant sets up a mortgage granted on the 6th. January 1908. The date of the mortgage bond which the Plaintiff seeks to enforce is the 19th January 1908, but it appears on the face of it to have been altered to the 23rd January 1908. In the Court of first instance, there were two matters substantially in controversy between the parties, namely, first, whether the mortgage of the Plaintiff took effect from the 19th January 1908, i.e., whether it was entitled to priority over the mortgage of the third and fourth Defendants : and, secondly, whether the mortgage set up by the fifth Defendant represented a genuine transaction. The Court held upon the first question in favour of the Plaintiff, and upon the second question against the fifth Defendant. The fifth Defendant thereupon appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and he joined as parties Respondents the Plaintiff and the remaining Defendants. Of the latter the third and fourth Defendants preferred a cross-objection, under Rule 22 of Or. 41 of the Civil Procedure Code, to the effect that the mortgage set up by the Plaintiff took effect only from the 23rd January 1908, and was not entitled to priority over their security. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal as also the cross-objection. He found upon the evidence that the mortgage set up by the fifth Defendant was not a collusive transaction, and that the mortgage sought to be enforced by the Plaintiff took effect from the altered date, the 23rd January 1908. The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court, and on his behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on three grounds, namely, first, that the mortgage of the fifth Defendant is collusive, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge to the contrary is not supported by the reasons assigned by him, secondly, that it was not competent to the third and fourth Defendants to prefer a cross-objection against the Plaintiff upon an appeal preferred by the fifth Defendant, and, thirdly, that, upon the facts found, the mortgage of the Plaintiff took effect from the date of execution and not from any subsequent period.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it cannot be supported. We have examined the reasons assigned by the Subordinate Judge in support of his conclusion as to the true character of the mortgage set up by the fifth Defendant. These grounds do not involve any error of law, and it is not open to this Court to consider whether the Subordinate Judge has taken a correct view of the facts. The first ground, therefore, fails.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it raises an important question which was not suggested in the Court below. No objection appears to have been taken before the Subordinate Judge as to the competency of the cross-objection by the third and fourth Defendants : that, however, does not preclude a consideration of the point by this Court : if the cross-objection was really incompetent, the omission of the Plaintiff to take exception to it could not possibly validate the same. Now it is not disputed that Or. 41, r. 22, sub-r. (1) of the Code of 1908 is comprehensive enough so far as its language is concerned, to admit of a cross-objection by one Respondent against another. But it has been urged that the reason of the rule requires that some limitation should be put upon its scope and application. Reference has been made to judicial decisions under the Codes of 1859

JADUNANDAN PROSAD SINGH v. DEO NARAIN SINGH.

(Act VIII of 1859, sec. 348) and 1882 (Act XIV of 1882, sec. 561) to show that such restriction is justifiable on principle. [Anwar Jan v. Azmat Ali (1), Bishun Chandra v. Jogendra Nath (2), Shabiuddin v. Deomoorat (3) and Kallu v. Munni (4)]. That principle is that, as a general rule, the right of any Respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it only against the Appellant: and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one Respondent may urge a cross-objection as against another Respondent: the exception, it is said, holds good in those cases where the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-Respondents. This may be accepted as a sound principle, but, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Banerjee in Bissen Chandra v. Jogendra Nath (2), no exhaustive rule on the subject can be formulated, and the true test ought to be, whether for the ends of justice, it is necessary that upon the appeal of one of the parties the matter should be re-opened only so far as he is concerned or the whole case should be reviewed and some of the Respondents allowed the opportunity to urge a cross-objection against their co-Respondents. One test of a negative character is sometimes useful: if the party, against whom a cross-objection is sought to be urged by his fellow Respondents, is not a necessary party to the appeal, the cross-objection can hardly be allowed to be urged. But if he is a necessary and proper party Respondent to the appeal, the answer to the question whether the cross-objection should be allowed to be urged must depend upon the circumstances of the case. The test to be applied is whether the questions which arise between the several sets of parties are so connected that one of them ought not to be allowed to re-open matters so far as he is concerned without opportunity allowed, in the interests of justice, to another to protect himself by urging his objections, even though they be directed, not against Appellant, but against a co-Respondent. Cases of the type of Abdul Ghani v. Muhammad (5) are fairly simple: if the Defendants have a common ground, upon an appeal by one of them, the Plaintiff may very well be allowed to urge a cross-objection against a Defendant-Respondent. The case before us, however, is of a special character, and is unlike any of those to be found in the books. Here the Plaintiff and third and fourth Defendants were so far united that their common interest was to defeat the fifth Defendant, who set up a heavy prior charge, which if real was entitled to precedence over both of them. If the fifth Defendant was defeated the question of priority as between themselves might be immaterial if the property was of sufficient value to satisfy the claim of both of them. (Sec. 48, Transfer of Property Act). Good reasons might therefore be assigned as to why the third and fourth Defendants did not prefer an appeal against the Plaintiff, although the first Court had overruled their contention that they were entitled to priority. But when they found that the fifth Defendant had preferred an appeal, they might in justice, contend that, if the appeal was successful, it would be material for them to urge that the decree of the first Court was erroneous in so far as it gave the Plaintiff a priority over them. To put the matter briefly, as soon as the Plaintiff and the third and fourth Defendants became unsuccessful against their common enemy, the 5th Defendant, the conflict of interest between them became important from a practical point of view. We are therefore not prepared to accept the contention that the rule on the subject should be narrowly defined and that a cross-objection should not be allowed unless the appeal directly opens up a question between co-Respondents. In our opinion the principle ought to be liberally applied and the case before us under the circumstances stated falls rather within the exception than within the rule. We may point out that Or. 41, Rule 22, sub-rule (3) introduces a modification of the rule as embodied in sec. 561 of the Code of 1882: the effect of the alteration is to leave no doubt that a Respondent may prefer a cross-objection against a co-Respondent: the limits of the rule, however, are not attempted to be defined, and sub-rule (4) which has been added in the Code of 1908 may possibly create a difficulty in some cases. The present case, however, is reasonably free from difficulty, and we must hold that the cross-objection was competent. If the contrary view were maintained, the result would have followed that the first and fourth Defendants would have been driven to prefer a separate appeal, although if the fifth Defendant did not prefer any appeal it might be wholly unnecessary for the third and fourth Defendants to proceed with their appeal for the protection of their own interest. The second ground urged by the Appellant therefore fails.

The third ground on which the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is assailed raises a question of some nicety. It has been found that the mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff was duly executed and attested on the 19th January 1908. The mortgagee however would naturally not part with his money till the deed was registered, and the mortgagor was also apparently unwilling to part with the document till he had got the money. The money was paid and the deed was registered on the 23rd January 1908. As we have already stated the mortgagor altered the date from the 19th to the 23rd January. The Subordinate Judge has found that this was done before registration, and was known to the mortgagee but it has not been found and the circumstances negative any possible suggestion—that the mortgagee agreed that the deed would take effect from the 23rd January. Under sec. 47 of the Registration Act, upon registration the deed would take effect from the time it would have taken effect if registration had not been necessary. The question therefore arises from what date the deed took effect. The learned Vakil for the third and fourth Defendants has relied upon the cases of Sheo Narain v. Darbari (6), Mouladan v. Raghunandan (7) and the Ramalinga v. Ayyadurai (8) to show that the deed would not take effect till it was delivered and the mortgage money paid. These cases, however, are of no real assistance to the Respondents. They merely show that the parties may intend that no obligation should attach under the deed unless a condition precedent had been fulfilled. Secs. 58 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act show that a valid mortgage may be created to secure money to be advanced on a future debt. The case of Amrithatham-mal v. Periasami (9) shows further that valid title may pass even if no consideration is paid at the time of the conveyance. On the other hand, the third proviso to sec. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act indicates that the existence of a separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under a contract grant or disposition of property which has been reduced to the form of a document may be proved. In fact, the cases mentioned by the learned Vakil for the Respondents show that although a conveyance or a mortgage deed has been duly executed and attested, no obligation may attach thereunder, if the parties so agree, till certain conditions have been fulfilled. They do not show that upon fulfilment of the condition precedent, the obligation attaches with effect from that date and not from the date of execution of the instrument. It may be assumed, therefore, that in the case before us, the conduct of the parties shows that no obligation was intended to attach under the mortgage deed till the money was paid by the mortgagee and the document presented to the proper officer for registration by the mortgagor although we are by no means satisfied that this inference may legitimately be drawn from the mere circumstance that the mortgagor did not, upon execution of the document, deliver the same to the mortgagee. We are not prepared to hold that upon fulfilment of the condition the obligation attached with effect from the date of registration. As already explained sec. 47 of the Registration Act does not by any means support this view. We are not unmindful that under the law of England a common law deed, to be effective, must be delivered as the act and deed of the party expressed to be bound thereby as well as sealed (Laws of England, Ed. Halsbury, Vol. X, p. 385); but there is, in our opinion, no analogy between a common law deed in England and mortgage deed in this country. In the former case, delivery is essential for the validity of the deed: in the latter case, delivery is not essential although absence of delivery may serve to indicate that the parties intended that no obligation should attach under the instrument till a condition precedent had been fulfilled. There are, again, other points of fundamental difference, for instance, a common law deed is said to import consideration (Laws of England, Ed. Halsbury, Vol. X, p. 357) whereas if a suit was brought to enforce a mortgage security, the claim could be defeated on proof that there was no consideration. It must further be remembered, that even in England, in the case of deeds, the tendency of the Courts has been to interpret the term delivery rather liberally so as not to defeat the intention of the parties [Xenos v. Wickham (10) and Exton v. Scott (11) as to which see, however, Cracknoll v. Janson (12)]. Although, therefore, in England in the case of a common law deed title passes at the time of its delivery, we are not prepared to apply that rule to a case like the present where the instrument is valid in law without delivery, and where the delivery is postponed to secure the performance of mutual conditions, namely, registration of the document by the mortgagor and payment of the money by the mortgagee. No useful analogy can be drawn from another class of cases to which reference was made by the learned Vakil for the Respondents, namely, Hopkinson v. Rolt (13) and West v. Williams (14). These cases discuss the question of priority of mortgages to secure future advances, dealt with in sec. 79 of the Transfer of Property Act. The doctrine that a first mortgagee should be postponed in respect of any advances made by him after notice of a subsequent incumbrance is plainly of no assistance to the Respondents. Although the mortgage of the Plaintiff was not registered till the 23rd January 1908, and that of the third and fourth Defendants had been registered on the day previous, each took effect from the date, when it would have taken if registration had not been necessary, that is prima facie from the date of its execution. The sole question is whether the operation of the mortgage instrument of the Plaintiff did not commence till the 23rd January, because it was not delivered till that date. For reasons already explained, we think this question ought to be answered in the negative. The alteration of the date by the mortgagor from the 19th January to the 23rd January did not clearly alter the position of the mortgagee. He plainly intended to take the property as security upon the title as it stood on the 19th January. No reasonable man of ordinary prudence would consent to take the property as it may stand on some uncertain future date, with the inevitable risk that the intending mortgagor may be at liberty meanwhile not merely to create encumbrances on the property, but even transfer it absolutely. If such was the intention of the parties, it is inconceivable why the document was at all executed and attested on the 19th January 1908, the execution and attestation might very well have been postponed to the date of the actual payment of the consideration money. The obvious intention of the parties was to fix the security on the title as it stood on the 19th January, and they effectively did so, even though there was a collateral agreement that no obligation should attach under the instrument till payment of money on the one hand and delivery to the registering officer on the other. The moment the condition was fulfilled obligation attached with effect from the date of execution and attestation of the document, notwithstanding the execution and registration of another mortgage instrument by the mortgagor in the interval. There is no special hardship on the subsequent encumbrancer, because as in this country documents do not take effect from the date of registration, every person who acquires property takes it subject to the risk that there may be a prior title created within the preceding four months or in some instances, even eight months (secs. 23 and 24 of the Registration Act). We must consequently hold that the mortgage set up by the Plaintiff took effect from the 19th January 1908 and was entitled to priority over that of the third and fourth Defendants executed on the 21st January 1908.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge modified. The Plaintiff will have a decree on his mortgage in the usual form. It will be declared that he is entitled to priority over the mortgage of the third and fourth Defendants, but not over that of the fifth Defendant. The Plaintiff will pay the costs of the fifth Defendant in all the Courts, but will receive all his costs from the first, third and fourth Defendants. The suit is dismissed as against the second Defendant who was unnecessarily made a party and who will have his costs in the first Court only, but no pleader's fees, from the Plaintiff.

A self-contained decree will be drawn up in this Court in supersession of the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar for Babu Romesh Chandra Sen for the Appellant.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit commenced by him for ejectment of the Defendant under sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the ground that he held under a lease, the term whereof had expired. It appears that three persons, by name, Zahiruddi, Abdur Rahim and Samiruddin were tenants of a raiyati holding. Samiruddin transferred his one-third interest in the holding to the Plaintiff on the 9th May 1898, and took from him a sub-lease of the homestead for a term of 9 years. The case for the Plaintiff is that although the term has expired the Defendant has not vacated the land. The Defendant resists the claim on the ground that under the terms of the lease he is entitled to continue in occupation even after the expiry of the term thereof.

The Court of first instance held that the incidents of the tenancy were regulated by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that under sec. 49, cl. (a), the Defendant was liable to be evicted. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has held that the incidents of the tenancy are regulated by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the Defendant is consequently not liable to be ejected.

In the present appeal it has been contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the applicability of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act is erroneous and that the Defendant is liable to be ejected under sec. 49, cl. (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the applicability of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be supported but the decree he has made is correct and ought to be affirmed.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the holding which belonged to the three persons named was an agricultural holding and that as the Defendant has taken a sub-lease only of the homestead portion of the holding the incidents of the sub-tenancy are governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. This position is clearly untenable. Sec. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that when a raiyat holds his homestead otherwise than as part of his holding as a raiyat, the incidents of his tenancy of the homestead shall be regulated by local custom or usage; and subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to land held by a raiyat. No suggestion was made by either of the parties to the present suit that there was any local custom or usage applicable to this matter. Consequently, the homestead portion of the holding is governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act precisely in the same manner as the portion under actual cultivation. The view we take is supported by the decision in Baburam Roy v.

Mohendra Nath Samanta (1). It was ruled in that case that where the land included in the holding of an agricultural raiyat consists partly of agricultural and partly of homestead lands and the portion which is used as homestead is let out for use as homestead, the under-tenant is an under-raiyat within the Bengal Tenancy Act and the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act have no application. Mr. Justice Mitra pointed out that the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed for the protection of raiyats as well as under-raiyats and if a raiyat holds lands partly agricultural and partly homestead the incidents of the holding will regulate the incidents of the sub-lease created by the raiyat. The Transfer of Property Act is not applicable to lands used for agricultural purposes and in considering whether the one act or the other would apply, we have to look to the nature of the original tenancy and not the nature of the sub-tenancy with reference to a particular piece of land within the holding. If the contrary view were maintained considerable anomaly might result. It follows, therefore, that the incidents of the tenancy of the Defendant must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now it has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that as the sub-lease of the 19th May 1908 was for a period of 9 years he is entitled to eject the Defendant upon the expiry of the term. This contention, however, is not supported by the terms of the instrument. The lease provides in one portion that the sub-tenant could not at any time be ejected from the raiyati holding of the landlord. In another portion, it provides that upon the expiry of the term of the kabuliyat, a fresh settlement would be made and till a fresh settlement was made the condition of the kabuliyat would continue in force. These two clauses taken together plainly indicate that the intention of the parties was not to have the tenancy terminable upon the expiry of the period of 9 years. The lease in fact was permanent; the true intention of the parties was that upon the expiration of the first nine years of the tenancy a new settlement of rent would be made and till such settlement was made, rent would continue to be paid at the rate mentioned in the contract. That a contract of tenancy of this description between a raiyat and an under-raiyat is valid in law, so far as the contracting parties are concerned, cannot be disputed in view of the decisions of this Court in the cases of Tamijuddi v. Aijar Howladar (2), Bepin Behari Hati v. Amrita Lal Bhattacharji (3) and Manik Borai v. Beni Charan Mandal (4). The contrary view taken in Basaratulla v. Kasirunnessa (5) cannot be supported, upon a true interpretation of the terms of sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That decision is inconsistent with at least two previous decisions of this Court and, so far as we have been able to discover, it has not been followed in any subsequent decision. We may further point out that the effect of the clause for the grant of a new lease upon the expiry of the term was to prevent the landlord from seeking to eject the Defendant upon the expiry of nine years. This is conclusively shown by the decision of this Court in the case of Ali Mahammad Bepari v.

v. Nayan Rajah Bhuiya,* decided by Rampini and Handley, JJ., we are con-

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd of June 1900 against the decree of A. Pennell, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Noakhali, dated the 1st of March 1900, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Nath Roy, Munsif, Lakhipur, dated the 7th of August 1899.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Girija Prosonno Roy Chaudhuri for the Appellant.

Babu Priya Nath Sen for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The suit out of which this appeal arises, is a suit brought by a raiyat to eject an under-raiyat. The raiyat gave the under-raiyat a lease for nine years and it was stipulated that, after the expiry of the term of nine years, the raiyat would give the under-raiyat a fresh lease of the land. Now, the raiyat seeks to eject the under-raiyat, and, in the lower Appellate Court it was argued that, this lease was in contravention of the terms of sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but the learned District Judge has pointed out that the section only lays down that a lease in favour of an under-raiyat for more than nine years should not be valid as against the landlord, that is, the raiyat's landlord. But it does not mean to lay down that such a stipulation as the parties to their case entered into shall be null and void. We think on this point the learned Judge's judgment is quite correct. Then the learned Vakil for the Appellant has raised another plea before us, namely, that although in the Defendant's lease it is agreed that the Defendant is entitled to a fresh settlement on a fair rent after the expiry of the lease, yet as he has not taken such settlement, the Plaintiff is entitled to eject him. We find the Plaintiff has never offered him a lease on a fair rent and has brought this suit to eject the Defendant without giving him the option to take a fresh lease at any rent at all. Under these circumstances, we think, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is perfectly right and the Plaintiff is not in any way entitled to eject the Defendant.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

RAI CHURN GHOSH v. KUMUD MOHON DUTT (4) and BISHNU PRIYA v. BHABA SUNDARI (5) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th of November 1911 against an order of Babu K. M. Sikdar, Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur and Monghyr, dated the 14th of September 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty, Babus Ram Chandra Mitter, Bepin Behary Ghosh and D. N. Bagchi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Appellant in this case in a former execution proceeding attached an allowance payable to the Respondent. The attachment was contested but it was decided against the Respondent and the decision was not appealed against. It is clear that what was sought to be attached in that case was not any particular instalments but the whole allowance as it fell due. Subsequently it has been held in a case between the Respondent and another creditor, to which the Appellant was not a party, that this allowance could not be attached in this general way, and that instalments could not be attached before they respectively fell due. The Appellant again took out execution and the Respondent again pleaded that this attachment could not be made. This plea was accepted by the Subordinate Judge and the decree-holder accordingly appeals.

(5) L. L. R. 28 Cal. 318 (1901).

BAIJ NATH GOENKA v. PUDMANUND SINGH.

The only point that really arises in the appeal is whether the liability of the allowance to attachment is or is not a res judicata between the parties. The former proceeding was an execution in the same suit and was not a former suit so that sec. 11 of the Code has no application and the matter must be decided on the principles laid down in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1). The question however whether an erroneous decision of law can have the force of a res judicata must necessarily be decided on the same principles, whether it arises under sec. 11 of the Code or in successive execution proceedings. There is considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the point and we have been referred to numerous cases, of which all the most important are cited in Aghore Nath Mukerjee v. Kamini Debi (2). The learned Judges there held that an erroneous decision on a point of pure law cannot have the force of a res judicata in a subsequent case in which the cause of action is not the same. This decision was followed in Purna Chandra v. Rasik Chandra (3). It appears to us that so long as the former decision merely lays down what the law is it cannot have the force of res judicata in a subsequent proceeding to recover a different relief. But if it is a decision that is contrary to law, when that expression is used in the wide sense attributed to it for example in sec. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, it may or may not have the force of a res judicata. For instance, in the case of Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) cited above, the two proceedings did not relate to the same mesne profits and in the first the proper construction of the decree of which execution was sought was decided. This would be a question of law under sec. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, but the decision did not profess to lay down what the law on the subject was. But when a decision does lay down what the law is and is found to be erroneous, it cannot, in our opinion, have the force of res judicata in a subsequent proceeding for a different relief. A decision cannot alter the law of the land. [Rai Churn Ghosh v. Kumud Mohun Dutt (4) and Bishnu Priya v. Bhaba Sundari (5)].

We think, therefore, that although it was decided between the parties in a previous execution proceeding that the allowance could be attached, the Subordinate Judge has no more power now, than he really had then, to attach the allowance before it was due; and that the former decision cannot alter the law in this respect or give the Subordinate Judge a jurisdiction that he would not otherwise possess.

It has been argued that the judgment-debtor is precluded from attacking the attachment, because in the former proceeding he accepted benefits under it. But we think that there is nothing in this contention. The decree-holders sought to attach the whole allowance, but the executing Court, moved apparently by compassion, permitted the attachment of three quarters only and kept the rest for the judgment-debtor to enjoy. The judgment-debtor may have received this indulgence, which in the view taken by the executing Court, was quite unjustifiable; but it certainly cannot preclude him from contesting the whole attachment.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs.

APP. NO. 579 OF 1911.

Judgment,

RATE JHA,
Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 471—Using a forged document, whether handing a document to a muktear who then makes it over to a witness and asks him whether it is genuine—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195—Sanction granted to the agent of a landlord whose seal was counterfeited, whether valid—Sanction by successor of trying Magistrate if valid—Sentence, mitigating circumstances.

The Appellant in the course of the hearing of a criminal case against him had made over a receipt for rent to his muktear who then handed it to a witness asking him whether it was a receipt for rent granted by the landlord in favour of the Appellant. On the witness saying it was not genuine, the trying Magistrate initialled it and kept it on the record as one of the documents produced on behalf of the defence :

Held—That the Appellant was guilty under sec. 471, I. P. C., as in the circumstances of the case what he did constituted user within the meaning of that section.

lord whose seal was counterfeited on the forged receipt was a valid sanction according to law, and the fact that this sanction was granted by the successor in office of the Magistrate who had tried the criminal case against the Appellant, did not invalidate it.

The fact that the primary object of the Appellant in using the forged receipt was to get out of the difficulty in which he was put by the criminal case and that he did not support the document by production of perjured evidence, may be taken into account in mitigation of punishment.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of July 1911 against an order of Mr. W. H. Vincent, Sessions Judge of Mozufferpur, dated the 10th of May 1910, convicting the Appellant under sec. 471, I. P. C., and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

The facts material to the report will appear from the judgment.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal for Babu Ambika Charan Das for the Appellant.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed (Deputy Legal Remembrancer) for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant in this case was convicted of an offence under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. The document on which the charge of using a forged document was founded was a receipt for rent and the occasion on which the Appellant used it was at a trial in which he was one of the Defendants on a charge of rioting. The land in respect of which the riot took place was a piece of land of which he wished to take possession and, in the course of the hearing of the criminal case against him, the receipt for rent in question was produced by him and handed to his muktear who then handed it to a witness who was asked whether it was a receipt for rent granted by the landlord in favour of the present Appellant who was then one of the prisoners at the trial. The witness said it was not genuine; but notwithstanding that, the document was initialled by the Magistrate who was trying the case and was filed as one of the documents produced on behalf of the Defendant. On these facts, the Appellant was convicted, as has been stated, under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

The learned Vakil who appeared on behalf of the Appellant in this Court took four points on behalf of his client: first, that the trial was bad because the sanction on which it was held was invalid; secondly, that there was nothing to show that the receipt was a forgery; thirdly, that the receipt was not used within the meaning of the Code; and, lastly, that the sentence was too severe.

With regard to the first point, the sanction was granted to the agent of the landlord whose seal was alleged to have been counterfeited on the rent receipt. The learned Vakil argued that the sanction ought to have been granted to a person who was one of the parties to the case in which the receipt was produced, namely, the rioting case. That contention finds no support from any of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and we do not agree with it. It appears to us that the landlord whose seal had been counterfeited was perfectly entitled to authorise his agent to obtain sanction to prosecute, and to prosecute in respect of the wrong which was done to him in counterfeiting his seal.

Then, it is said that the sanction was invalid on another ground because it was not granted by Mr. Davidson who heard the rioting case but by his successor. But it has been decided by the Courts that a sanction is valid if granted by the successor in office of the Judge or Magistrate before whom the offence was committed. The first point taken, therefore, fails.

The second point taken is that there is nothing to show that the receipt was forged. The evidence as to that is that of the zemindar himself who comes into the box and pledges his oath that the seal which appears on the rent receipt is not the seal used in his office. A specimen of his own seal has been produced and a comparison shows that the seal on the rent receipt produced by the Appellant, though it resembles that used by the landlord differs from it in some small but material points. Further the landlord says that the genuine receipts granted in his zemindari were on printed forms and this one was a receipt on plain paper. It is argued by the learned Vakil that there was another seal which was in use before 1905 and that that seal was affixed on the rent receipt in question by a deceased Karpardaz of the landlord for the purpose of cheating the Appellant. Not only is there no evidence that any such seal ever existed but it is in evidence that there was no seal at all in the zemindari at that time because the landlord deposes that there was no seal before 1905 when the present seal was procured and, further, the contention of the learned Vakil is open to this observation that, if any other seal was ever used previous to 1905, it was quite easy for the Appellant who was before 1905 a tenant of the land to produce receipts bearing the seal which he alleged was in existence then. But no

WE UNDERSTAND THAT OUR OBSERVATIONS WITH regard to the Inns of Court rule that enables Vakils to be called to the Bar in 14 months' time have been misunderstood. This rule is unfair to the Vakils of standing as also to barristers. We do not object to Vakils of standing and assured position being admitted as advocates. If they are, they should be by virtue of their forensic talents. It is not fair to them that a junior member of the profession should be entitled to the privilege by simply passing some examinations in a year's time. In this respect Barristers who have qualified themselves for the privilege by a prolonged stay in England and considerable expenditure have also a grievance. The rule in question is also very invidious as it places ordinary B. L's. and M. A's who may go to England for qualifying themselves for the Bar on a different footing. Further when Vakils of standing in Bombay have to go out of practice for a year before they are enrolled as advocates, it is only reasonable that a junior Vakil after passing the Inns of Court examinations in England should serve out a period of probational training, as the members of the Indian Civil Service do. The object of the Bombay rule regarding enlistment of advocates from Vakils is that in changing from one branch of the profession to the other he must be out of touch with his clients for some time. When this rule is insisted on in the case of senior Vakils a larger period of training for junior Vakils would seem to be only reasonable.

WHATEVER MAY HAVE BEEN THE GENERAL educational qualifications of Indian barristers in the past, it cannot be gainsaid now that they have produced men of such towering personality, ability and independence as are seldom to be met to-day. Be that as it may, it should be remembered that under the present regulations of the Inns of Court Indian barristers would ordinarily have to be Indian graduates. Under the proposed rules of the High Court where they be B. A.'s, M. A.'s, B. L.'s, or even Judge's Court pleaders, they would all have to be educated in England for three years besides studying in a barrister's Chambers in England for another year to qualify themselves for the Bar. But a B. L. student who may nominally be articled to a Vakil of the High Court for two years may be enrolled as a Vakil of the High Court even in the course of the first year after passing his B. L. examination. It seems to us to be highly invidious and unfair that he should, by virtue of a colourable compliance of serving out a period of articulated clerkship, be exempted from the stringent and onerous rules and regulations that would apply to all other Indian graduates and under-graduates. We also believe that it would not be to the advantage of junior Vakils to proceed to England simply for passing some examinations and returning to India within the shortest time possible.

IT WOULD BE TO THE DISTINCT ADVANTAGE OF all Indian students, Vakils or otherwise, to attend one or other of the English Universities either before or after they have qualified themselves for the Bar. During the vacations they would find it both pleasurable and educative to study the people and the great institutions of the West. As for knowing the people one can never know them unless one has lived with the better class of people. We would therefore venture to suggest that if every Indian youth be required to produce some certificates, before enrolment as a member of Bar here, that he has either resided for a period at some University or in the family of a gentleman belonging to any of the learned professions or men of general culture, it would serve a far more wholesome purpose than requiring him to study in a barrister's Chambers which he can avoid doing by arrangement. We would go so far as to maintain that even those who may join the Universities should be required to produce some certificates that they have lived for some period in the families of some men of education and culture in vacations during their residence in England. Living in London lodging-houses is far from educative to our young men. One sees little of English life unless one has lived in English families.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA HAS ISSUED PRESS COMMUNIQUE with reference to the vetoing of the Orissa Tenancy Bill in reply to some statements which were made about the matter at a meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The action of the Viceroy was due, says the communique, "to obvious political and administrative considerations." It then proceeds to state the circumstances under which the Bill was vetoed as follows :—

The Bill was passed by the Bengal Legislative Council at 1 P.M. on the 27th March, and was brought on the same day for his Excellency's assent immediately before his departure from Calcutta. In view of the contentious nature of the Orissa Tenancy Bill, of the opposition raised to it in Council by the representatives of Bihar and Orissa and in view of the fact that in four days' time the Province of Orissa would be separated from Bengal and would become incorporated in a Province that is shortly to have a Legislative Council of its own capable of dealing with its own provincial legislation in accordance with requirements, the Viceroy in consultation with his constitutional advisers decided to withhold his assent to the Bill and to leave to the newly formed Government of Bihar and Orissa the task of passing such legislation as might be necessary to meet the local needs. The decision of the Viceroy was at once communicated verbally to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal with the reasons on which it was based. The action of the Viceroy in this matter is not without precedent.

OBVIOUSLY THE VICEROY REFUSED TO BE HURRIED into giving assent to an important and contentious measure passed in the greatest possible haste by an expiring Council. As we observed before, a Viceroy with a proper appreciation of his responsibility in such matters could not, in the circumstances, have done otherwise. And we are now assured that in this matter the Viceroy did not act without consulting his constitutional advisers.

TWO CRITICISMS WHICH ARE MORE INGENIOUS THAN plausible have been offered on this communique. The first is that the Bill as a whole was not a contentious measure but that the entire opposition was directed against a particular chapter and that a very important chapter of the Bill. We do not pretend to understand the drift of this criticism. A Bill is a contentious measure no matter whether criticism is directed against the whole of the Bill or only against a part. If it is suggested that as there was opposition, which was undeniably well-founded, to a portion of the Bill, the Viceroy should not have vetoed the Bill, the argument is obviously unsound. It cannot on the other hand be suggested that the Viceroy could have assented to the Bill with the exception of the portion opposed, for there is no constitutional power for adopting such a course. The only alternative to assent was to send back the Bill with the Viceroy's suggestions. But in that case the Bill would have to be passed again with amendments by the Bengal Council. With four days of life before it, the Bengal Council could not possibly have done the work and the Bill would have to go as it must now go to the Behar Council.

THE OTHER CRITICISM IS DIRECTED TO THE verbal communication of the vetoing to the Lieutenant-Governor. Sec. 40 of the Indian Councils Act (24 and 25 Vict. c. 67) requires that when the Governor-General withholds his assent from a Bill passed by a Provincial Council "he shall signify in writing his reason for so withholding his assent." It is therefore said that the action of the Viceroy was illegal. Now there was certainly an irregularity in this act, and perhaps the communication of the Viceroy's veto being not in compliance with sec. 40 was a nullity. As the Viceroy was leaving on that very day it was probably not possible to communicate the reasons for withholding the assent in the regular official way on that day. That being so, in the eye of law the Bill still remains awaiting the Governor-General's assent.

IN THE MEANTIME THE GOVERNMENT WHICH PASSED the Bill has ceased to exist and there is no authority which can publish the Bill and otherwise make it law; so that, so far as law and constitution are concerned, the Bill dies without any act of the Viceroy at all. The law does not fix any time limit to the Viceroy's signification of his decision and so far as the effect goes there is no difference in this case between a regular veto under sec. 40 of the Councils Act and a mere delay in taking steps on the Bill. If the Viceroy intended his verbal communication to operate as a veto he was evidently wrong. But whatever he may have thought, the Bill expired not by his withholding of assent but by mere efflux of time. And the mention of a verbal communication in the communique makes no difference to the legal aspect of the matter and for all that we know, the Viceroy may have meant that communication as a mere matter of courtesy while he let the Bill die a natural death by merely staying his hand.

WE PUBLISH IN ANOTHER COLUMN THE FULL TEXT of the Government of India Bill now before the Parliament. It will be observed that the preamble of the Bill specifically mentions the several acts of the Governor-General in constituting the Provinces of Bengal and Behar and Assam and tacitly gives Parliamentary recognition to these acts thus removing doubts as to the regularity or legality of the proclamations. The first section gives the Governor and Governor in Council of Bengal the same powers as the Governors and Councils of the other Presidencies subject to certain provisos of which the most important is the power of the Governor-General to reserve any powers that he exercised till now over Bengal. The second section gives an Executive Council to Behar and Orissa. The third section empowers the Governor-General by proclamation to create Legislative Councils for Chief Commissionerships, evidently contemplating Assam and possibly the Central Provinces. It is clear that the effect of these sections would be to enable the Government of India to right any wrongs that might be done to any Province as a result of these changes. It would be unfair to deprive Behar of the advantages of an Executive Council or Assam of the benefits of a Legislative Council, which they have had under the old regime. These provisions would enable the Government to remove all complaints on these matters.

SUB SEC. (2) OF THE FOURTH SECTION MAINTAINS the power of the Governor-General to make redistribution of territories between different Provinces and declares that this power extends to territories under Lieutenant-Governors as well as to territories under Chief-Commissioners. We have pointed out before that the existence of these powers of the Governor-General in Council under the existing Statutes is more than doubtful, but this section is meant to be a Parliamentary declaration of the fact that such power has always existed. This seems to have the effect of establishing the validity of all the acts of the Governor-General in partitioning and re-partitioning Bengal. So far as this is concerned we are glad that the constitution of the Provinces has thus been placed on stable and indubitable foundations. But for reasons stated before, we do not appreciate the vesting of such large powers in the Governor-General.

SOME TIME AGO WE DREW ATTENTION TO THE evils of cotton figure gambling in Calcutta. In response to the public feeling on the matter the Calcutta Police raided some of these gambling dens, arresting several persons who were prosecuted. The trial of one of these cases in the Police Court has now been concluded and Mr. Keays, the Second Presidency Magistrate, in a careful and elaborate judgment has discussed the legal aspect of the question and held that these houses came within the mischief of sec. 44 of the Calcutta Police Act as public gaming houses. The High Court has issued a rule in the matter and as the judgment of Mr. Keays is now pending consideration we shall not for the present comment on the legal aspects of the case or on the points raised by the Magistrate's judgment. We are glad, however, to note that the Government has been moved to take vigorous steps for the suppression of the evil and we hope that whatever view the High Court may take of the law on the subject, the Government will take adequate steps to eradicate the evil from the city.

VAKIL'S PRIVILEGES AT THE INNS OF COURT.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

SIR,—Some of your editorial paragraphs in the last number of the Calcutta Weekly Notes concerning the proposed alteration of the Rules for enrolment of advocates have come as a painful surprise to Vakils. These latter had hitherto believed that as the editor of a Law Journal of standing like the Calcutta Weekly Notes you would take up an impartial stand-point and hold no brief for any particular branch of the legal profession. Any such idea will have, however, to be abandoned if the sentiments contained in those paragraphs represent anything more than a passing phase—a momentary aberration, caused by passion.

For one thing, the draft rules which have furnished you with the text for delivering your attack on the professional honour of Vakils do not, directly or indirectly, raise the Vakil-Barrister question. But the attack having been made, no Vakil will care to parry or avoid it on the mere plea of irrelevancy.

The two grounds which you urge against the Inns of Court regulations (not the draft rules of the Calcutta High Court) relating to Vakils (and they have been in existence for years) are, first, that a residence in the United Kingdom for at least three years is absolutely necessary to enable the student to "grasp the unwritten code of honour and self respect that prevails amongst the profession and the cultured people" there. What this unwritten code which appears to be the exclusive property of professional and cultured men in England may be, a mere Vakil like myself has no means of knowing. But if the chief value, as you say, of education of our youths in England is that it "serves to widen their views, discard the narrow interests associated with caste, creed and social life in India, develop healthy and noble ideals of humanity and that it enables them to assimilate and appreciate the modern outlook of life and of the world," then it would seem that the extended stay of four years required by the draft rules should be warmly welcomed by barristers upon whom a three years' stay has already conferred these inestimable benefits. But it surely does not augur well for the future of a community which, in your view, is so devoid of innate sense of honour and self-respect that its youths must travel thousands of miles away to pick up from foreigners their unwritten Code of honour and self-respect. The worst critics of Indian life and Indian morals have not said of educated Indians what you, under stress of controversy, have unwittingly laid at their door. The argument has only to be exhibited in its true perspective to make its utter futility self-evident.

You say next that a three years' stay in England is specially necessary in the case of Vakils in order to wean them from their previous association with clients, witnesses, muktears and law agents. You apparently forget that the Inns of Court regulations do not insist upon practice as a Vakil as a condition precedent to their being permitted to avail themselves of the facilities provided, nor do Vakils as a rule go to England to qualify for the Bar after some years' practice. Most of them get enrolled as Vakils and start for England almost immediately, and if the draft rules framed by the High Court should pass, the number of Vakils who would adopt this course would increase rather than diminish, for it is only through the opening left by the Inns of Court regulations that the disturbed balance between Indians and non-Indians, about which you justly entertain apprehensions, will be corrected. But even assuming that the Vakils in future will not go to England to qualify for the Bar before being inextricably committed to the conditions of practice prevailing on the Appellate Side of the High Court, what are the actualities of these conditions which excite your horror? No body of legal practitioners in the world have less to do with witnesses than Vakils practising on the Appellate Side, and Vakils are seldom called upon to exercise their wit and ingenuity in that fruitful field of practice, called "Advice on Evidence." As to association with Muktears you might well have left these men alone, seeing that they enjoy a certain legal status conferred on them by Statute and by the Rules of the High Court, and if the association of any body of legal practitioners with Muktears were at all demoralising both the Legislature and the High Court would have long ago seen to the abolition of this branch of the profession. As to association with clients and law agents, association with the one or the other of them may conceivably be wrong, but association with both cannot be wrong at the same time. From what we can gather from legislative enactments and High Court Rules the trend of opinion at the present day is in favour of encouraging direct contact between advocates and clients. The unwritten practice of the Bar to the contrary is a survival, not wholly conducive to the best interests of the clients. Again, law agents (or am-muktears) must exist and be tolerated if female litigants and zemindars and others who cannot or do not care to look after their own law suits are not to be prohibited from resorting to the law Courts.

So far as regards the conditions of practice of Vakils. But what are the conditions of practice of Barristers with which they are sought to be contrasted? You have not taken the trouble to draw a picture of the actual conditions of practice of Barristers which are patent to every one familiar with the High Court corridors and the attorneys' offices. But for me to draw such a picture here in a spirit of mere retaliation would not be consistent with savoir vivre and I refrain from it. Suffice it to say that the immaculate creature sitting like the Grand Lama of Thibet away from the vulgar gaze behind a serried rank of solicitors with briefs does not exist, nor would he be of any use if he existed.

But after all, no amount of special pleading, however plausible, by a Barrister on behalf of Barristers or by a Vakil on behalf of Vakils will be of any avail before the bar of public opinion which goes by the test of merit. The very success of Vakils at the Bar Examinations in England by a strange freak of logic suggests to you an argument against taking that success as a test of fitness. Does it not rather go to show that by reason of their previous training and culture and also the maturity of their intellect they are better able to resist the temptations of London streets and are better fitted to utilize the opportunities of moral and intellectual improvement which their one-and-a-half year's stay in England affords them? But if the result of the examination is no sure test, surely, the rapid and remarkable success which they have, almost without exception, attained in the practice of their profession, is. The verdict of the public on the merits of the Vakil-Barristers is unmistakable.

You cannot be unaware, though you may have momentarily forgotten it, that Vakils are not the casual and fortuitous products of University examinations. They have their honourable traditions, not brought out it is true in sealed packets like the Sybilline books from across the seas, but not less jealously guarded on that account. Has not the Vakil bar produced leaders and Judges whose record would bear comparison with the highest and noblest in the profession in any part of the world? I must therefore entirely repudiate your suggestion that a three years' study (neither more nor less) in England is indispensable to make a legal practitioner what he ought to be and that without it he cannot hope to attain to the highest level of professional competence and honour. I do not, for one moment, deny that a sojourn in England extending over years would be to the benefit of any Indian however qualified he may otherwise be, and any rules or regulations which would tend to discourage Indian youths from visiting the centres of European culture should be scrutinised with jealous care. In so far also as the proposed rules have a tendency to introduce invidious distinctions between Indians and non-Indians, your criticism of the rules will secure public support—and this even though your picture of Indian parents sending out their youths to England in order to save them from the grinding oppressions of the Indian Universities and of these youths, in turn, repaying their parents' solicitude by devoting themselves wholly and solely to imbibing all that is noble and beautiful in English life and English institutions, is a trifle overdrawn.

I cannot conclude this letter without expressing my surprise at the fact that whilst you have exhausted your logic and rhetoric in attacking the regulations of the Inns of Court concerning Vakils you have left untouched the very much more lenient provisions relating to Solicitors who, if of five years' standing in their profession, are admitted to the final Bar examination without having to attend a single term. If your views are sound, then the Benchers would appear to be singularly indifferent to your requirement of a change in the conditions of practice and environments as being absolutely essential for the proper growth and nurture of that very delicate and elusive ideal of professional honour which is supposed to govern a Barrister's dealings in later life.

MEMORIES OF SIR TIRAVARUR MUTTUSAMY AIYAR. By M. P. Duttaswami Aiyar. Tanjore. Price Rs. 2.

Sir T. Muttuswami Aiyar was a great judge, a great man and an example to mankind of how poverty and adversity offers no effective bar to the true genius rising to deserved eminence. His life and memories are therefore well worth recording, for they are bound to be a source of inspiration to all. In so far as the work before us is a record of the life and doings of the great man from the pen of one who had singular opportunities of knowing them we should like to welcome this volume. But the record is as badly made as it could well have been and the philosophy and moral lectures of the author such as they are, which are freely interspersed in the work, make it quite impossible reading. A plain and unvarnished narrative of events would have been immeasurably better. In his preface the author says "though this memoir is wanting in scholarly merit, oratorical brilliance, grammatical excellence and even typographical accuracy, I may at least claim for it an abundant sincerity of thought and honesty of purpose, the most essential feature of any biography." Putting aside the author's view of the "essential feature" of a biography this is not all mere modesty. The English of the work might form a companion to that of another well-known biography of a High Court Judge—of Calcutta. The author includes in this work not only extracts from valedictory references to his hero by prominent men but also solicited testimonials to him from men whom the author considered well worthy of pronouncing on his merits. We should think that Muttusami Aiyar's fame could well afford to stand without the props furnished by most of these appreciations.

Sir Philip Hutchins has furnished an introduction which is short and sweet though not lacking in irrelevancy for all that. The only readable thing about the work is Mr. Eardley Norton's appreciation, though his attempts at humour are at times very tiring.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT. Being Act IX of 1908, with full notes and complete index. By Sarat Chandra Ghosh, B. L., Vakil, High Court, Calcutta. Calcutta: Printed and published by R. Chatterjee, University Prtg. & Pubg. Co., Ltd., 1, Gangadhar Babu Lane. 1912. Rs. 5/8.

This is a handy annotated edition of the Limitation Act which will be much appreciated by the profession. It covers about 750 pages and, so far as the case-law is concerned, seems to be exhaustive, cases decided when the book was going through the press being collected in the "Addenda." The Statement of Objects and Reasons and the Select Committee's Report on the Bill which subsequently became Act IX of 1908, Tables of Cases and a Subject-index, all go to make the book as complete a book of ready reference as the practitioner may desire. The mechanical execution of the book also deserves commendation, the printing and get-up being quite satisfactory. The subject-headings and the references in the notes are for convenience distinguished by thicker types.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Ex parte Tupper. Before JUSTICES PHILLIMORE, HAMILTON AND LUSH. 8th March 1912.

Repetition of alleged libel after service of writ—Circumstances justifying it—Right of public criticism and interference with fair trial.

Mr. Tupper who is one of the leaders of the Labour movement took out a writ for libel against the Daily Express. Before the writ was actually served the newspaper published another article in which Mr. Tupper's character and antecedents were adversely commented upon. Even after the service of the writ the newspaper persisted in publishing damaging statements against him. He thereupon obtained the present rule nisi against the Editor of the newspaper to show cause why a writ of attachment should not issue against him. The Defendants pleaded justification in the action for libel, and contended that they had a right to criticise the Plaintiff, even to repeat the alleged libel in the interests of free speech and the public. The Court discharged the rule. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Phillimore said :—

To say that a newspaper was to be restrained from expressing its opinion on a man who bulked large in the public eye, from the issue of the writ to the trial of the action, the date of which must be to a considerable extent in the Plaintiff's hands, would be a very grave restriction on the freedom of the Press, likely in many cases to be fraught with danger. He put aside political cases such as the present one, and the terrible circumstances in which they now stood. But take the case of a vulgar cheat trying to get money by passing himself off as an old soldier or fraudulently collecting money on the pretence that i was for some missionary society. If some one once committed himself to the expression of an opinion as to this person it would only be necessary for him to issue a writ, and no one was to be allowed to say anything about him for fear it should prejudice the fair trial of the action. He did not believe that the law was responsible for any such absurd conclusion.

Of course, there were limits to the right of free speech, and no doubt articles or statements made near the time of the trial, especially on the eve of the trial or made at a place near in point of locality, were calculated to create an atmosphere unfavourable to one of the parties by deterring witnesses from coming forward and speaking their minds freely or by warping the minds of the jurymen, and these should be deemed an interference with the course of justice, and should be restrained by the wholesome exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court. But it was quite another thing to say that a man could procure himself protection for life from the exposure of his character by the issue of a writ. Mr. Inskip had rightly said that the Court must not assume that the account of the Plaintiff which the Respondent had sworn to was correct, nor did they do so. But, on the other hand, neither did they assume the contrary. But if by chance it was true that Mr. Tupper was only half what the Respondent said he was, then it was very much for the public benefit that his unmasking should not be delayed.

He did not go so far as to say that there were no cases in which the issue of damages must be considered an unimportant issue, and there might be cases where matters tending to prejudice the fair trial of that one issue only might be so serious as to warrant the application of this remedy.

Up to the time of the case of Cronmire v. Daily Bourse, 9 T. L. R. 101, there had been no precedent for an application in a libel action similar to the present one, and that was a very good reason for saying that libel actions were the last to which this remedy should be applied; for the Plaintiff always had two other remedies. He could bring a further action for the second libel, and have the two cases tried together or at the same Assizes, or he could give in evidence the second libel in which the Defendant had indulged, in aggravation of damages. No doubt there had been other cases since the above case, but the facts were very different from those in the present one.

In adopting the language of the Judges in the cases of Bonnard v. Perryman (1891, 2 Ch. 282) and Duncan v. Spauling (10 T. L. R., p. 355) his Lordship asked, what did those decisions come to? Where the Defendant swore he was going to justify the words of the alleged libel the Court would not grant a rule in a case of this kind unless it saw that the justification was an idle one and not genuine. Here the Defendants had averred that they were prepared to justify at the risk of the damages against them being thereby inflated, and that they were solvent and able to pay damages. Of course, that did not necessarily touch upon the question of the interference with a fair trial. The Court had to reconcile two things—namely, the right of free speech and the public advantage that a knave should be exposed, and the right of an individual suitor to have his case fairly tried. The only way in which the Court could save both was to refuse an unlimited extension of either right. It became, then, a question of degree.

If the case were tried in Glamorgan it would come on in July: if in Middlesex not for a considerable time. They did not know what the Plaintiff was going to say about the libel, for the case was in its very earliest stages, and there seemed some substance in what had been said—namely, that the object of bringing it was to prevent any inquiry as to the Plaintiff's career. The Plaintiff, not unnaturally, had taken occasion to vindicate his character. If unjustly accused he had every right to defend himself by open speech; but if he might do that, might not the Defendant do the opposite, and might not third parties do the opposite? The effect of the doctrine propounded by Mr. Inskip would be to prevent all newspapers and all public men from saying what they honestly believed as to the Plaintiff's character.

Suppose the character in which he presented himself were false, was it not of vital importance that some one should say to the men whom he was leading that he was an impostor? He quite agreed that no atmosphere must be created near the time of the trial. Still the Plaintiff had one remedy in his own hands. While he was a public man he was the subject of public comment; he must retire into private life; as long as he remained what he was he could not complain of comment, which would be made at the risk of paying damages.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and CHAPMAN, J. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 384 OF 1910. BASANTA LAL, Decree-holder, Appellant v. SECRETARY OF STATE AND CHEDU SINGH, Surety, Respondent. 19th April 1912.

Civil Procedure Code, sec. 145—Forfeiture of surety bond.

The Appellants obtained a decree against one Gendu Sing and in execution of his decree got the judgment-debtor arrested and put in civil jail. The judgment-debtor applied for being declared an insolvent and was released from jail on the surety depositing Rs. 500 and executing a bond to produce the debtor when required. The application for insolvency was dismissed and the surety was called upon to produce the debtor but he reported that the debtor had absconded. Thereupon the decree-holder put in a petition in Court asking the money in deposit to be paid to him and the surety bond forfeited in his favour. The District Judge, however, held that as Chedu Sing stood surety for production of the debtor the money should be forfeited to Government and not to the creditor. Against this order the judgment-debtor appealed to this Court making the Secretary of State a Respondent to the same.

Held—The rights of the decree-holder were interfered with by taking the security and releasing the debtor and there is no power in the Civil Procedure Code by which the money could be forfeited to Government.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. P. C. APPEAL NO. 22 OF 1911. NAND KESSORE SING AND OTHERS, Defendants, 3rd Party, Appellant, Petitioners v. RAM GOLAM SAHOO, Plaintiff, Respondent, Opposite Party. 16th April 1912.

Review of order granting or refusing certificate under sec. 110, C. P. C.

The Plaintiff-Respondent brought the suit for recovery of Rs. 8,413 due on a mortgage bond executed by the Defendant 1st and 2nd party. The Appellants were made Defendant 3rd party, as they are the purchasers of equity of redemption in some of the mortgaged properties. The suit was dismissed by the first Court but on appeal the High Court decreed the suit, and passed the usual mortgage decree for Rs. 11,429 and odd. The Defendants 3rd parties applied for leave to His Majesty in Council but at the hearing of the application it was admitted by the Vakil for the Appellant that the value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000 and as the value of the mortgaged properties was not proved to be over Rs. 10,000 the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was refused. Thereafter the Petitioners applied for review of the order refusing leave to appeal. A preliminary objection was taken that the order cannot be reviewed as the Judges in the Privy Council Department were sitting under the orders of the Privy Council rather than as Judges of the High Court, and reference was made by analogy to 25 W. R. 529, I. L. R. 7 Cal. 339 at p. 341, I. L. R. 17 Cal. 455.

Held—That applications for review of orders under sec. 110, C. P. C., can be entertained. I. L. R. 16 Cal. 292 notes. Sec. 314, Or. 47, C. P. C., referred to. The application for review was dismissed on the merits.

such receipt was produced and the evidence shows that no such seal ever existed. The Karpardaz who is alleged to have granted the receipt is dead and so could not be called to deny the aspersion made on his character.

The third contention is that the receipt was not used. What happened was that the receipt was produced by the muktear and handed to a witness and, though that witness did not prove it, it nevertheless went to the file after being initialled by the trying Magistrate. It appears to us that this constituted user. The learned Vakil cited the case of Ambika Prosad v. Emperor (1), as an authority for the proposition that the filing of a document is not a user within the meaning of the Act. But the case he cited, when the judgment comes to be looked at, does not support that proposition. That case was one in which the receipts which were alleged to be forged were entered into a list and it appears from the report that what was filed was this list of the documents which was filed with a statement made on behalf of a third party. The filing of a list of documents is not the same thing as the filing of the documents themselves. There was no filing of the forged document in that case which would bring the accused within the Act. In the present case the document was tendered to the witness and then it was initialled by the trying Magistrate and placed on the file by him after having been handed to the muktear by the Appellant himself for the purpose of being used in the case. In our view, that is a sufficient user and the conviction under sec. 471, I. P. C., is right and cannot be disturbed.

As to the fourth question, we think that the sentence may properly be reduced. The offence is no doubt a serious one because it is an offence which must have been committed after preparation and not an offence committed under pressure or sudden impulse. But, on the other hand, it is to be observed that the document was produced in the course of a criminal trial in which the Appellant was one of the Defendants and the primary intention which he had was to get out of the difficulty which he had got into in consequence of the riot, and, after all, the circumstance that the document was not supported by the production of perjured evidence of its genuineness may be taken into account in mitigation of punishment. On these grounds, we think the sentence may with propriety be reduced and we reduce it from five years' rigorous imprisonment to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Subject to this modification in the sentence, the appeal will be dismissed.

NAWAB IBRAHIM ALI KHAN v. NAWAB MUHAMMAD AHSAN ULLAH KHAN.

mogeniture if affected by withdrawal of quasi-sovereign powers from the Chief—Status, change of, if effected.

The chiefship of the Kunjpura riasat was proved to have, ever since its establishment, descended in the male line to a single heir according to the rule of primogeniture. In 1849 Government withdrew the civil and criminal powers the Chiefs had hitherto exercised :

Held—That there being nothing to show that the Government in so doing intended to make any alteration in the status of the chief or to vary the rule which governed the succession to the estate, the custom of succession by primogeniture continued to govern not merely the properties which appertained to the riasat prior to 1849 but equally to land and properties acquired by the Chiefs since 1849.

These were two appeals from a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which in part reversed a decree of the District Judge of Karnal, in whose Court the Plaintiffs, Nawab Muhammad Ahsan Ullah Khan and Muhammad Yusaf Ali Khan, brought a suit against the Defendant, Nawab Ibrahim Ali Khan, for partition and possession of four-fifths of the moveable and immoveable property left by one Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, Jagirdar of Kunjpura, and for rendition of accounts.

The District Judge dismissed the suit. The Chief Court, on appeal, reversed the decree of the District Judge and ordered that the claim of the Plaintiffs in respect of a portion of the property in dispute should be dismissed, and in respect of another portion thereof, should be decreed.

The question for determination in the present appeal was whether the succession to the property in suit was regulated by the rule or custom of primogeniture or by the Muhammadan Law. The following summary of the pleadings of the parties shows how that question arose in the present suit.

In their amended plaint, dated the 22nd May 1903, the Plaintiffs alleged as follows :—That Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, who died on the 13th of January 1886, was their father, and also the father of the Defendant by another wife. The heirs of of the deceased Nawab were the Plaintiffs, two full brothers of theirs, and their step-brother, the Defendant. Each of these heirs succeeded to one-fifth of the property left by their father. On the death of the said two full brothers, their shares, according to law and custom, devolved upon the Plaintiffs alone, and they thus became owners of four shares and the Defendant of only one share. After the death of the Nawab the Court of Wards took possession of everything left by him. On the 22nd of July 1900, the Defendant attained his majority. He was then released from the control of the Court of Wards and took possession of all the property in suit. The Plaintiffs, by a written notice, dated the 17th April 1902, demanded their shares from the Defendant, but he refused to give them any property, stating that they had no right whatever. They therefore prayed for a decree awarding them four-fifths of all the property left by the Nawab.

On the 14th of August 1903, the Defendant filed a written statement in which he pleaded that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief claimed in the plaint, because the family of the parties did not follow Muhammadan Law, but custom. The custom was that only the eldest son became proprietor of the property left by his father, and the other sons received a maintenance allowance. The rule of primogeniture applied to the Estate of Kunjpura, and it was not liable to partition. The Plaintiffs could not have a share of the property in dispute. They were only entitled to receive reasonable maintenance. If the Court found that any portion of the property in suit were partible, each of the Plaintiffs was not entitled to more than one-third thereof.

On the 26th of August 1903, the Plaintiffs put in a replication, in which they alleged that Kunjpura was not a State, nor had the eldest son any preferential right, nor was the property in dispute incapable of partition. On the contrary the succession to it was governed by Muhammadan Law, and it was liable to partition. According to that law the Plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to a four-fifth share of the property in dispute, not a two-third share as stated by the Defendant. Even if Kunjpura were presumed to be a State, a fact which was not admitted by the Plaintiffs, still the property in dispute could not be included in the State and was liable to partition.

On the 30th of November 1904, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and decree, by which he ordered that the claim of the Plaintiffs should be dismissed. He found the second issue in favour of the Defendant and against the Plaintiffs, holding that no property of any kind had ever been partitioned in the family of the parties and that, therefore, with reference to the first issue, no property left by the father of the parties was liable to partition. On the third issue he held that the Plaintiffs had no right, according to the custom of the family, to get the said property partitioned. Having regard to his decisions on the first, second and third issues he considered that there was no need to discuss the fourth and fifth issues and, in the result, he ordered that the claim of the Plaintiffs should be dismissed, and that the parties should bear their own costs.

The Plaintiffs appealed from the decree of the District Judge to the Chief Court of the Punjab. The appeal was heard by Robertson and Lal Chand, JJ., who, on the 21st of December 1906, delivered their judgment. They observed that the question before them for decision was, "In the Kunjpura family does the rule of primogeniture prevail as a custom having the force of law in regard to all or any of the property claimed or is the Muhammadan Law the rule of succession?"

Having considered the evidence at length, they came to the conclusion that the custom set up by the Defendant was made out as regards all property which could be shown to have formed part of the State before 1849. In respect of such property they, in fact, concurred with the finding of the District Judge.

In regard to lands acquired after the year 1849, the learned Judges thought the case was different. In the course of their judgment they said :—

The case now before us, it is urged, is the first case which has occurred since the proclamation of 1849, in which a Nawab has died leaving more than one son, and, it is urged, the resumption of the "Sovereign rights" and the reduction of the Nawab to the position of a private gentleman, completely altered the whole aspect of the case, and destroyed the binding force of the custom, if it had ever existed.

There does not appear to us to be sufficient reason to hold that the family custom, which we hold to have been established before 1849, was abrogated by the proclamation so far as concerns the property which was then the property of the State. We know that this could not have been in accordance with the policy of the supreme Government, and we know that in 1849, when the Nawab, Ghulam Ali Khan, died, after the issue of the proclamation his son was allowed to succeed to the title of Nawab and was invested with a robe of State (letter 219, dated 4-2-1800, from the Punjab Board of Administration to Commissioner and Superintendent, Cis-Sutlej States).

The supreme Government undoubtedly took away certain powers and privileges; it had done something in this direction in 1837, on which occasion it took away the rights of the Nawab to levy dues, and it at once upon that occasion allotted compensation for the resumption, which is still paid. We are not to assume any intention on the part of the paramount power to interfere further than was necessary for the carrying-out of this purpose, which was to provide for the good government of the State, and there is not only no indication that there was any interference with family custom, but every indication to the contrary. We find in the case of Muhammad Afsal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (1) that these principles received full assent of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In that case the vicissitudes undergone by the Nawabs of Tonk had been even greater than in the case of the Kunjpura family, and the land there in dispute had been actually for years out of the possession of the Nawab's family and had been re-granted by Government. The case for the existence of a precisely similar custom set up by the Nawab of Tonk was not nearly so strong as it is in regard to the Kunjpura family.

We think, therefore, that the custom set up by the Defendant Nawab is made out as regards all property which can be shown to have formed part of the State before 1849. But as regards lands subsequently acquired we think the case is different. The custom owed its rise and raison d'être to the existence of the State and the exigencies of chiefship. A family custom, respected by the authorities and fully established as accompanying the chiefship, must be held to obtain as regards the estates of the chiefship as such. But when the chiefship ceased as an independent entity it was not only privileges but duties and liabilities also which were abrogated, and we do not think that lands and property acquired by the Nawab after 1849, with income, which he was admittedly competent to deal with as he pleased, can be held to be subject to the same rule of succession now as the land which once appertained to the chief as chief. And here also we can obtain valuable guidance from the case of Muhammad Afsal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (1) quoted above and known as the Tonk case, decided by a Division Bench of this Court on 3rd January 1898, and by their Lordships of the Privy Council on 15th May 1903.

It appears from the judgment of this Court, Muhammad Afsal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (1), that there was a large amount of property in general of over 32,000 kanals—4,000 acres, which the Nawab did not even claim to be subject to the special custom of primogeniture set up, although it had been acquired by the Nawabs, and there was also certain other property of small area which was claimed, but to which the rule of primogeniture was held not to apply. We would apply the same principle here, and we shall uphold the decision of the Lower Court and dismiss the claim as regards all the lands which were owned by the State as a State before 1849, and which we hold includes all the lands then in the Nawab's possession and so entered in the Settlement Records of 1852, and we shall decree their share to the Plaintiffs of the remaining lands, holding that as regards those the personal law of the parties, that is the Muhammadan Law, must apply, as it is clear that no other custom has been shown to govern succession in the family."

A decree was accordingly made from which both parties appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellant.—Both the lower Courts have found that the riyasat or estate is impartible and that it descends by the rule of primogeniture. Ever since the riyasat came into existence the younger male members of the family received maintenance. And when some members did set up claims for inheritance the claim was dismissed. There is a concurrent finding of the Courts below that the original estate as well as the accretions thereto devolved by the rule of primogeniture and that the succession was never governed by the Mahomedan Law. The effect of confiscation and re-grant was considered in Sundaralingasawmi Kamara Naik v. Ramasawmi Kamara Naik (2), Ram Nundun Singh v. Janki Koor (3). In the absence of evidence settlement must be presumed to have been made on the basis of the original status of the estate and that the law of succession previously applicable continued as before, Beer Pertab v. Rajender Pertab (4). The case of Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (1) is not applicable to the facts of this case. These properties were held under a totally independent title. Here they were purchased from the income and formed part and parcel of the original estate.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary accretions go with the estate and belong to the impartible zemindari. Lakshmipathi v. Kandasami (5), Sarabjit Partap Bahadur v. Indarjit Partap Bahadur (6), Thakur Isri Singh v. Baldeo Singh (7). There could be no difference in principle between the law regulating the succession to property owned before 1849, and that acquired after 1849. The fact that quasi-sovereign rights were taken away by the Government would not change the status of the riasat or the law of succession applicable thereto. Kachi Kaliyana v. Kachi Yuva (8).

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. O'Gorman for the Respondents.—We claim partition of the zemindari and personal properties, and not of the jagir lands.

(8) L. R. 32 I. A. 261, 265, 268 (1905).

The succession to the former is regulated by the Mahomedan Law, and not by the rule of primogeniture. In fact Mr. Lawrence did so decide in 1852, and that decision is now binding. In those days there were no law Courts and the Board of Revenue of which Mr. Lawrence was a member was the final authority. The original sanad related to jagir only. In the absence of clear proof that zemindari was not governed by the personal law the ordinary Mahomedan Law applied. It was not a case of concurrent finding of facts. It was a question of law. No custom that accretions go with the estate by the rule of primogeniture was proved. The case in Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (1) applied. After 1849 the riasat ceased to exist. It continued only in name. Its status and incidents were altered. The properties acquired by the Nawab were like those acquired by an ordinary citizen, and succession thereto was governed by the ordinary Mahomedan Law as modified by some proved usage or custom.

Mr. L. De Gruyther, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The sole question for determination involved in these two appeals relates to the rules of succession applicable to the Kunjpura State lying in what are called the Cis-Sutlej Districts of the Punjab.

The Kunjpura riasat lies about 100 miles to the north of Delhi, in the District of Karnal, and was founded in the first half of the 18th century by an Afghan soldier of fortune of the name of Najabat Khan, who, like many other adventurers, native and foreign, had taken advantage of the troublous times when the whole fabric of the Mogul Empire had fallen to pieces to carve out a small principality for himself. In 1748 he obtained a sanad from the Afghan conqueror Ahmed Shah Abdali, also called Durani, then in the height of his power in northern India, granting him a hereditary "jagir" of the villages, 149 in number, of which he was in possession at the time. The villages were declared to be inam, or revenue-free, and he was to enjoy thenceforth the revenue payable to the Imperial Government, subject to the obligation of maintaining order in his ilaga or possessions.

It is not disputed that the chiefship has from the time of Najabat descended in the male line to a single heir, and that heir has been invariably the eldest son, save in one instance, where the deceased rais left no issue, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving brother.

Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, the seventh in descent from Najabat Khan, succeeded to the chiefship in the year 1849. He died in 1886, leaving several sons, three of whom only are now surviving, vis., the Defendant Ibrahim Ali Khan, the eldest, and the two Plaintiffs, Respondents in the first appeal.

He left also three daughters, but both parties are agreed that by the custom of the family they receive no share in his inheritance.

The Defendant was a minor at the time of his father's death, and during his minority the Court of Wards managed the estate. In 1900 he attained majority and assumed charge of the properties.

The Plaintiffs claim that under the Mahomedan Law, which they allege governs the succession in their family, they are entitled to shares in the Kunjpura Estate, and they brought this suit against the Defendant in the Court of the District Judge of Karnal for partition, possession, and "rendition of accounts."

The Defendant contested the action on the allegation that the Estate of Kunjpura was an impartible riyat or principality which had been recognised as such by the sovereign power, and which had descended under the custom governing the family by the rule of primogeniture, and that the younger male members had no title beyond a claim to reasonable maintenance.

It will be noticed that both parties allege the existence of a custom at variance with the Mahomedan Law with regard to succession in their family; the Plaintiffs restrict it to the exclusion of females from inheritance, whilst the Defendant asserts that it extends to the younger male members.

The District Judge found in favour of the custom alleged by the Defendant, and dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned Judges of the Chief Court have affirmed the view of the District Judge in respect of all property that appertained to the riyat prior to 1849, holding that the custom set up by the Defendant, which they found established, clearly applied to it. But they were of opinion that as in that year the Government withdrew from the chiefs of Kunjpura the quasi-sovereign powers they had hitherto exercised, "the chiefship ceased as an independent entity," and consequently lands and property acquired by the Nawab after 1849 were not subject to the same rule of succession as was applicable to lands which once appertained to the chief as chief."

In this view they decreed the Plaintiffs' claim in respect of their shares under the Mahomedan Law in the latter properties.

Both parties have appealed from the decree of the Chief Court. The Defendant contends that the learned Judges are in error in drawing a distinction between the properties held before and those acquired after 1849, and that the custom, the existence of which has been found by both the Courts in India, applies to all property. The Plaintiffs on the other hand urge that the custom alleged by the Defendant, on whom the onus lay, has not been established; that in any event the effect of the withdrawal in 1849 from the chiefs of all civil and criminal powers was to reduce their status to that of private citizens, subject to their ordinary personal law. That, in substance, represents the contentions of the parties before this Board.

The Chief Court has traced the history of the Kunjpura family with much care and discrimination. Their Lordships do not, therefore, propose to discuss the evidence at any length, for they find it established beyond doubt that the Estate of Kunjpura has, ever since the time of Najabat, descended to a single heir, who has been recognised as the chief of an impartible riasat, which is the Arabic or Mussulman synonym of the Hindu word raj; and that attempts by junior members of the family to obtain shares in the riasat properties have invariably failed. The two instances on which the Plaintiffs rely as showing allotment of shares to junior cadets of the family appear to their Lordships to be clearly opposed to their contention. The first is the case of Karam Sher, the second brother of Gulsher Khan, third in descent from Najabat, who obtained under circumstances that cannot be ascertained at this distance of time, several villages which were separated from the jagir, and are still held by his descendants. There is nothing, however, to show that the villages Karam Sher received bore any relation to the share he would have been entitled to on partition under the Mahomedan Law. Nor does it appear or is even alleged that Gulsher Khan's brothers other than Karam Sher obtained any share of the family properties. In 1851, whilst the Dastur-ul-amal or settlement records of these villages were in course of preparation, Nizam Ali Khan, the son of Karam Sher, applied to have his name entered as jagirdar of the villages in question. His application was resisted by Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, who was then the rais of Kunjpura, on the ground that the villages held by the applicant had been given to him for maintenance, and that they should revert to the chief on his (the applicant's) death without male issue. The Commissioner of the Cis-Sullej States, within whose jurisdiction Kunjpura lay, after recording the Nawab's objection, made the following recommendation to Government:—

"I think that all the villages and land possessed by the younger branches of the family should be held and recorded to be component parts of the chief's integral estate, that while the present incumbents or any of their descendants are living the chief be altogether debarred from disturbing or interfering with their possession, and that, on failure of issue in any branch, the lands composing the maintenance (guzarah) of that branch revert to the chief's integral estate, in place of lapsing to the Government, as they would do, were they severed from that estate. The Dastur-ul-amal would thus be drawn in the name of the Nawab Rais (the chief)."

The Commissioner's view was accepted and affirmed by Government on the 31st October 1851, and the final order was passed by him on the 17th November following. It is clear, therefore, that neither the Government nor the chief ever recognised that the villages received by Karam Sher were in lieu of his share by right of inheritance under the Mahomedan Law. On the other hand it was alleged on the first opportunity that offered itself that the villages had been granted to Karam Sher and his male descendants for maintenance, and that they were to revert to the riyasat on the extinction of his male line, and this contention was accepted and affirmed by the Government.

The other instance is that of Ghulam Muhay-ud-din Khan. Gulsher died in 1804, leaving several sons, of whom the eldest, Rahmat Khan, succeeded to the riyasat. Quarrels then broke out between him and his second brother, Ghulam Muhay-ud-din, about the latter's claim for maintenance, which at last became so violent that the British authorities, who had in the year 1806 assumed charge of the Cis-Sutlej districts, were compelled to interfere. The dispute between Rahmat Khan and Ghulam Muhay-ud-din was referred to the arbitration of the Resident at Delhi, Mr. Metcalfe (afterwards Sir Theophilus Metcalfe) and Mr. Fraser. As a result of the arbitration Ghulam Muhay-ud-din obtained a number of villages yielding a considerable income. Upon the evidence their Lordships have no hesitation in agreeing with the Chief Court that he received them in lieu of maintenance. In fact some years later, when a younger brother applied for maintenance out of the properties in the possession of Rahmat Khan and Ghulam Muhay-ud-din respectively, the latter objected to his being made liable on the ground that he himself had obtained for maintenance the villages held by him, and he was accordingly exempted from the obligation of contributing towards the younger brother's maintenance.

Ghulam Muhay-ud-din died in 1841, and a claim was put forward on behalf of his minor son, Muhammad Yar Khan, to the possession of all the villages that had been held by him. But a part only was assigned to Muhammad Yar Khan for his maintenance, whilst the rest reverted to the chiefship.

As already observed, these two cases, far from supporting the Plaintiffs' allegation, appear to their Lordships to be quite opposed to it. No other evidence has been referred to to suggest that there has ever been a division of the Estate in accordance with the rules of the Mahomedan Law since the time of Najabat Khan. It was, however, contended, on behalf of the Plaintiffs that although the jagiri may be impartible and descendible by the rule of primogeniture, the zemindari rights in the villages comprised in the jagiri cannot be so treated in the absence of clear evidence of custom applicable to them. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the dictum of Mr. Lawrence (afterwards Lord Lawrence) pronounced in 1852 in a case which had come before him as a member of the Board of Administration. Janbaz Khan and Shahbaz Khan, two younger sons of Rahmat Khan, had preferred a claim for shares in the zemindari rights in one of the villages appertaining to the Kunj-pura Estate. Their application was dismissed by the Commissioner. On appeal to the Board Mr. Lawrence expressed himself as of opinion :—

"That zemindari rights did not belong to the State, that, like other moveable or immovable property, it should be given by right of inheritance according to Muhammadan law, and that all the descendants of Nawab Rahmat Khan, who had acquired this semindari, had rights in it."

The other members appear to have concurred in this view. But the final decision was made dependent on the determination of the question whether Janbaz and Shahbaz had ever been in possession of the shares which they claimed should be recorded in their names. They were found, however, never to have been in possession, and their claim was finally dismissed.

The opinion of Mr. Lawrence, however deserving of respect, affords, therefore, little assistance in deciding the question whether the semindari rights are subject to a different rule of succession from the jagir. The opinion was, in the result, ineffective, and seems never to have been accepted or acted upon in the course of the constant claims the junior members of the family have put forward to a share in the Estate. The decisions in the later cases lay down in explicit terms that the semindari rights belong to the riyasat. Similarly, it is recorded in the Wajib ul ams that "the entire biswadari, semindari, and jagirdari rights are possessed by the Nawab." Any other conclusion would not only be inconsistent with the policy which the Government has maintained for nearly a century towards these riyasats, but in the end would prove positively destructive to the chiefships.

It remains, however, to consider whether the view taken by the Chief Court with regard to the rule of succession to acquisitions made by the chiefs after 1849 is well-founded. After holding that the custom set up by the Defendant Nawab is made out as regards all property which can be shown to have formed part of the State before 1849, the learned Judges proceed to say :—

"As regards lands subsequently acquired we think the case is different. The custom owed its rise and raison d'être to the existence of the State and the exigencies of chiefship. A family custom, respected by the authorities and fully established as accompanying the chiefship, must be held to obtain as regards the estates of the chiefship as such. But when the chiefship ceased as an independent entity, it was not only privileges but duties and liabilities also which were abrogated, and we do not think that lands and property acquired by the Nawab after 1849 with income, which he was admittedly competent to deal with as he pleased, can be held to be subject to the same rule of succession now as the land which once appertained to the chief as chief."

Their Lordships regret to be unable to follow the reasoning on which the view expressed by the learned Judges proceeds, or assent to the conclusion at which they have arrived. There is nothing to show that the Government in withdrawing the civil and criminal powers the chiefs had hitherto exercised, intended to make any alteration in their status or to vary the rule which had governed the succession to the Kunjpura Estate. The withdrawal of those powers was no doubt due to the needs of administration, but that circumstance cannot affect the custom under which the entire Estate descended by the rule of primogeniture to a single male heir.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal of the Defendant Ibrahim should be decreed and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed. They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to discharge the decree of the Chief Court, and to restore that of the District Judge, dismissing the Plaintiffs' suit.

The Plaintiffs will pay the costs of these appeals.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 144—Landlord and tenant—Encroachment by tenant—Adverse possession of encroached land as tenant, if creates title—Landlord's right to recover possession when barred—Interest acquired by tenant.

While a tenant is bound to treat that which is an encroachment on his landlord's land as held by him under his landlord the landlord is not bound to treat the land on which his tenant encroaches as held under a tenancy. But the landlord's right to recover possession of the land encroached upon may be lost by the tenant having adversely to the landlord asserted his title as tenant to the land for more than twelve years.

Under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, there may be adverse possession not only of immoveable property but of any interest therein, and a tenant may claim to have been in adverse possession for 12 years of a limited interest in encroached land, viz., a tenancy commensurate with that in the admitted lease between the parties.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 16th of April 1910 against a decree of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, dated the 21st of March 1910, passed in second appeal No. 480 of 1908, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu B. B. Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Manbhum, dated the 12th of December 1907, affirming that of Babu Khagendra Nath Bose, Munsif of Purulia, dated the 25th of March 1907.

The JUDGMENT OF D. CHATTERJEE, J., which states all the material facts, was as follows :—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The Defendant encroached upon the lands of his landlord and claimed that these lands were within his tenure. Hence the landlord brings a suit for ejectment and the claim of the lands being included in his tenure having failed the Defendant pleads that he has been in possession of these lands now found to be an encroachment upon the neighbouring lands of the landlord for more than 12 years and whatever may be the rights of the landlord as regards additional rent he is not entitled to evict him—his claim for eviction being barred by the limitation under Art. 142 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act. He relies on the case of Ishan Chandra Mitra v. Ram Ranjan Chakraverty (1), in which it was laid down that in the case of such encroachments the article of the Limitation Act applicable was Art. 142 and not 144 and the Plaintiff must shew possession within 12 years. That case is also an authority for the proposition that there can be dispossession in respect of a limited interest. The case of Ichharam Singh v. Nilmoney Bahida (2) does not qualify the previous decision in Ishan Chandra Mitra v. Ram Ranjan Chakraverty (1). It has been contended, however, that dispossession must be to the knowledge of the landlord, for otherwise it could not be adverse to him [Huli Ahmed Chowdhry v. Tota Meah (3)], and it is virtually found in this case that the Plaintiffs who are absentee landlords had no knowledge of the Defendants' possession until within 12 years. It is contended, however, that this is a case of dispossession. The Plaintiffs plead dispossession in 1311 and if it is proved that the Plaintiff was dispossessed more than 12 years before suit the Plaintiff's suit for ejectment is barred under Art. 142. It is contended that the element of knowledge enters both into Arts. 142 and 144, and the Defendant's possession cannot avail unless he shows he had possession with the knowledge of the Plaintiff which is found against him in this case. The Appellant answers, however, that the subject of dispute being capable of actual possession by enjoyment of profit, knowledge if necessary must be inferred as soon as it is shown that another person is enjoying that which the Plaintiff ought to have had for enjoyment. Art. 142 seems to require that the Plaintiff should prove possession within 12 years of the suit whether then the acts of the Defendant which amount to dispossession came to his knowledge recently or long ago.

The lower Appellate Court has tried the case on the basis of its being governed by Art. 144 and does not seem to have come to any clear finding as to whether the Defendant was in possession for more than 12 years under a claim of title to hold the disputed lands as part of his tenancy and the case must go back for a finding upon that point. If he finds like the first Court that the Defendant has been in actual possession for more than 12 years claiming the lands as included in his tenure the Plaintiff's suit for eviction and damages must fail.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is therefore set aside and the case sent back for a decision in view of the above observations.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal to the Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, who set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and sent back the case for decision in the light of the observations contained in his judgment.

The suit is one for khas possession of lands, and the lands in respect of which this relief is sought have been treated as so situate and circumstanced as to come within the doctrine of encroachment; and, without questioning the propriety of this view, I assume that this is a case in which that doctrine would properly apply. The Defendant undoubtedly is a tenant of the Plaintiff in respect of the other property, and the question is whether the Plaintiff, the landlord, can recover khas possession of the land in suit which was not included originally in the lease but is now treated as the subject of an encroachment by the Defendant as a tenant of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff's claim was upheld in both the lower Courts, on the ground that the Defendant was not entitled to assert his position as a tenant of the Plaintiff. Mr. Justice Chatterjee dissented from this view. He thought that the facts were such that it might be a reasonable view that the Defendant had, by virtue of the Statute of limitation, acquired a right which entitled him to claim to hold the land as a tenant of the Plaintiff, and so entitled him to resist the claim for khas possession. The law as to encroachments is well-settled; while a tenant is bound to treat that which is an encroachment, as held by him under his landlord, the landlord is not bound to treat the land on which his tenant encroaches as held under a tenancy. Therefore, it may be that in appropriate circumstances a landlord can recover against his tenant the land on which the tenant has encroached. There is a limit to that right, for if the tenant has been in possession of the land for that which for brevity I may call the statutory period, and the landlord repudiates the encroachment, it becomes a question whether or not the tenant has gained an interest that would be a bar to his landlord's claim for possession. In this case there is a finding of the first Court, though not of the lower Appellate Court, that the Defendant has been in possession of the land in question for a period of twelve years and upwards. That period of possession complies with one of the conditions necessary to establish a right by adverse possession. The other condition is that the possession should be adverse. What is asserted by the Defendant is not that he has acquired by adverse possession an absolute interest, but only a tenancy right in the property. As I read the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, it has failed to consider whether, though the Defendant may not have asserted an absolute title to the property he did not assert a title to the property as a tenant. Under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, there may be adverse possession not only of immoveable property but of any interest therein, and it appears to me that it may properly be contended that in the circumstances of this case there was an adverse possession of the limited interest which the Defendant claims, that is to say, a tenancy commensurate with that in the admitted lease between the parties. That, as I have said, is an aspect of the case which has not been investigated, and I think it should be.

The result then is that we agree with the decree passed by Mr. Justice Chatterjee and we must dismiss this appeal with costs.

N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 3135 OF 1909.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.	BINDAE DASYA
N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.	CHUTIANI, Plaintiff,
1912,	Appellant,
Heard, 14, February.	v.
Judgment, 4, March.	CHOTA, Defendant,
	Respondent.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 25, cl. (3)—Debt barred, promise to pay—Conditional promise—Suit to recover debt if lies.

Acknowledgment of a barred debt cannot give a fresh start to limitation in favour of the creditor.

Under cl. (3) of sec. 25 of the Contract Act a barred debt is considered a good consideration for a promise to pay, the new promise furnishing the measure of the creditor's right; the whole of the promise whether free or clogged with a condition gives the cause of action.

Where A. and B. entered into an agreement of partnership wherein it was inter alia provided that 6 as. out of the profits of the business in the share of A. would go toward liquidating a previous debt of Rs. 600 due by A. to B., which had become time-barred at the date of the agreement.

Held—That B. could not recover the debt except in the manner provided in the agreement.

BINDAE DASYA CHUTIANI v. CHOTA.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of December 1909 against a decree of Mr. S. N. Mackenzie, Subordinate Judge of Nowgong, dated the 15th of September 1909, confirming a decree of Babu A. S. Guha, Munsif of Nowgong, dated the 7th of July 1909.

The Appellant who was the Plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arose, was the mistress of Sonaram Rajkhowa, deceased, the father of the minor Defendant Chota, the Respondent in this appeal. She alleged in her plaint that she had made a loan of Rs. 600 to Sonaram, and that Sonaram being unable to pay up the loan, on the 7th October 1904, executed a bond in the following terms:—
To

Srimati Bindu Dasya.

I, Sonaram Rajkhowa, son of Ghinloga Rajkhowa, deceased, inhabitant of Hoibargaon, Mouzah Town, Thana Suddar, District Nowgong, do execute this ekrarnama (letter of admission) and state that I retained the abovenamed Bindu Dasya as my wife, that I got an advance of Rs. 600 (six hundred rupees, in cash from her for my private use without the execution of any document under private arrangement, and that subsequently she having demanded payment of that amount, I was unable to meet her demand; I therefore hereby promise, being unable to satisfy her said debt, and decide to lend to her the use of, my trained dhari (big) elephant measuring 5 cubits, named Joymala, for capturing wild elephants by shikar and make her a partner. I hereby declare in writing that of the amount to be realised from sale of wild elephants to be captured with the help of the said trained elephant of mine, she 'you bearing all other expenses required for the purpose and the royalty and mehaldari dues being deducted from the sale proceeds, 8 anna share of the balance will be received by you on account of your contribution (of the incidental expenses, while I will be entitled to the remaining 8 anna share on account of my elephant; but out of this, 8 anna share to be paid to me on account of my kunki or capturing elephant, 6 anna share will be received by you in satisfaction of the amount (of debt) paid in advance to me by endorsing the payment on the back of the bond and the remaining 2 anna will be received by me. I can have no objection to this arrangement. To the above effect I execute this ekrarnama of my own accord. The 7th October 1904, corresponding to the 21st Assin 1311 B. S.

1. The said elephant may be kept engaged in shikar from this day till the 30th day of April 1905.

She sued to recover the said loan of Rs. 600 with costs of the suit basing her cause of action on the said bond.

The written statement in defence, raised inter alia the plea that "the Plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. According to the allegations made in the plaint the Plaintiff's cause of action has not yet arisen."

The Munsif held that the amount of Rs. 600 was not borrowed on the date of the bond and there was no evidence to show that it was borrowed within the period of limitation from the date of the bond, and thus the Plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of sec. 19, Limitation Act. He was further of opinion that sec. 25 (3) of the Contract Act did not apply, as there was no unconditional promise in the bond to pay the old debt. The bond only showed the manner in which the original debt was to be discharged. If there was no profit in the elephant shikar business opened between Sonaram and Bindu, the old debt could not be paid. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

The decision was affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

The Plaintiff then preferred this second appeal.

Babu Hem Chandra Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Girija Prasanno Ray Chowdhury for the Respondent.

BINDAE DASIA CHUTIANI v. CHOTA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This suit was brought on the 4th of October 1907 on an alleged bond of the 7th of October 1904. The document however is not a bond but an agreement of partnership for the capture of elephants and incidentally mentions a debt of Rs. 600 previously taken from the Plaintiff and provides that 6 annas of the profits of the business in the share of the executant would go towards the liquidation of the debt of Rs. 600. The Defendant who is the heir of the executant of the bond pleads limitation and want of cause of action and the lower Courts have upheld the plea. It is contended in second appeal before us that the Courts below are wrong, firstly, in the construction of the agreement and, secondly, in holding that the document does not repel the bar of limitation.

The document undoubtedly contains an acknowledgment of the debt and if it could be shown that it was made while the debt was yet alive the provisions of sec. 19 of the Limitation Act would repel the statute. The Plaintiff has however failed to prove that and the suit must fail unless the document is such as to attract the provisions of sec. 25, cl. 3 of the Contract Act. That section provides that an agreement made without consideration is void unless (3) it is a promise made in writing * * * to pay wholly or in part a barred debt. The effect of the section is that the old debt is not revived but it is considered to be a good consideration for the promise to pay and this new promise is the measure of the creditor's right. This promise may be absolute or conditional. If it is absolute, if there is no "but" or "if," it will support a suit without anything else : if it is conditional the condition must be performed before a suit upon it can be decreed. This is the English Law on the point : See Leake on Contracts, 6th Ed., 723-724. Philips v. Philips (1), Chasemore v. Turner (2). This rule has been followed in India before the passing of the Contract Act. See Tilakchand v. Jitmal (3), (Westropp, C. J. and West, J.) and also after the passing of the Contract Act : See Watson v. Yates (4), Sargent, C. J., and Farran, J. And we cannot say this is inconsistent with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience according to which we have to administer the law. As the debt is ex-hypothesi barred and the creditor cannot insist upon its being paid, the debtor who is inclined to be honest, must be allowed to impose his own terms if any. He may agree to pay instalment or by some special arrangement or on the happening of a contingency. The whole of the promise whether free or clogged with a condition gives the cause of action. If he says "I will pay when I can" the creditor must prove his ability to pay : See Zanner v. Smart (5), Watson v. Yates (4). If he says "I will pay by a set-off or some special arrangement" the creditor can realise his dues in no other way : See Routledge v. Ramsay (6), Cripps v. Davis (7), Goate v. Goate (8), Francis v. Hankesley (9). In the present case the debtor promised to pay by a share of the profit of the elephant business and the Plaintiffs cannot recover in any other way.

Estates Partition Act (V of 1897, B. C.), secs. 25, 119—Civil suit for declaration of tenancy right where Collector decides against it in partition proceedings—Maintainability—Defect of parties, objection when must be taken.

Where in the course of partition proceedings before the Collector the Defendants set up a claim that they were tenants in respect of that land to which the Plaintiffs who were some of the joint proprietors objected and the objection was overruled by the Collector, Held—That a suit by the Plaintiffs for a declaration that there was no tenancy right of the Defendants was not barred.

Where an objection on the ground of defect of parties was not taken in the Court of first instance though there was an opportunity to take it it was not open to the Defendants to take it at the appellate stage.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of January 1909 against the decree of Mr. H. E. Rawson, District Judge of Zillah Durbhanga, dated the 26th of November 1908, reversing the decree of Moulvi Abdul Jubbar, Munsif at Durbhanga, dated the 30th April 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Dutt for the Appellants.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against a decree of dismissal in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for confirmation of possession. The Plaintiffs and the second party Defendants are the joint owners of an estate which is now in course of partition under the provisions of the Estates Partition Act of 1897. In the partition proceedings the first Defendant put forward a claim that he was the tenant in respect of a particular parcel of land. The Plaintiffs repudiated that position but their objection was overruled by the Revenue authorities. They thereupon commenced this action for declaration that the first Defendant was not a tenant in respect of those lands and that he had as a matter of fact been set up fraudulently by the second party Defendants. The Court of first instance went into the merits and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs. Upon appeal two objections appear to have been urged on behalf of the Defendants; namely, first, that the suit had not been properly constituted, because the son of one of the Plaintiffs had not been joined as a party and, secondly, that the suit was barred under the provisions of sec. 25 of the Bengal Estates Partition Act. In respect of the first objection, the learned Judge held that it was well-founded but that the suit ought not to be dismissed on that ground; he stated in fact that if the suit had not been open to any other objection, he would have remanded the case for retrial. But in so far as the second objection was concerned, the learned Judge allowed it to prevail and dismissed the suit as not maintainable.

The Plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the view taken by the learned Judge upon both these matters has been called in question. We are of opinion that his conclusions cannot be supported.

In so far as the question of defect of parties is concerned it is clear that this specific objection was not taken in the Court of first instance. One of the Plaintiffs went into the witness-box and from his examination it transpired that he had a son who was jointly interested in the subject-matter of the litigation but had not been brought before the Court. It was therefore open to the Defendants to take exception to the frame of the suit. They did not do so but allowed the suit to proceed as properly constituted. It was therefore not open to them at the appellate stage to take a technical objection of this character. It is further clear that it is needless to send back the case to the original Court for retrial, as the father may well be deemed to represent all the members of the family. In any event it is open to the Court to decide the questions in controversy under r. 9 of Or. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, in so far as the parties before the Court are concerned.

With regard to the second point it has been contended on behalf of the Appellants that the suit is not barred under the provisions of sec. 25 of the Estates Partition Act of 1897. This argument has not been seriously controverted on behalf of the Respondent and, in our opinion, there is no answer to the contention of the Appellant. Sec. 25 provides that no suit instituted in a Civil Court after the lapse of four months after the Collector has made a direction under cl. (a) or cl. (b) of sec. 23, or recorded a proceeding under sec. 29, by any person claiming right or title in or to a parent estate shall avail to affect or stay the progress of any proceedings which may have been taken under the Act for the partition of the estate. This section obviously has no application to the case before us. In the first place, the Defendant does not claim any right or title in or to the parent estate. He claims the status of a tenant under the proprietors in respect of a specific parcel of land. In the second place the section does not say that a suit of this description does not lie; it merely provides that a suit instituted after four months does not affect or stay proceedings for partition. In the third place neither sec. 23 nor sec. 29 has any application to the facts of this case. It has been argued however by the learned Vakil for the Respondent that the suit is barred because the partition proceedings have not yet been completed and the matter is still under the consideration of the revenue authorities. But there are two obvious answers to this contention. In the first place, so far as the question sought to be raised is concerned, it has been finally disposed of by the revenue authorities. In the second place, sec. 119 of the Estates Partition Act specifies the orders of the revenue authorities which cannot be questioned by a suit in any Civil Court. An order under sec. 45 or 46 is not one of the orders mentioned in sec. 119. The reason for the exclusion is obvious. The determination by the revenue authorities is of a summary character and it cannot be taken to conclude finally a question of title between one of the proprietors and a stranger to the proceeding. The learned Vakil for the Respondent has not disputed that if the decision of the revenue authorities had been adverse to the claimant who set up a tenancy, the latter would have been entitled to maintain a declaratory suit for the establishment of the right alleged by him. The same principle is applicable to the converse case and has been recognised in a series of decisions of this Court amongst which may be mentioned, Bibee Khrobun v. Wooma Charan (1), Kalupnath v. Ramdien (2), Ananda Kishore v. Daije Thakurain (3) and Janoki Nath v. Kali Narain (4). As pointed out in the case of Zahrun v. Gowri Sunkar (5), the true test to be applied in the solution of questions of this description is, whether the parties who seek relief in the Civil Court really intend to get an adjudication which may affect the Government revenue. If the question which is sought to be raised is of this description, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction. It cannot be suggested with any degree of plausibility that the question sought to be raised in this case is of this character.

The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that the appeal may be heard on the merits. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Under sec. 13 of the Court-fees Act we direct that the court-fees paid on the memorandum of appeal to this Court be returned to the Appellant.

It is conceded that the judgment will

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 413—Application to sue in formā pauperis, dismissed—Petition if may be treated as plaint on payment of proper court-fees—Costs of Government, payment of, if condition precedent to action—Dismissal of suit when no demand made for payment, if proper.

Held (without deciding any question of limitation)—That there can be no objection to a petition to sue in formā pauperis, which has not been granted, being registered as the plaint in the suit on the full fees being paid.

Although sec. 413 of the Civil Procedure Code makes it a condition precedent to the institution of a suit in the ordinary way by a person whose application to sue in formā pauperis has been rejected, that he should first pay the costs incurred by the Government in opposing the application, the suit ought not be dismissed for non-payment of such costs when no demand for its payment was made at any time either on behalf of Government or by Court.

The lower Court having dismissed the suit on that ground the Plaintiff on appeal was allowed to pay the amount and the suit was remanded for trial on the merits.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Uma Charan Kar, Subordinate

MRINALINI DEBI v. TINKAURI DEBI.

Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 7th of December 1908.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutt and Tarakeshur Pal Chowdry for the Appellant.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury and Probodh Chandra Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiff, Srimati Mrinalini Dabee, against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Hughly dismissing her suit under the following circumstances:—

On the 30th November 1907 the Plaintiff presented a petition for leave to sue the Defendant, Srimati Tincowri Dabee, in formâ pauperis. This application was refused on the 28th March 1908 on the ground that she was not a pauper and she was ordered to pay the costs of the Defendant and of the Government. The costs of the Government amounted to Rs. 16-4. On 6th May 1908 the Plaintiff applied to the Court for leave to pay the full court-fees. On the 13th May 1908 the Court gave her 3 days in which to pay and on the 16th May 1908 extended the time for another 3 days. The fees for Rs. 325 were paid by the Plaintiff on the 1st May 1908 and on 10th May 1908 it was ordered that the suit be registered and fixed for settlement of issues on 3rd July 1908. On 10th July 1908 the Defendant filed her written statement pleading (among other grounds) that the petition to sue in formâ pauperis could not be stamped as a plaint and that the Plaintiff's suit must be taken to have been filed, at the earliest, on the day when she paid the court-fees and that it was barred by limitation. Nothing was said in the written statement about the payment of the costs to Government of the enquiry into pauperism.

Issues were settled on 21st July 1908. On 5th December 1908 the Subordinate Judge heard arguments on issues 1 and 2 and on the 7th passed the order now under appeal dismissing the Plaintiff's suit. The Plaintiff has appealed and on 15th March 1909 she paid in this Court the Rs. 16-4 due to the Government for the costs above-mentioned. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge was clearly in error in dismissing the suit on either ground. There could be no possible objection to the petition to sue in formâ pauperis being registered as the plaint in the suit on the full fees being paid. This was done by the Court as of course on 19th May 1908 and it would be most unjust more than 6 months later to tell the Plaintiff that she had no plaint on the file after all. It may be pointed out that the same course was adopted apparently without objection in the case of Arbhoya Churn Dry v. Bissesswari (1). The other ground, that she had not paid the costs of the Government in opposing her application for leave to sue as a pauper, is a more substantial one, but after consideration we think that it ought not to prevail. No doubt in terms sec. 413 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, makes it a condition precedent to the institution of a suit in the ordinary way by a person whose application to sue in formâ pauperis has been rejected, that he should first pay the costs incurred by the Government in opposing that application. But it is obvious that some demand should be made upon the would-be Plaintiff for such costs, either by Government or by the Court. It might well be that Government did not desire to press for their costs. The demand if made by the Court could be made either before it registered the plaint in the suit or at some later stage when the matter was brought to its notice. Here the plaint was registered without any such demand. When the matter was brought to the notice of the Court and the issue raised, the Court should have at once called on the Plaintiff to pay those costs. It would certainly not be justified in dismissing the suit on the ground of non-payment unless and until the Plaintiff had neglected or refused to comply with that demand. It would appear from her affidavit filed in this Court on 12th March 1909 that the Plaintiff was ready and willing to pay those costs when the arguments had been heard and before judgment was delivered. However that may be the amount was paid into this Court and we presume is still lying here.

(1) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 889 (1897).

MRINALINI DEBI v. TINKAURI DEBI.

We do not desire to express any opinion on the question of limitation. That may depend on facts as to which we have not the materials at present before us to decide. The question on what precise date—whether on the date the Government's costs were paid into this Court or some earlier date the suit—must be taken to have been instituted, will have to be determined and also the precise date on which the cause of action arose. Then and then only will it be possible to say whether the suit is or is not barred.

We set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and remand the suit to his Court for trial on the merits. The Plaintiff must have her costs of this appeal. Hearing-fee 3 gold mohurs.

Suit remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 9, r. 13, Or. 47, r. 1—Ex parte decree, if may be reviewed on the ground that Defendant had sufficient cause for not appearing—Limitation.

The fact that a Defendant against whom an ex parte decree was passed did not apply within time under Or. 9, r. 13, C. P. C., for a revival of the case is no bar to his applying for a review of the decree under Or. 47, r. 1 of the Code on the ground that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing at the hearing.

RAJ NARAIN PURKAIT v. ANANGA MOHAN BHANDARI (1) relied on.

This was a Rule granted on the 17th of July 1911 against the judgment of Mr. D. H. Kingsford, Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 27th of May 1911, reversing the judgment of Babu Sarat Chandra Pal, Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated the 4th of January 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose (with him Mr. S. K. Sahay) for the Petitioner submitted that the application for review was maintainable, the applicant having only to pay half the court-fees whereas if he had applied under Or. 9, r. 13, he would have been spared this expense. *Haripur v. which explains Koilash Mondol v. Nabadwip Chandra (3). Neither of the lower Courts has decided my application on the merits. It has been dismissed on a preliminary point but erroneously. There ought to be a trial on the merits.

Mr. I. B. Sen (with him Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra) for the Opposite Party relied on Koilash Mondol v. Nabadwip Chandra (3), and urged that the Defendant's deserved no indulgence. They never paid the adjournment costs which they were on each occasion ordered to pay before the next hearing.

[COX, J.—But the application has not been heard on the merits. Was evidence taken on the application?]

Yes.

[The evidence was read.]

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The case out of which the Rule arises was instituted so far back as the 25th June 1908. It was at one time dismissed for default; but was again revived, and after innumerable applications for adjournments it was finally decreed ex parte on the Defendant's failing to appear on the 18th May 1910. Early in July the Defendants applied under Or. 47, r. 1 to have the case revived on the ground that their pleader had been prevented from appearing on the day of hearing. This application dragged on until the present year and was finally granted by the Subordinate Judge without giving any reasons for his decision.

The case then went on appeal before the Judicial Commissioner and he held that the Subordinate Judge could not have dealt with the matter under Or. 47, r. 1, inasmuch as it came properly within the scope of Or. 9, r. 13, and was accordingly barred by limitation. It appears to have been argued before him that the Appellants in his Court were not entitled to take this plea inasmuch as they had consented to the revival of the case; but this contention was not accepted by the learned Judicial Commissioner and he accordingly held that the order of the Subordinate Judge was wrong, set it aside and directed that the case should be dismissed.

The Defendants obtained a Rule from this Court to show cause why that order should not be set aside or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court might seem fit. The view of the learned Judicial Commissioner that the Subordinate Judge could not deal with this matter under Or. 47, r. 1 does not appear to be in accordance with the decision in the case of Raj Narain Purkait v. Ananga Mohan Bhandari (1), and cannot be sustained. The point which really arises for decision in this case is whether the Defendants were or were not prevented from appearing on the day fixed for the hearing of the case. This point has not been considered or decided by either of the Courts below. We have not thought it necessary to send back the case inasmuch as there is but little evidence on the point and we have been able to consider it. On reading that evidence we think that the Subordinate Judge acted with undue haste in finally disposing of the case, and therefore the case ought on certain conditions to be reheard. We would however invite the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge to the extreme delay that has occurred in disposing of this case and express our hope that the trial may be conducted more expeditiously in future. In particular when the Subordinate Judge directs the payment of costs as a condition precedent to proceeding with the suit, it is not sufficient for him to order the payment, but he should see that the money is paid before he proceeds further. For instance in the present case he directed payment of Rs. 40 to the Plaintiff, apparently as a condition precedent to reviving the case, but in the end he appears to have revived the case without ever attempting to see whether that order had been complied with. We think therefore that the proper order to pass will be that on the present Petitioner's depositing in Court the sum of Rs. 40 which they were ordered to pay by the Subordinate Judge within one week from the arrival of the records in the Court of first instance the case shall be reheard.

If the money is not paid within this period, this Rule will stand discharged with costs. If the money is paid in time the costs in this Court, which we assess at two gold mohurs, will abide the result.

Rule made absolute.

1912,		v.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195, cls. (6) and (7)—Order of Munsif refusing sanction—Revocation by Subordinate Judge, if legal—Appeal to District Judge, transferred to Subordinate Judge—Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), secs. 21, 22.

A Subordinate Judge cannot grant or revoke a sanction to prosecute refused or granted by a Munsif.

This was a Rule granted on the 20th of September 1911 against an order of Babu Behary Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 22nd of July 1911, reversing an order of Babu A. Roy, Munsif of Pingna, dated the 21st of April 1911, and sanctioning the prosecution of the Petitioners under secs. 463 and 471, I. P. C.

This Rule arose out of an application by the Opposite Party under sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for sanction to prosecute the Petitioners (5 in number) under secs. 463 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The Opposite Party were sued on a bond, dated the 26th Falgun 1303, B. S., by the Petitioner No. 1. The Petitioner No. 2 was an attesting witness to the bond and the Petitioners Nos. 3, 4 and 5 were witnesses to certain endorsements of payments on the back of the bond. These endorsements purported to save the claim under the bond from being barred by limitation. The suit was dismissed by the original Court as also by the Court of Appeal and the present application was put in by the Opposite Party. The Munsif dismissed the application, observing as follows:—"Now for offences described in secs. 463 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code, it must be shewn that the bond as well as the endorsements were false. I have carefully gone through the judgments both of this Court and of the Court of Appeal but do not find the judgments laying down anywhere that the bonds and the endorsements thereupon are absolutely false. Certain circumstances culled from the evidence on the record of the suit have been pointed out and certain discrepancies in the statements of the witnesses examined by the Plaintiff have been noted as tending to shew that no reliance can be placed upon the genuineness of the bond and the truth of the alleged payments. It was in this view of the evidence that the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed. There does not seem to be any motive on the part of the Plaintiff so as to induce him to fabricate a false bond against the Defendants and the suit was dismissed as the evidence fell short of the prescribed mark. The petition seems to be frivolous. The application for sanction is rejected. No order as to costs."

The Opposite Party appealed to the District Judge who transferred the matter for hearing to the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge reversed the Munsif's order and granted the sanction prayed for, whereupon the present Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty (with Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarty) submitted (i) that the facts do not justify sanction, (ii) that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to grant sanction inasmuch as his Court was not the Court to which an appeal from a decision of the Munsif does ordinarily lie; it is to the Court of the District Judge to which an appeal from a decision of the Munsif ordinarily lies, sec. 195 (7), Cr. P. Code, and sec. 21, cl. (2), Civil Courts Act.

Babu Akhil Bandhu Guha in reply.—Application was under sec. 115, C. P. Code, not under sec. 195 or 439, Cr. P. Code. High Court would not interfere unless there was a question of jurisdiction. The High Court has no power to interfere under sec. 195 (6) as no second appeal is contemplated by the section, Joy Narain v. Upendra Narain (8), Sew Bollok Singh

(8) 13 C. L. J. 216 (1903).

v. Ramdhin Bania (9), Ram Proshad v. Raghubar (7), Kali Prosad v. Bhuban Mohini (10), Hamijuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4), Salig Ram v. Ramji Ram (11), Mahomed Bhakku v. Queen-Empress (12), In re Chennanagoud (13) and In the matter of Bhup Kunwar (14). As to Subordinate Judge's jurisdiction, all appeals from the decision of the Munsif must be preferred to the District Judge but the District Judge has power under sec. 24, C. P. Code, on his own motion, to transfer any suit, appeal or other proceedings pending before him to a subordinate Court competent to try or dispose of the same. The Subordinate Judge was quite competent to try this case under the Civil Courts Act.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case a Munsif dismissed a suit on a bond and the decree was upheld by the Appellate Court. An application for sanction to prosecute the Plaintiff for offences under secs. 463 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code was refused by the Munsif. From this order an appeal was preferred evidently to the District Judge: this appeal was heard by the Subordinate Judge who reversed the order of the Munsif and granted sanction. The Plaintiff obtained this Rule for setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the Petitioner that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order that he has made and on the merits that the order of the Munsif refusing sanction was a proper one and should not have been set aside as the Courts which decided the bond suit went upon the failure of the Plaintiff to prove his case. The learned Vakil for the Opposite Party contends that we cannot go into the second question as we have no jurisdiction to interfere under sec. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the Rule must be discharged, unless we uphold the first contention, in which case we may have jurisdiction under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. We shall deal with the first question first. Sec. 195, cl. (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that "any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate." Cl. 7 provides that "every Court shall be deemed subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie." Chap. III of the Civil Courts Act, which is headed as dealing with ordinary jurisdiction contains sec. 21 of which cl. 2 says that "save as aforesaid, an appeal from a decree or order of a Munsif shall lie to the District Judge." The saving is in respect of any provision to the contrary in any other Act and is not material in this case, as there is no suggestion that there is any such special enactment applicable to it. Cl. (4) of sec. 21 provides that the High Court may under certain circumstances allow appeals lying to the District Judge to be preferred to the Court of a particular Subordinate Judge. That also is not material as there is no suggestion that there is any such special order applicable to the present case. No appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge and he was therefore not the authority which could grant or revoke a sanction refused or granted by the Munsif. It is true that under sec. 24, cl. (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, the District Judge can transfer any suit, appeal or proceeding pending before him to any subordinate Court competent to try it but the Subordinate Judge was not competent to try this appeal as he was not the authority to which the appeal lay. The order of the Subordinate Judge was therefore incompetent.

As regards the second question there is some conflict of authority. The Allahabad High Court has held that under sec. 195, cl. (6), there can be only one proceeding by way of appeal from an order giving or refusing a sanction and as soon as the Appellate Court makes an order either way there is no further appeal: See Emperor v. Serh Mal (1), Kanhai Lal v. Chhadummi Lal (2). The Madras High Court has decided that an appeal lies to the High Court not only in cases where the first Court refuses sanction, and sanction is granted by the Court to which that Court is immediately subordinate, but also in cases where the first Court grants sanction and the sanction is revoked by the Court to which that Court is immediately subordinate: See Muthu Swami Mudali v. Veeni Chetti (3). The learned Judges differ from the Calcutta ruling in Hamijuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4), and agree with two subsequent Calcutta rulings; Habibur Rahaman v. Khoda Bux (5), Girija Sankar v. Benode Sheikh (6). The same point was raised in the case of Ram Proshad v. Raghubar (7), but the learned Judges, whilst expressing an inclination in favour of the Madras view, supported as it was by some of the Calcutta cases, preferred to interfere under sec. 622 of the old Civil Procedure Code. It is not necessary, however, to pursue this question further as our view on the first question is sufficient to dispose of this Rule.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. We make no order as to costs.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree with my learned colleague in making the Rule absolute.

Under sec. 21, sub-sec. (2) of the Bengal, N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, an appeal from a decree or order of a Munsif ordinarily lies to the District Judge and not to the Subordinate Judge. There is no suggestion in this case that there is any special order as provided for in sub-sec. (4) of that section under which appeals could have been preferred to the particular Subordinate Judge, who passed the order on appeal in the present case. Under sec. 22 (1) a District Judge no doubt may transfer to any Subordinate Judge under his administrative control any appeals pending before him from the decrees or orders of Munsifs. When an appeal transferred under sec. 22 (1) is withdrawn by the District Judge he may either dispose of it himself or transfer it to a Court, under his administrative control competent to dispose of it. The question of competency to dispose of an appeal does not arise when an appeal is transferred in the first instance to a Subordinate Judge under sec. 21 (1), and it seems therefore that a Subordinate Judge is competent to dispose of any appeal pending before the District Judge and transferred by him to the former.

But under sec. 195, sub-sec. 6 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the power of revoking or granting any sanction given or refused, is given to the authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate and sub-sec. (7) provides that for the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie. There is no doubt that the District Judge is the only Court to which appeals from an order of a Munsif ordinarily lie. For the purposes of sec. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, therefore, a Munsif is not subordinate to a Subordinate Judge. A Subordinate Judge can dispose of any appeal transferred to him by the District Judge under sec. 21 (1) of the Civil Courts Act, but the power of revoking or granting sanction is given only to the Court to which an appeal lies. The power, therefore, cannot be exercised by a Subordinate Judge to whom an appeal does not lie, but who can only dispose of an appeal transferred to him by the District Judge.

In this view of the matter the other questions raised in this Rule need not be considered.

Rule made absolute.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE FOLLOWING INCIDENT NARRATED BY LORD Minto at a meeting held in the Caxton Hall in London would go to remove the erroneous impression that exists in the public mind that Mr. S. P. Sinha, the ex-Law Member of the Viceroy's Council, was an out and out supporter of the Press Bill. It is no longer an official secret now that the difference between him and some of his colleagues regarding some of the provisions of this measure and particularly on the question whether any appeal should be allowed to the High Court from the Magistrate's order of confiscation was so very keen that Mr. Sinha actually submitted his resignation the day before the Bill was to have been introduced in the Council. The attitude that Mr. Sinha had taken up then was indeed highly commendable as the question involved was one of principle. We must also say at the same time that Mr. Sinha acted quite honourably in withdrawing his resignation when he found that his resignation would prove embarrassing to his colleagues at the time of general alarm that followed the daring political crime that was committed within the precincts of the High Court and in the immediate neighbourhood of the Government House. It would appear that the support of the Press Bill was forced upon Mr. Sinha by stress of circumstances.

THIS IS WHAT LORD MINTO SAID WHILE PRESIDING at a meeting held under the auspices of the East Indian Association:—

"No man," said Lord Minto, "ever served me more faithfully than did Mr. Sinha. I will tell you a story about that gentleman. I was coming back one day from Barrackpore to Government House, when just as I reached home a letter was put into my hand. Before I could open it, my private Secretary came into my room. What he had to say was startling, for it was to the effect that a prominent Police Inspector had been assassinated within a stone's throw of Government House just an hour previously. My anxiety may be imagined. It was not lessened when I opened the letter in my hand. This was from Mr. Sinha regretting that he could no longer serve upon my Council, and begging that I would accept his resignation; he found himself unable to support the provisions of the Press Bill which was about to be introduced by the Government of India. This was a second and a shattering blow. And that night I had a big dinner party coming on at Government House! What was I to do? Two hours later I received a second letter from Mr. Sinha. When he had written his first letter, he had not known of the murder of the Police Inspector. He now desired to withdraw that letter. The circumstances had altered his decision. He would not desert me. He would support the Press Bill. And some of you may remember what a magnificent speech he made in defence of that measure when it was introduced in Council. Now I call that patriotism. It is the highest form of patriotism."

AFTER GIVING THE PROPOSED DRAFT RULES FOR the admission of advocates our careful consideration we would venture to suggest that the adoption of the new rules may be deferred until we have had an opportunity of judging the result of the Inns of Court Regulations regarding Indian students. Under these Regulations every Indian student who may desire to study for the Bar in England must either be a graduate of some Indian University or an under-graduate of some English University. It may be assumed that Indian under-graduates at the English Universities would not care to come away without degrees when they have once joined a University there. As for the graduates of Indian Universities they are given special concession at the principal English Universities both as to the keeping of terms as also in the matter of examinations. Any student who has passed the Intermediate examination at some Indian University in the first division or who has taken honours in the B. A. or other degree examination or taken his M. A. degree is excused four terms and some examinations at Oxford and Cambridge. It would therefore be always to their advantage to join some University and to take a degree during the first two years of their residence in England. Then in the third year they usually study for the Bar and get called after keeping 12 terms.

THUS THE PURPOSES OF THE HIGH COURT DRAFT rules will ordinarily be met by the Inns of Court Regulations. The additional burden that is proposed to be cast on the Indian students by requiring them to study in some barrister's Chambers for a year before they can be admitted as advocates is, as we have already said, capable of colourable compliance by going to men who have no practice. If study in the Chambers of practising barristers is seriously contemplated one must not ignore the real difficulties in the matter. There are hundreds of students studying for the Bar in England. What guarantee is there that there would be the same number of practising barristers of position available or willing to take pupils in their Chambers. It would be very unfortunate if after the rule is passed, the Indian students meet with any difficulty in getting such men to take them to study in their Chambers. So we would venture to suggest that the Judges should first put themselves in communication with the Benchers of the Inns of Court to ascertain the names of the practising barristers who would be willing to accept Indian pupils. It would be very hard indeed, if any Indian student after getting called to the Bar should have to return without getting the opportunity of qualifying himself in this respect and be refused admission as an advocate of the High Court in consequence. In that case all his time, trouble and money will go for nothing and he will return to India without any prospect in life. In any event the rules should not be made final by the Hon'ble Judges before making all necessary enquiries on this behalf.

BRAHMINS AND CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN HINDU INDIA.

[By K. P. JAYASWAL, B. A. (OXON).]

The rule of law, (1) introduced as a weapon of the imperial system by the founders of the Mauryan Empire, sought to impose equality of all classes before law. The policy of legislation of the Brahmana Chancellor Kautilya essayed that the Brahmana be subjected to the same penal provisions as the Shudra, that the axe of the execution should not discriminate between the high and the low. The only point of inequality consisted in the fact that the Brahmana was to be punished with the greatest severity, as he stood at the highest rung of the social and intellectual ladder. (2) In other words, privilege was arraigned inversely before the bar of justice. This treatment of privilege and especially of Brahminical privilege could only be supported by Equity, it had no sanction from the Common law. The Common law had all along upheld the social division and its incidental privileges. The basis of inequality in that division had been punctuated by law for the sake of peace and order in the days when the Crown had not become all-powerful in society. But, under a throne, which was not only, to quote the words of Rhys-Davids, "the mightiest throne then existing in the world" but also could give birth to and justify the theory, "the Sovereign is the State," (3) it was possible to discard the petty policy of maintaining authority by upholding privilege and depressing the populace. The Government of Chandra Gupta was strong enough to afford an "impartial" administration of justice and to invert the position of privilege.

But after the Revolution which swept away the pietist Emperor and the Mauryan system from Pataliputra and the 'viciously valiant Greeks' under Menandisios out of India, this attempt at, what we may call, a judicial levelling by the imperialist legislation and the corner stone of its penal policy—that no offender was to escape punish-

(2) For instance, a Brahmana was to be amerced four times what a Shudra would be for selling a free Hindu. (Artha. III, 12, 65, Cap. Law of Slaves). In cases of treasonous acts where a culprit was to be executed under an exceptional form of capital punishment, a Brahmana offender was to undergo the most ignominious one, vis., that of drowning, (IV, 10, 86).

The inversion was uniform in all cases when prosecution was commenced, in the language of the Mrichchhakatika, 'according to (the rules of) the Artha. (shastra), the complaint being either entertained or rejected by the sole discretion of the judge,' as in modern law in all cases of crimes proper where the State (the Artha., see 15 C. W. N. cclxxv, n. 5) was the prosecutor. But in offences where complaint, to quote the Judge's definition, was lodged 'according to the rules of the text, (Vakya-anusarena) and private parties (Arthi-Pratyarthi) were required,' that is, in the cases which were analogous to civil suits, such as defamation and simple assault वाक्प्रावृत्त and दण्डप्रावृत्त, (Artha. III, 18, 19) the old consideration of the privileged social order was retained.

The former novel position of Kautilya was based on his penal theory that punishments, instead of being rigid like the fixed scales of the authorities, 'should be according to the magnitude of crime, that is to be passed having regard to the culprit and the crime.' (यथापराधः दण्डः)। Artha.

ment—(नास्ति अपकारिणो मोक्षः; Arth. IV, 19), were loudly denounced as a baneful innovation by those who now invested orthodoxy with the prestige of the saviour of society. They preferred a claim that the Brahmana was absolutely exempt from capital punishment, that the penal equality as regards the Brahmana was repulsive to the spirit of the sacred common law (4).

The former law used to be that a Brahmana was to be branded on the forehead and then to be banished (Gautama Dharma Sutras, 10, 11, 47), banishment entailing forfeiture of property. This was quite in consonance with the penal theory of Hindu law which aimed at determent and had, therefore, invented a class of punishment's which it called chiefly-psychological (Prayas-chittah) for heinous offences as murder. The culprits under punishment had to bear some sign to proclaim his deed, e.g., a murderer of a woman to carry a human skull for so many years. (Apastamba Dharma Sutras, 2, 10, 27, 18 seq.) It was thus sought to cure criminal tendency. Brahmanas and non-Brahmanas were alike subject to psychological treatment. What was now claimed for the Brahmana amounted a total immunity from even ante-Mauryan provisions.

This was a claim of aristocratic privilege. The Brahmanas had come to form the real aristocracy of the Hindu society. They had been gratuitous educators of society (5), they had been gratuitous advisers to the State, they had been a check upon the Sovereign's arbitrariness. They had never kept themselves aloof from public affairs and public services. On the other hand they had existed, with characteristically aristocratic psycho-

(4) "Tonsure is ordained as capital punishment in the case of a Brahmana (culprit). Let it be life-ending in cases of other castes. Do not let a Brahmana be slain, whatsoever sinful deed he might have perpetrated. He should be banished unscratched from the State and (intact) with all his property. As there is nothing on this earth so contrary to the (spirit of) Dharma as the killing of a Brahmana, the king, therefore may not even think of his execution."

(5) As late as the compilation of the ethico-political fable book, the Panchûtantra (translated into Pahlavi about 500 A. (राजान्

logy, for the sake and service of the public. The belief is not correct that the Brahmanas did not fight in national crises. The Greeks under Alexander have borne testimony to their stout resistance. Over and above that they had ordained a self-denying regulation for themselves that they would never engage in any occupation which would bring riches to themselves: they had chalked out a life of poverty for the sake of the society they lived in. Their class had thus become the essential aristocracy in the Hindu society.

Aristocracies all the world over have claimed privileges, and our extraordinary aristocracy, the aristocracy-in-poverty, claimed an extraordinary privilege. The claim was extraordinary from the point of view of Hindu Law and not from that of the history of aristocracies. To concede to such a claim, embodied though it was in the great Manava Dharma Shastra, would have been to act in direct opposition to the spirit of Law. Hindu Law recognised social inequality but it was far from holding any one, even the King, above the law and immune from punishment.

But was the claim so forcibly urged by the author of the Manava Dharma Shastra allowed by the Hindu society? Or was the principle of penal equality which was based upon the juridical invention of equity surrendered at the orthodox command of the so-called Manu? We have evidence to declare in the negative in both particulars.

EVIDENCE OF THE MRICHCHHAKATIKA.

The Sanskrit play called the Mrichchhakatika is a work of about the first century of the Christian era (7). In the prelude it is stated that the object of the performance is to stage the course of politics, to exhibit the abuses in the administration of justice, to delineate a wicked character and to show the working of destiny, through the love-story of Charudatta and Basantasena of Ujjain (8). The last but one scene (9) brings on the stage a judicial trial with dramatic touches necessary for sustaining the respective characters of the dramatis personae. Two legal points of paramount importance stand forth therein. The first and the foremost is the plea of defence based on the alleged privilege of the Brahman caste and the second is the non-allowance of the ordeals. It is very significant that after the finding of the Judge as to the guilt of the accused and the conviction, the Judge refrains from passing any sentence and he submits his finding to the "Governor" (9) for passing a suitable sentence that according to the authority of "Manu" the accused Brahmana ought to be only banished with all his property intact, and that he was not to be executed (10). The Kshatriya Governor however does not only (11) disregard the opinion of "Manu" but directs an ignominious and exemplary form of capital punishment, it being the murder of a woman. Upon this Charudatta complains bitterly that he has not been allowed any of the ordeals and, though a Brahmana, he was going to the saw-gullotine (कलक). He hints at a revolution (12) one of the reasons for which was what he thought the bad administration of law, which did not recognise the exemption of the Brahmana from capital punishment (13).

(7) Regarding the above date of the work there has been practically a unanimous verdict of European Sanskritists, and it is confirmed by a recent discovery. Excavations near Allahabad have brought to light along with other remains of the first century before Christ a number of clay-carts as described in the drama and from which it takes its title. Journal of the Roy. Asi. Society, p. 135, 1911, also the mention of Vasudeva in Act IX probably refers to the dynasty of Kanva Vasudeva (70 B. C.—25 B. C.).

It is thus clear that judicial equality of the Maurya empire outlived the reaction of the Manava Dharma Shastra and was existing, though greatly resented, in the first century after Christ. It is also evident that the battle mainly raged round one point alone, and that was the question of capital punishment.

The question was for a time decided shortly after when the school of common lawyers had to adopt a new standard of legal norms which they em-

(9) The ruler in the Mrichchhakatika is sometimes called 'Governor (राष्ट्रिय) and sometimes King. Ujjaini was one of the seats of the provincial Governors of the Mauryas. In the decadence period the province of Avanti seems to have become independent but the title Rashtriya of the Maurya Governors still survived as a special designation of the ruler.

(12) The popular revolution which follows has been regarded by scholars as a historical fact. See Wilson's remarks, Hindu Theatre.

(13) It is noteworthy that the caste privilege of the Manava Dharma Shastra is advanced only in respect of capital punishment, otherwise it is totally disregarded, for instance, in setting up the Shudra Aryaka on the throne and in the treatment accorded to him while in a humble situation. Orthodoxy prohibited social equality of the Shudra with the Brahmana, but despite that Charudatta seated him next to himself in his charriot and addressed him as he would address a Brahmana. Orthodoxy detested a Shudra ruler, but the Brahmana bowed cheerfully to the authority of the newly anointed Aryaka.

bodied in a treatise under the title of the Yajna-vaalkya Smriti, and which have since then remained in actual life the most accepted authority on Hindu law. There the Brahmana is no more exempted from capital punishment. The old punishment of branding and banishment was retained only as a special mode of punishment for him in cases of theft which did not entail capital punishment (14). Manu's code on this point of privilege, as on many others, was unmistakably superseded. And this must have been done by the Brahmanas themselves, or at any rate with their approval. In other words, they relinquished their claim of privilege.

Two centuries later, however, during the great Brahmanical revival following tremendous political exertions on the part of the Hindu society, we find the privilege recorded in emphatic terms in the Narada Smriti. Whether they were put into practice, or remained only a pious opinion on paper cannot be decided for want of evidence. The faint repetition of the exemption in Brihaspati tends to create doubts as to its actual observance in the sixth and the seventh centuries.

The actual change might have been in the fourth and fifth centuries. In explaining the attitude of the Narada Smriti with regard to the exemption of the Brahmana from capital punishment we have to notice a special factor which is highly important in the history of the penal jurisprudence of Hindu India. Just at the time the speculative mind of the Hindu was being troubled with the question whether capital punishment as such was moral and desirable. In the Shanti Parva of the Mahabharata which bears abundant proof of being a composition of the period between the third and the fourth centuries, a discussion on the subject is preserved in Ch. CCLXVII (15).

The discussion starts with the stock adverse argument that if capital punishment was abolished, "all distinction between virtue and vice would disappear. 'This is mine,' 'That is not his,' distinctions like these would prevail no more, rights and obligations would be in abeyance, and society would come to an end." The fallacy is obvious: the argument assumes that total cessation of punishment has been premised. And the reply opens with an emphasis on the desirability of punishing offence. But the punishment should be inflicted "without destroying the person" of the offender. In support of this four reasons are advanced :

(14) "Having caused restitution of the stolen property, the king shall cause the thief to be punished by different modes of corporal punishment. A Brahmana guilty of theft should be branded and banished from his kingdom." Yajna-II, 270 (Mandalik's trans.) See II, 273-75, where cases of theft are detailed and punishments from death down to fines prescribed.

(15) Once more I am grateful to my friend Mr. P. Chaudhuri for drawing my attention to this important discussion.

(i) Capital punishment operates hardship upon the innocent dependents. "By killing the wicked, the king kills a large number of innocent men ; (for instance) by killing a single robber, his wife, mother, father, children, (etc.) are (sometimes) killed." (10).

(ii) The offender may be capable of improvement. "Sometimes a wicked man is seen to imbibe right mode of life." (11).

(iii) Capital punishment takes away the possibility of good membe s being added to society. "It is again seen that good people do spring from wicked ones." (11).

(iv) The historical reason. "The offender should not be uprooted, for it is not in consonance with the traditional law" (16). The end of punishment which the traditional law had in view is assumed to be a mental cure "and for mental cure, non-capital punishments are prescribed (in ancient law) : men al pain, imprisonment, disfiguring etc. (some readings also include confiscation)." (12-13)

This speculative view of the time greatly explains the granting of the privilege of exemption in the Narada Smriti after the question had once been set at rest by the Yajnavalkya. By the concession a high ideal of penal jurisprudence was to be realised on a limited scale within comparatively safe bounds, and without running the risk of an all-round experiment embracing all classes of men. At the same time the estate whose political and social utility and importance made its preservation a desirable thing, would be insured against the potential loss of future good members. It is on the utility theory that the Institutes of Narada base the claim of the exemption—"for these two (a ruler and a Brahmana) are sustainers of society." Narada, XV XVI, 20. And the utility was more of the political than of the social nature. It was under their guidance that an all-India empire was founded and fostered to be the most prosperous and the longest lived of all the Indian imperialisms yet known to history. It was one of them who two centuries later following the facts of the history of his times proudly defined India as the land 'where the intruders in spite of repeated attempts could not permanently stay.' यत्र नैक्का आक्रम्याक्रम्य न स्यातारो भवन्ति । (Medhatithi commenting on the descriptions of Aryavarta in Manu). The political importance of the Brahmanical estate in Hindu society had been immense and aristocratic. In a society where economic struggle was almost absent and consequently when the masses could not rise to a high level of social responsibilities, it was deemed desirable even in Europe as late as the days of Machiavelli, to have and preserve the aristocratic element as a source of national strength. The Hindus of Hindu India therefore ultimately conceded the privilege to this unique aristocracy, the like of which has never been known in the history of the world.

THE TRANSFER OF OCCUPANCY HOLDING—WHETHER VOID OR VOIDABLE.

Is the transfer of an occupancy-holding void in the absence of a local custom recognising such transfer? Or, is it only a voidable transaction so that unless the landlord intervenes the right of the transferee is a good one?

In the case Hari Das Bairagi v. Uday Chandra Das Bairagi, reported in 12 C. W. N. 1086, Mr. Justice Doss maintained that the transfer of a so-called non-transferable occupancy-holding was not altogether void. "It is almost elementary," said his Lordship, "that if a transaction is void no right in favour of either party can grow under it." "It is not necessary to set it aside." "It is incapable of being confirmed or ratified." If however the transaction is voidable it is valid and binding upon the parties until it is avoided. "It is perfectly clear upon authorities," continued His Lordship, "that the transfer of an occupancy-holding which is not transferable by local custom or usage may be validated by the consent of the landlord (Radha Kishore Manikya v. Sreemati Ananda Priya, 8 C. W. N. 235, Jognu Prosad v. Poshnu Sahoo, 8 C. W. N. 172, Sreemti Sibosundary Ghosh v. Raj Mohun Guha, 8 C. W. N. 214.)" His Lordship meets a possible contention that such consent on the part of the landlord may be regarded as a new settlement in favour of a transferee, by pointing out that the supposed new settlement would not vest in the transferee any right of occupancy, it would create a holding in the transferee for the first time. Therefore, when the landlord recognised a transfer he recognised it as the transfer of an existing right of occupancy.

Whatever views his Lordship Mr. Justice Doss might have expressed in the above case, he seems to have changed his opinion subsequently. For, in the case of Sreemutty Agarjan Bibi v. Pananulla (14 C. W. N. 779) he agreed with Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in coming to the conclusion that the transferee of a share of one of several persons jointly owning an occupancy-holding could not claim joint possession of the holding against his transferor's co-sharer. The judgment was apparently based on the ground that the alleged transfer was altogether void and the purchaser acquired no right under it. Their Lordships remarked, "The question involved has been somewhat obscured in more recent times" and therefore looking into the history of the law on the subject from the Regulations down to the present time, they expressed themselves in the language of Phear, J.

(in the case Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen, 22 W. R. 22) that the right of occupancy was a personal right and could not therefore be transferred. Their Lordships went further and referred to the case Tara Prosad Roy v. Surja Kanto Acharya (15 W. R. 152) and remarked that it was instructive to note the view expressed therein, viz., that even if the zemindar consented to the transfer the transferee would thereby merely acquire a new jote on the same term as the original tenancy.

Now, if this be the correct interpretation of the law one is bound to hold that a usage of transferability of occupancy-holding can never grow up in a locality where there was previously no such custom. For, in order that the usage may be built up each individual transfer which would go to establish that usage must be rendered effective without the landlord's consent somehow. And how can that possibly be unless the transaction be a voidable one?

But in the case Buzul Karim v. Satish Chandra Giri (15 C. W. N. 752), Mr. Justice Mookerjee expresses an opinion that there may grow up a usage of transferability where there was originally none. "It will be observed," said his Lordship, "that in the case of usages of transferability of holdings they can grow up only by the acquiescence in the first instance of the landlord himself; they are at first matters of choice with him but may acquire an obligatory element or binding force after he has acquiesced in the conduct of his tenant for a sufficient length of time." But how can the acquiescence of the landlord render valid a transaction which is void ab initio? Apparently Mr. Justice Mookerjee seems to consider the transfer of an occupancy-holding as a mere voidable transaction.

Thus the judicial decisions are in conflict with each other on matters of principle. Under the circumstances it seems to be very desirable that the whole question should be threshed out and settled by a Full Bench.

THE INDEX OF CASES, 1836—1911. Parts I and IV. Privy Council and English Cases. By S. Srinivasa Aiyar, B. A., B. L. Madras: Printed by Temple & Co., 332, Thumbu Street.

The plan of the present compilation is somewhat original. A case generally decides a number of points and may be cited in later decisions with reference to one or other of these points. The existing Indexes give bare lists of these later cases, so that much time is lost to the practitioner in finding out whether all of them deal with the particular point upon which he may be looking for authorities. In the present Index, so far as the Privy Council cases are concerned, they are analysed and the points decided in them separately set out and the subsequent cases noted in their appropriate places with reference to the point or points upon which they have a bearing. With reference to the English cases, the orthodox plan is followed. The compilation is decidedly an improvement upon other compilations of its genus, and we shall be glad to see it completed.

THE DIGEST OF INDIAN CASES. The Annual Digest, 1911. With a collection of cases overruled, followed, dissenting from and referred to. By S. Srinivasa Aiyar, B. A., B. L. Madras: Printed by Thompson & Co., at the Minerva Press, 33, Broadway. 1912.

No lengthy notice is necessary in the case of an annual publication which has appeared with unflagging regularity for more than 12 years. We have to note, however, the increase in bulk of the present compilation showing that a larger number of reports have been laid under contribution in preparing it. As we have noticed before, Mr. Aiyar's Digests are in many respects models of what they should be. Mr. Aiyar has recently consolidated his Annual Digest for the years 1901 to 1910, so that the present compilation is the first annual publication following it.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES, illustrating the Criminal Law for the use of students. By A. M. Wilshire, M. A., LL. B. London: Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane. 1912. 6s. 6d.

This collection of cases is prepared as a companion volume to "The Elements of Criminal Law and Procedure" by the same author, and the selection and arrangement of cases follow the plan of that work. Leading cases on evidence bearing on the law of Crimes have been excluded, as these have been dealt with in Mr. E. Cockle's "Leading Cases on Evidence" belonging to the same series which has been already reviewed in these columns. The collection, we need hardly say, is bound to be of great use to students, and practitioners also will find it very useful.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH.—In re Walker and another. Before JUSTICES DARLING, PICKFORD AND BANKES. 28th March 1912.

Adoption of a child—Court's power to deprive the parents of the custody if for the benefit of the child.

This was a case by way of an appeal and related to the custody of a male child born of an unmarried woman. The mother gave her few months' old baby to the Walkers in adoption. The grandmother of the child gave £200 to them for support without the knowledge of the child's mother. Seven years afterwards the child's parents went through the ceremony of marriage. Their circumstances also improved and they applied to the Walkers for return of the child. But the Walkers refused, and the case was tried by Mr. Justice Hamilton who refused to order that the child should be given up. On the present appeal it was contended on behalf of the parents that their parental right came first and in the absence of proof that the parents were in any way unfit for the custody of the child they had a paramount right. The Court affirmed the order of the Court below. In the course of his judgment Mr. JUSTICE DARLING said :—

The persons with whom the boy was living had had him for ten years, and the evidence was that, as was natural, he had become much attached to them. Until these proceedings began he did not know they were not his real parents.

The boy's own parents lived together for seven or eight years after his birth without being married, on the ground that they could not afford to marry. It was now said that his natural mother would come into a half share of £17,000 on the death of his grandmother; but he (Mr. Justice Darling) was by no means sure that it would be to the benefit of the boy to bring him up in the expectation of coming into money rather than bring him up to a way of earning a respectable living for himself, and if the natural mother were as fond of the boy as she said she was, she could always leave him the money, even if he were not in her custody.

Mr. McCall had contended that the mother's right was paramount; but from the cases he thought that, as laid down in Regina v. Nash, 10 Q. B. D. 455, the real question must always be what was best for the benefit of the child.

His Lordship as a result of the evidence said that he felt it would not be for the benefit of the boy to remove him from his present home.

Messrs. Pollock, K. C., and Tomlin for the foster parents.

KING'S BENCH.—Curtis v. B. U. R. T. Company, "Ld." Before Mr. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE. 9th March 1912.

Wrongful dismissal—Breach of contract—Waiver.

This action was brought to recover damages for wrongful dismissal. The Plaintiff was engaged by the general manager of the Defendant company to act as its traffic manager for a period of seven years, and before the expiration of that period he was dismissed on three months' notice.

The company contended that the general manager had no authority to bind them for so long a period, and they also pleaded that there was no sufficient written contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and alternatively, that after receiving notice to leave the Plaintiff attended a meeting of creditors of the company and approved a deed of arrangement.

The jury found that the general manager had authority to make the seven years' agreement and awarded £225 damages. On the points of law raised by the Defendant, Mr. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE observed :—

The only thing which the Defendants disputed was the right of the general manager to commit them to a seven years' engagement. They took the point under the Statute of Frauds, that no date was mentioned in writing at which the engagement was to begin or to end. The Plaintiff had already been in their service in another capacity, and the letter offering him the new engagement concluded with the words "acceptance of the above will oblige"; and to that the Plaintiff replied accepting the terms in their entirety, and saying he would start "as from now" in his new employment.

In his opinion there was a continuing offer of immediate employment, which offer was accepted from the date of the letter of acceptance; and the cases of Marshall v. Berridge (19 Ch. D., 233) and Re Alexander's Timber Company (70 L. J. Ch., 767) relied on by the Defendants did not apply.

As to the other defence raised, ought the Plaintiff to have a claim under the deed of arrangement for breach of the contract? The correspondence indicated that when he was told he must go he elected to treat the notice as a present breach of the contract, and his staying on for three months and receiving salary during that period was an arrangement for the mutual convenience of both parties and was without prejudice. The cases of Hochster v. Delatour (2 E. and B., 678) and Frost v. Knight (L. R. 7 Ex., 111) were a little difficult to apply, as they both related to a refusal to begin contractual relations rather than to continue them, but the principle must be the same. The Plaintiff was entitled to treat the notice as a present breach, though he was not bound to do so, Avery v. Bowden (5 E. and B., 714), Anson on Contract (12th Ed., p. 320)—and in his opinion the Plaintiff had so elected to treat it, and he should therefore have put in a claim for the breach under the deed of arrangement. As he had omitted to claim he was now barred—Re Midland Coal Company (1895, 1 Ch., 267)—and the verdict and judgment must be entered for the Defendants.

Privy Council, appeal to—Restoration of appeal dismissed for default, application for.

This was the Appellant's petition for restoration of an appeal which had been dismissed for non-prosecution. The facts stated in the petition were briefly as follows:—

The Petitioner was the Plaintiff, and the Respondents were the Defendants in Suit No. 169 of 1905 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah, which suit was dismissed on the 23rd July 1906. The Petitioner appealed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and the appeal was dismissed by the High Court by a decree, dated the 8th April 1908. The Petitioner applied to the High Court for leave to appeal against the decree, and leave was granted by an order, dated the 13th July 1909. The record of the appeal was transmitted to the Registrar of the Privy Council, and was received by him on the 26th day of June 1911. On the 14th November 1911 the appeal was dismissed for non-prosecution. The Petitioner alleged that he was not aware of such dismissal till on or about the 19th December 1911, when the appeal was placed on the Peremptory Board of the High Court for formal disposal, in accordance with a letter from the Registrar of the Privy Council intimating that the appeal had been dismissed as aforesaid. He further pleaded as an excuse that he was under the belief that notice from the Privy Council of the arrival of the Record in England would be served on him, and that he need take no steps to prosecute the appeal till such service of notice.

Mr. Eddis who appeared in support of the petition relied upon his client's affidavit. But their Lordships rejected the petition with costs without calling upon

Mr. Ross who appeared for the Respondents.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CARNDUFF, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 574 OF 1911. KENARAM AKULI, Defendant, Appellant v. SRISTEDHAR CHATTERJEE AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 18th April 1912.

Water, overflow of, damage by—Defendants not actively contributory, if liable—Damnum sine injuria.

Plaintiff brought this suit for recovery of damages and for a permanent injunction on the allegation that a tank called Duttaband belonged to a third party, that the Defendants' land was on the north of the northern embankment of the said tank and that the Defendants' land which was high had been made low and culturable and the water of the Dattaband which overflowed the bank fell into Defendants' land and rushed into Plaintiff's and caused damages. The defence was that the bank of the Dattaband was of the same height as before, that the mohana of the said tank had been silted up and the water therefore overflowed the banks and fell into Defendants' land and flowed into Plaintiff's by natural course, and the Defendants were not liable for any damage. Both the Courts below found that the northern bank of the Dattaband was of the same height as before and Defendants' land was not on any higher level than the bank of the tank and the water overflowed by the silting up of the mohana. The first Court dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on the ground that the Defendant was not liable for any loss on Plaintiff's lands but the Court of Appeal below held that the Defendants had every right to convert their danga land into culturable land but they must erect an ail between their land and the Plaintiff's land in order to prevent water passing into Plaintiff's land from their land and remanded the case for trial of other questions not decided by the first Court. Against that order the Defendants appealed.

Held—That the Plaintiff was not entitled to any damages or injunction in this case. The Defendants had not raised any artificial structure for storm water on their own land nor had they forced any water on Plaintiff's land, and no legal rights had been infringed, L. R. 10 Ex. p. 41; 28 Law Times 836 and 7 H. L., p. 349 followed. L. R. 3 H. L., p. 330 distinguished.

SUIT No. 639 OF 1910.

CHAUDHURI, J.	}	KAMINI DASSEE
1912,		v.
23, April.		KRISHNA CHANDRA MUKERJEE.

Purdanashin lady, improvident gift by—Gift to priest—Fiduciary relation—Suit to cancel gift—Onus on Defendant, extent of—Independent advice, solicitor's duty regarding—Solicitor if should act for both parties.

Where a purdanashin lady with very slender means made a highly improvident gift to her priest,

Held, in a suit by the lady to set aside the deed of gift, that for the purpose of discharging the onus that lay on the Defendant to prove the entire bona fides of the transaction, it was not enough for him to prove that the document had been read by an attorney and explained to the lady and that the attorney had explained to her that by it her interest in the property would cease and it would become the Defendant's. He must show that the whole of the circumstances were present to her mind and that the intention to give was really her own voluntary act.

An attorney acting for both parties in such a transaction places himself in a very false position.

An attorney called in to advise the donor in such a case should be independent of the donee in fact and not merely in name.

A solicitor in such a case does not discharge his duty by satisfying himself simply that the donor understands and wishes to carry out a particular transaction. He must also satisfy himself that the gift is one that is right and proper for the donor to make under all the circumstances and if he is not so satisfied his duty is to advise his client not to go on with the transaction and to refuse to act further for him if he persists.

POWELL v. POWELL (1), WRIGHT v. CARTER (4) followed.

In re COOMBER (2) distinguished.

Suit for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by the Plaintiff in respect of 13, Mullanga Lane, is null and void.

Plaintiff was a purdanashin lady being the widow of Durga Charan Soor who died without any issue male or female. The Defendant's father was Giris Chandra Mookerjee, who was the priest of Durga Charan Soor, and the Defendant himself since his father's death had been the priest of the Plaintiff.

The suit was brought on the allegation that the Defendant took advantage of her age, deafness, infirmity, and helplessness and that she was fully dominated by the Defendant who acted in violation of the trust reposed in him in having the deed executed by her. It appeared that after Durga Charan Soor's death the Defendant came to reside close to Plaintiff's house and used to look after her and her mother.

The deed of gift which was drafted on the 9th July 1908 was explained to the Plaintiff in the house of one Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee, a neighbour of the Plaintiff and a friend of Durga Charan Soor, deceased. The Plaintiff approved of it and requested an Attorney, Babu Dwijendra Mohan Ghose, to complete the draft. On the 15th July 1908, the Plaintiff called at the house of Babu Dwijendra Mohan Ghose when the deed was again read over and explained to her and she executed the same. The deed was also executed by the Defendant as accepting the gift. The document was registered on the 16th July 1908. The Plaintiff's prayer was that—

(1) The deed of gift be declared null and void.

(2) That the Defendant be ordered to return to the Plaintiff all the documents.

(3) That an injunction be issued restraining the Defendant from dealing with the property in any way whatever, pending the final decision of the suit.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. G. P. Roy) for the Plaintiff.

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Mr. C. C. Ghose) for the Defendant.

[CHAUDHURI, J.—Asked how far delivery of possession was necessary to validate a gift.]

Mr. N. Sircar.—Secs. 123 and 129 of the Transfer of Property Act abrogates the rule of Hindu Law which necessitates delivery of possession to complete a valid gift. Dharmodas v. Nistarini (8), Bai Rambai v. Bai Mani (9).

Mr. Pugh (for the Plaintiff) submitted that in such a case it is the duty of a solicitor independently advising an intending settlor to protect her against herself and not merely against the personal influence of the donee in the particular transaction, and if his advice is not accepted he should decline to act for the intending settlor. Reliance was placed on the passage in the judgment of Lord Justice Farwell in Powell v. Powell (1). He referred to the case of Huguenin v. Basely (6), and submitted that it is for the Court to inquire whether all that care and providence was placed round the donor as against those who advised her which from their situation they are bound to exert on her. He further submitted that if any authority is needed, reference may be made to the judgment of Lord Justice Vaughan Williams in Wright v. Carter (4) and to May on Fraudulent Dispositions of Property, at p. 476, vide also Mannu Singh v. Umadat Pande (10).

Mr. N. Sircar (for the Defendant) submitted that the duty extends only to explaining the contents of the documents and to see that she understood the effect of it. It is not incumbent on the solicitor to have warned the lady against executing a deed which seemed to him improvident by saying "If I were you I would not do it"—this being no part of the attorney's duty. In re Coomber (2).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAUDHURI, J.—This is a suit brought by a Hindu purdanashin lady to set aside a voluntary deed of gift in respect of 13, Mullanga Lane, which she had executed on the 15th July 1908, in favour of the Defendant. The case made by her in the plaint is that the Defendant "taking advantage of her age and infirmity and helpless condition obtained from her this deed of gift which she executed without any independent advice, being fully dominated by the Defendant and in violation of the trust and confidence reposed in him."

The Defendant is the son of her husband's priest and he has also been her priest since his father's death. The Defendant accepted the position that the onus lay upon him to show the entire bona fides of the transaction, it being conceded by him that there was fiduciary relationship between himself and the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff's husband, Durga Charan Soor, died in June or July 1906.

KAMINI DASSEE v. KRISHNA CHANDRA MUKERJEE.

This property did not come to her through her husband, but it had been given to her by her father's sister from her own moneys, the property being purchased in the Plaintiff's name. This house was, therefore, her stridhan property, and she held it in her own right. There is no question that she had a right of gift, if she chose to exercise it. Her husband had left him surviving some nephews, brother's sons, who did not live in Calcutta, except one of them, who stayed in the house of the Plaintiff and another who used to come there from time to time. These persons were not her heirs. There has been a suggestion that the husband had desired the Plaintiff to provide that after her death the property should go to the nephews, but that the Plaintiff had declined to make any such provision. She however says that she intended to make this property debutler and her husband's nephews were to be *shebait*s after her death and she was to be the "shebait or Malik" during her life-time. At the time of her husband's death, her mother was alive. The mother lived with the Plaintiff and it is said that it was her wish that Plaintiff should make a gift of the house to the Defendant. The Defendant says that he had been told by the Plaintiff that her mother had taken her to the Jagannath Temple at Puri and made her swear in the temple that the property was to be made a gift of to the Defendant. This story, however, the Plaintiff denies. Her version is that he had, on one occasion after the death of her husband and also some little time before the execution of this deed, taken her to a room in her own house in Mullanga Lane where she used to keep a Lachmi Thakurani and made her swear that this property was to be given to the Defendant. There is direct contradiction with regard to this matter, and it is difficult to decide which of the two versions, or if either of them is true. It may however be inferred from what has been said by them that she considered it would be a meritorious or religious act to give the property to her priest. She had been so told by the witness, Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee, to whom I shall have to refer later. The Plaintiff's mother died on the 15th April 1908 shortly before the execution of the deed. That the Plaintiff was in mental distress at the time is quite certain, and it also appears that she was not in good health. Her age was then about 60 years and she had two great bereavements within two years. It was after the death of her mother, that she made up her mind to make a gift of this property to the Defendant, firstly, because it is said she did not desire that the property should be touched by her husband's nephews and, secondly, because she herself was anxious to go away to a holy place and live on such small resources as she had, settling this property permanently upon the Defendant and seeing it secure in his possession and his ownership of it "made pucca." It is also alleged that the Defendant was the bhikshaputra of the Plaintiff. The Defendant says that when he was spoken to by the Plaintiff with regard to this matter, he desired that she should send for a friend of the family, one Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee, who has been examined as a witness in this case. Khettra Mohan says that he was consulted by the Plaintiff, and pointed out to her that she had not very much to live upon, and if she made over this property to the Defendant he might turn her out, and she had no other place of residence, but she insisted upon making the gift and he thereupon took the title-deeds from the Plaintiff to the Attorney, Dwijendra Mohan Ghose. This happened on or about the 1st July 1908. The attorney has been examined in this case, as also the attesting witnesses with the exception of one Ashutosh Banerjee who is dead and also one Harinath Banerjee who identified this lady at the Registration Office. The document is in the English language, which neither the Plaintiff nor the Defendant understands; but we have the evidence of the Attorney that he explained this document to the lady at the time of the execution and that before the execution he had read over the draft and explained it to her. He says he also told her that by making the gift she would "no longer have any interest in the property" but that it would become the Defendant's. This the lady denies. The lady is hard of hearing and it may be that she did not understand, but I certainly give credence to the evidence of the Attorney in this matter. He has given his evidence in the fairest possible manner. There is nothing to be said against him so far as the actual explanation of the document is concerned. But it is not possible to dispose of this case upon that alone. That evidence is not sufficient to discharge the onus which is upon the Defendant.

Now this gift is undoubtedly of a highly improvident character. It must be held upon the evidence that the lady has very little property except this house. It is her only valuable property. It afforded her shelter and brought her also an income. The evidence of the Defendant on this point is, that he had understood from her that apart from the house, she "had kept Rs. 1,200" with a tenant of hers of the name of Srikrishna Mukherjee, that she had also some other money but that he did not know the amount and that she had also some gold ornaments, of what value he had no precise knowledge or information. Except what the lady had herself stated, he had no personal knowledge of her exact financial position. I do not think he has been candid in his statements and it seemed to me that he attempted to exaggerate what the lady had. He admitted that the lady had given his wife a portion of her gold ornaments. He said he did not know how the sradh expenses of her husband and mother were met. His witness, Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee, says that he came to know from the lady that she had a sum of Rs. 1,200 in deposit with Srikrishna Mukherjee and that she had also some other money and ornaments. He was inclined to exaggerate the value of the ornaments, he first used the expression "bahumulya," meaning "of great value"; but subsequently stated that the value was about Rs. 2,000. Even taking the whole of this evidence as true it shows that the resources of the lady are very limited and the substantial property she has is the house. It has also been proved that the lady has parted with some of her ornaments, she made a gift of some of them to the Defendant's wife and she seems also to have sold a portion for defraying the sradh expenses. Both she and Srikrishna Mukherjee deny that the sum of Rs. 1,200 is in deposit with him. The house was for her very valuable as she lived in it and also because it brought her an income of Rs. 19 a month. She had not to pay house rent and from the income derived from it she could manage to live. To make a free gift of this house, which left her without a roof overhead, and deprived her of a permanent source of income, must be called improvident. A gift of this character, specially for an old lady who has nobody to look after her, must be called extremely improvident. The case therefore is that of an old purda-nashin lady with very slender means making an improvident gift to a person who was her priest and in a fiduciary relationship to her. To uphold a gift of this character would require strong evidence showing that the whole of the circumstances were present to her mind, that the intention to give was really her own voluntary act. I need only refer to one or two cases which enunciate the principle that it must be shown by the donee that the donor was in such a position as would enable her to form an absolutely free and unfettered judgment and in particular had independent and competent professional advice. Dwijendra Babu's services as an Attorney were secured, but it is difficult to say what his position was in this matter. Was he the attorney for the lady, or was he the attorney for both? No other attorney seems to have acted for the Defendant. The instructions had originally come from Khetra Mohan Bhattacharjee, said to be a friend of the Plaintiff's husband, but he was the teacher of the Defendant and had himself officiated as the Plaintiff's priest in the absence of the Defendant or his father. I do not think it would be an unjustifiable assumption that Dwijendra Babu acted for both the parties. If he did so act, he placed himself in a false position, because the interests of the two persons were adverse, and although I entertain great respect for him, yet it seems to me to be difficult for any one to do his duty by two such parties in a transaction of this character. The position of an attorney under these circumstances is very clearly set out in

Powell v. Powell (1). Justice Farwell in that case says "a solicitor who accepts such a post puts himself in a false position if he acts for both. He owes a duty to both to do the best he can for both. But the Court requires that the donor should be placed in as good a position as if he were in fact emancipated. The solicitor, therefore, must be independent of the donee in fact and not merely in name, and this he cannot be, if he is a solicitor for both." But I am unwilling definitely to hold that Babu Dwijendra Mohan Ghose was acting for both the parties and prefer to treat him as acting only for this lady. In that position let me see what his duties were to this lady in this transaction. I refer again to the observations of the learned Judge in Powell v. Powell (1). "A solicitor does not discharge his duty by satisfying himself simply that the donor understands and wishes to carry out a particular transaction. He must also satisfy himself that the gift is one that is right and proper for the donor to make under all the circumstances, and if he is not so satisfied his duty is to advise his client not to go on with the transaction and to refuse to act further for him if he persists." Now let us see what Dwijendra Babu himself says he did in this matter. He was asked if he had enquired if the donee, her priest, had exercised any influence on her and what her means were. He said "No, I was not told if she had any income, or what income, or if she had any other place of residence." If that is so, it seems to me that he had not placed himself in a position to advise the lady. It is not enough to prepare the document and explain it to the lady. Here the draft was prepared according to the instructions of

(1) [1900] 1 Ch. 248.

KAMINI DASSEE v. KRISHNA CHANDRA MUKERJEE.

Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee. It is not enough to get her approval of the draft. The attorney should have enquired about her means and tried to ascertain how her desire to give, had been caused or had arisen, and what was leading her to give up her most valuable property. I do not think the attorney would not have enquired into these matters if they had been present to his mind. He did not entertain any suspicion. He did not know this lady or her family or any circumstances relating to her life. He accepted what had been said to him by Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee that she desired to give this house to the Defendant if she could legally make a gift. He did not apply his mind to other matters, this being his first transaction of this nature. Nothing was said to him, no circumstances were made known to him by which he could have helped this lady. I think, however, there is a clear duty in cases like these, so far as the attorney is concerned to try and protect the lady against herself. She was an old pardanashin lady and suffering from a recent bereavement, had been ill and was in poor circumstances. It has been contended on behalf of the Defendant that the duty cast upon an attorney was merely to see that the client understood the nature and effect of the deed and nothing more, and my attention has been called to the case of In re Coomber, Coomber v. Coomber (2), and the following passage from the observations of Fletcher-Moulton, Lord Justice, at p. 729, was cited. "Again and again we have had it said the lady did not have competent and independent advice, and it seems to me to be based on the fact that the solicitor did not say to her 'I advise you to do it, or I would not advise you to do it.' In my opinion that is not by any means necessary for the purpose of the advice. I think that a solicitor best gives advice when he takes care that the client understands fully the nature of the act and the consequence of that act. He is not bound to say 'I will advise you to do it, or if I were you I would not do it.' Nothing of that kind is necessary for competent and independent advice. All that is necessary is that some independent persons free from any taint of relationship, or of the consideration of interest which would affect the act, should put clearly before the person, what are the nature and consequence of that act." But it will be seen from the latter portion of that paragraph that the learned Judge was of opinion that the duty became more onerous in certain cases. He says "when a man takes upon himself the responsibility of advising those who are not adults, who are not persons capable of managing their own affairs in the broadest sense of the word, other conditions may arise." Now these Courts have always held that a pardanashin lady is not in the position of an adult male person or an adult, who is capable of managing his own affairs in the broad sense of the word. I need not refer to the rulings on the point. Their position is well-known. She is entitled to the protection which always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm.

The observations made by the learned Judge and relied upon by the Defendant had reference to the facts of the case before him. In it there was no question of fiduciary relationship. It was a gift from mother to son. The attorney who had acted was the attorney for the father, and in making a gift of settlement the lady had taken into consideration the wishes of the father. All the circumstances were known to all the parties. The matter had been duly deliberated upon by the grantor who knew her position and perfectly understood what she was doing. No new principle seems to have been enunciated in that case. All the decisions beginning from a very early period, have been that independent advice is absolutely necessary in such cases, and such advice is to be given at arms' length. See Mr. Justice Phear's observations in Kanai Lal Jowhari v. Kamini Debi (3). With regard to the duty of the solicitor to enquire into the pecuniary means of his client, I will refer to Wright v. Carter (4), where it is pointed out that it is the duty of a solicitor who is advising an intending donor or settlor under such circumstances to inform himself of the pecuniary means and prospects of his client with a view to advising him as to the expediency, or otherwise of the proposed gift or settlement." This clearly the attorney in the present case did not do. He had not placed himself in a position to do it. I find therefore that the gift was an improvident one and that the donor did not receive such advice as is required in such a case.

I however find the following facts in favour of the Defendant, namely, that the draft was explained to this lady. She was told what the effect of the deed was and its nature. I accept the evidence of Hari Nath Banerjee, who says that the Registrar asked her if she had executed the deed of gift and that she answered in the affirmative. I also find the account given by this lady in the witness-box unsatisfactory. Her evidence has evidently been shaped according to what she has, I believe, been told to be necessary to prove, and she has not hesitated to tell untruths. Her story that she was not told that she was being taken to an attorney to have the document prepared, and that she did not know that she was going to the Registration Office, which she called as garden house, are untrue.

I do not believe her when she says that the document was not explained to her. But however much I disbelieve her story in the witness-box, I have to see if the Defendant has properly discharged the onus. In Lyon v. Home (5), I find the learned Judge distrusted the Plaintiff's story as to how she had been induced to make the gift.

I must also allude to the production of an account book by this lady and an entry in it which she said, she made in it showing that the sum of Rs. 186 had been paid by her to the Defendant for the purpose of making "a will." She admitted in cross-examination that the entry was made only three or four months ago. The entry itself shows interpolations. It was evidently made for purposes of this case. This book shows that the lady can read and write a little and she can also add. This according to the Defendant proved that she was not ignorant and the fact that she kept an account shewed her business capacity. I am unable to draw the same inference. The accounts are kept in a very unbusiness-like way, and her knowledge of Bengali seems to be of a very elementary character. The book also shews that she lends out small sums of money on interest which when collected helps to maintain her, and support a cow which she keeps. Her average expenses came up to about 50 rupees a month and that some portion of it she probably derives from the sums she has lent out. The fact however remains that the house is her most valuable property and the only source of a permanent income. She has examined one witness, her tenant named Srikrishna Mukerjee, but I am unable to rely upon his testimony. As he said little of importance, I don't think it necessary to deal with his evidence any further. He pretended ignorance of several matters, specially about the institution of the suit which rather tended to show that he knew all about it, and that he was responsible for the absurd story told by the lady in the witness-box.

In this connection I may refer to an incident which occurred during the trial of the case. It was stated one morning that the case had been settled and a document written in Bengali with the signature of this lady was produced. That document showed that the lady could not have understood her position when she signed it. It authorised her attorney to sell the house at a figure mentioned in it and the proceeds of the sale were to be disposed of in paying the costs of both parties the amount to be paid to the Defendant being specifically mentioned. I enquired what the probable costs of the Plaintiff were and found that it left hardly anything for her at all. She said she had not realised that fact and had not been told. If she had understood the result of the settlement she would not have consented. Counsel on both sides agreed that no effect should be given to such a settlement and although the Defendant had given instruction to consent to the terms which had been formally proposed and accepted by him, his counsel refused to take any advantage of the circumstances. In this counsel upheld the best traditions of the bar.

I am referring to this incident to show how easily puṣṭanashin ladies in the position of the Plaintiff can be led to sign away their rights, even in matters of vital interest to them. It illustrates to my mind how easily they can be led or misled into such transactions. Everything was formally perfect, and yet it was conclusively shewn that the Plaintiff had not understood the effect of the proposed settlement. It also seemed to me that the price fixed for the sale of the house in the document was for the benefit of Srikrishna Mukherjee. It is all important in these cases therefore to ascertain how the intention to give was created and if the donor had exercised a free and unfettered judgment and realised the consequence of her act. See Huguenin v. Baseley (6), also Hall v. Hall (7). The same principle has been accepted and acted upon in our Courts. I have no doubt in my mind that her intention was created by the Defendant and his friends working upon her religious feelings, and at a time when she was in great mental distress and had also been ill.

The story that the Defendant was the Plaintiff's bhikshaputra has been put forward. It is mentioned in the deed of gift. The lady denies that he was her bhikshaputra. The Defendant gives one version of the matter which differs entirely from that of Khettra Mohan Bhattacharjee. Learned counsel for the Defendant conceded that the evidence about this was contradictory and unacceptable. It is impossible to attach weight to such evidence and to hold that the youngman was taken as the bhikshaputra of the Plaintiff. That the statement was introduced into the document shows some weight was sought to be attached to it in justification of the gift, perhaps to show that the intention to give some valuable property to such a person had been contemplated by the Plaintiff for a long time. It is clear from the letters Exs. 4A to 4G that this lady during her absence from Calcutta relied upon the Defendant to make realizations for her and to send her moneys. The letters also showed that she was in great distress. They are addressed to the Defendant in language which shows the respect which is due to a priest. The style is hardly that of one who had taken the Defendant as her bhikshaputra. I therefore reject this part of the Defendant's story.

The Defendant states that he never intended to turn out this lady from the house, that she was to be in possession of the house as long as she lived and it was not his intention to interfere with her collection of the rent. This he has repeated through his counsel. It is in evidence that even after the execution of the deed of gift the lady remained in possession, realized the rents, paid collectorate and municipal taxes and paid the expenses of repairs of a substantial character. If it was not the intention of the Defendant to turn her out why does not the deed provide for it. The attorney was not told of such an intention or of any tacit understanding between the parties that she was to be in possession during her life-time. The provisions of sec. 126 of the Transfer of Property Act could have been availed of to secure the lady's position, and although I am not prepared to go to the extent contended for on behalf of the Plaintiff that the absence of a power of revocation is enough to show that the document is invalid, I attach some importance to the fact of its absence. That I think is the result of the cases on this point, see Hall v. Hall (7). The attorney had not thought about the matter and the provisions of the section were not present to his mind. I also attach great weight to the fact that in one matter at least of great importance the document does not express the intention of one of the parties, namely, that of the acceptor. He has never treated himself or done any act to show that he was the owner. Long after the deed he came to live in it for a few days only and left it without demur because the lady insisted upon his leaving it even at a time when her feeling was ceasing to be friendly.

Under all these circumstances I hold that the Defendant has failed to discharge the onus, he has failed to show that the lady had or was in a position to exercise her free and unfettered judgment, and clearly understood what she was doing. The suit therefore succeeds, and I hold that the lady is entitled to the relief she has asked for, namely, that the document is to be set aside. Inasmuch as I disbelieve the evidence she has given I disallow her the costs of the days taken up by such evidence, allowing her only two days' costs of the hearing.

Mortgage by widow for legal necessity—Decree for foreclosure—Appeal by the widow—Continuance of the appeal by the daughter after her death pending the appeal—Application for substitution by reversionary heir, rejection of—Dismissal of appeal—Suit for redemption by reversionary heir—Decree in the previous foreclosure suit, if a bar—Decree on appeal, effect of—Decree against the widow, if binding upon reversioners.

Where a Hindu widow died during the pendency of an appeal by her against a decree for foreclosure upon a mortgage executed by her for legal necessity and the Court, upon applications by the widow's personal representative, her daughter, and also by the reversionary heir of her husband for leave to continue the appeal, erroneously decided in allowing the daughter to be substituted, and the daughter continued the appeal which was dismissed and subsequently the reversionary heir, the present Plaintiff, brought this suit for redemption of the mortgaged property, Held—That the decree in the foreclosure suit was no bar to the Plaintiff's claim to redeem as he was no party to it.

That the question of res judicata was to be determined with reference to the decree on appeal and not with reference to that of the first Court.

NOOR ALI CHOWHDURI v. KONI MEAH
(1) referred to.

Quære :—Whether a decree obtained in a suit against a Hindu widow to enforce a mortgage executed by herself will be binding as against the reversioner.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent from a decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 27th of March 1911, passed in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 465 of 1909.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

In default of the timely payment of a mortgage debt by the mortgagor, Bindubashini, widow of one Gunga Mohun, Girija Sundari, the mortgagee, brought a suit for foreclosure (being No. 332 of 1881), in which, after contest, she obtained a decree on the 6th February 1882. In this suit, Bindubashini's pleas were (1) that the katkobala was not genuine and (2) that no notice of foreclosure had been served on her. Both her pleas having failed, she appealed against the decree but died in Chait, 1288, B. S., during the pendency of the appeal (No. 77 of 1882). On her death, two rival claimants applied to be substituted in her place as Defendant-Appellant, viz., Joy Durga Dasi, her sonless widowed daughter (claiming under her Will) and Chunder Sekhar Bose, the father of the Plaintiff, as the next reversionary heir to Gunga Mohun's estate. The Court ordered substitution of Joy Durga's name in place of the deceased Appellant and disallowed Chandra Sekhar's petition on the ground that he had not then obtained a certificate under Act 27 of 1860. The appeal was subsequently dismissed on the 23rd June 1882, and Defendant No. 1 came into actual possession of the mortgaged property in Asar 1291, B. S. With regard to the representation of Gunga Mohun's estate, there was contest in the District Judge's Court (in Suit No. 50 of 1882) between Joy Durga, Chandra Sekhar and Dindoyal Bose, the adopted son of another step-brother of Gunga Mohun. In this suit, the rights between the parties were not determined but on the 14th November 1882 the Court granted probate of Bindubashini's Will to Joy Durga and a certificate under Act 27 of 1860 to Chandra Sekhar authorising the latter to collect the dues to Bindubashini's estate. Chandra Sekhar, it appears, took no steps to appeal against the order disallowing substitution of his name in the appeal case and he died in Pous 1291, B. S. After Chandra Sekhar's death, the Plaintiff brought a suit (No. 248 of 1885) against Girija Sundari for the setting aside of Bindubashini's kotkobala and for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property on the allegation that the kobala was fraudulent and made without legal necessity, Bindubashini having had no right to encumber her deceased husband's estate permanently. The suit was dismissed on the merits and though the Plaintiff carried his case up to the High Court, he did not succeed. In dismissing the Plaintiff's appeal, the High Court remarked "we pass no opinion as to any right that the Appellant may have to redeem."

The other facts of the case will appear from the judgment of MR. JUSTICE COXE, which was as follows :—

COXE, J.—This was a suit to redeem certain properties that had been mortgaged by a Hindu widow. During the widow's life-time the mortgagee issued a notice upon her under sec. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806; and thereafter brought a suit for recovery of possession which was decreed by the Munsif. Reading the judgment of the Munsif with the provisions of the Regulation it is clear that the mortgagee obtained against the widow a decree precluding her from redeeming the mortgage. After the decision by the Munsif, the widow appealed. In the course of the appeal she died and the present Plaintiff and one Joy Durga Dasi applied to be substituted as her representative. Joy Durga's application was granted and that of the Plaintiff refused. The appeal was dismissed. Thereafter the Plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of the property alleging that the mortgage was fraudulent and invalid and executed without legal necessity. That suit was dismissed and it was found that the mortgage had been executed for legal necessity and was a perfectly honest transaction.

The Plaintiff now brings this suit for redemption. It has been decreed by the Courts below. Defendant No. 1 appeals to this Court.

The first point taken is that as it has been settled between the parties that the mortgage was an honest mortgage and executed for legal necessity, the decree for foreclosure which the Defendant obtained against the widow is binding on the reversioners, and in support of this proposition reference has been made to several cases beginning with the case of Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Shiva Gunga (2). There appears to be plenty of authority for holding that where a decree has been obtained on a fair trial in a suit against a Hindu widow, the decree is effectual and operative as against the reversioners unless the decree can be impeached on some special ground. The last case which I have seen on the subject is the case of Lilabati Misra v. Bishun Chobey (3). It has been argued on behalf of the Respondent that these rulings only affect those cases in which a widow sues or is sued with respect to a mortgage executed by the last full owner and have no application to mortgages executed by the widow herself. Reference is made to a passage in Dr. Ghose's book on Mortgage in which the author quotes the decision of the present learned Chief Justice, then Mr. Justice Jenkins in Sreenath Das v. Haripada Mitra (4), that where the widow is the person who has created the charge there is no authority to show that she sufficiently represents the reversioners. This decision, however, though entitled to the greatest respect was not confirmed by the Appellate Bench, if I understand their judgments aright, and as a single Judge I cannot place it in competition with the decisions of the Benches to which I have referred. In the case of Radha Kissen v. Nauratan Lal (5), Mr. Justice Mookerjee adopted the view mentioned above that a decree against the widow binds the reversioners under the circumstances specified. He certainly held on other grounds that in that particular case the decree did not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit. But it does not appear ever to have been suggested that the principle did not apply, because the mortgage which was the subject of that suit had been executed by the widow herself. It appears to me therefore that if the former decision bound the widow it bound also the present reversioner. It is argued, however, that the decision had no such effect, because the widow died in the course of the appeal and was represented by a person who had no right to represent the estate in the hearing of the appeal and reference is made to the case of Harish Chandra Biswas v. Puri Das Das (6). That case appears to me to be wholly different. In that case one of the Defendants died in the course of the suit and a wrong person was brought on the record as his representative. But here the case is quite different. The present Defendant had obtained a decree. He was the Respondent in the appeal. No doubt it is the business of the Plaintiff or Appellant to see that he sues or appeals against the right person, but it cannot be said to be the duty of the Defendant or Respondent to see that he is sued or appealed against by the right person. The present Defendant had obtained a decree which, unless it was set aside by the Appellate Court, would be final and conclusive in his favour. The widow appealed. That appeal failed through no fault of this Defendant. I have been shown no authority for holding that because a wrong person represented the widow in that unsuccessful appeal, the present Defendant is thereby deprived of the whole value of the decree that he had obtained, and such a view seems to me unreasonable. It seems to me, therefore, now that it has been finally and conclusively settled that the mortgage was an honest transaction executed for legal necessity, that the decree for foreclosure which the Defendant obtained is sufficient to preclude the Plaintiff from bringing this suit for redemption.

Secondly, it has been contended that the suit is barred by sec. 43. As regards this point, I am inclined to think that the decision of the Court below is right and would refer to the case of Balmakund v. Musst Sangari (7). But in the view that I take of the first point, it is not necessary for me to go into this point.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs of all Courts.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The circumstances of this case are peculiar : one Gunga Mohun Bose died, and on his death his widow Bindubashini succeeded to a widow's interest in his estate. In 1877 she executed a mortgage in favour of Defendant No. 1 ; subsequently, the mortgagee took action under sec. 7 of Regulation XVII of 1806, and notwithstanding the argument that has been addressed to us, I see no reason to hold that there was any irregularity in those proceedings. As a sequel the mortgagee instituted a suit which resulted in a decree for foreclosure against the widow Bindubashini in 1882. The widow preferred an appeal, but while the appeal was pending she died, and the appeal was continued not by Gunga Mohun's reversionary heir but by the widow's legal personal representative, her daughter, and a decree was passed on appeal on the 23rd of June 1882, affirming that of the first Court. In 1884, the mortgagee obtained possession. A suit was instituted in 1886 by the present Plaintiff against the mortgagee, impugning the mortgage as fraudulent and not for legal necessity and therefore as being of no legal effect against him. That suit resulted in a dismissal which was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court and also by the High Court. It was determined in the lower Appellate Court that the foreclosure decree in the former suit did not operate as a bar against the Plaintiff, and the High Court in dealing with the matter said that it passed no opinion as to any right that the Appellant might have to redeem. The Plaintiff has now brought this present suit for redemption making as Defendant the original mortgagee who is still alive and a limited company who does not contest the Plaintiff's claim. Both the Court of first instance and lower Appellate Court decided in the Plaintiff's favour. Mr. Justice Coxe, sitting as a single Judge, has decided adversely to him and dismissed the suit. From his judgment the present appeal is preferred.

The only question that arises on this appeal is whether the result of the first of the suits that I have mentioned, the foreclosure suit, is a bar to the Plaintiff's claim. I have stated that the appeal in that suit was continued not by the reversionary heir on whom the estate devolved at the death of the widow but by the widow's daughter, and she did not in any sense represent the estate of Gunga Mohun Bose and had no interest in that estate. On the other hand, the present Plaintiff's father, the reversionary heir, was a person on whom it had devolved. He applied to be allowed to continue the appeal, but his attempt failed for a reason which was admittedly erroneous. The case was not treated as coming within the operation of sec. 367 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877, and we are free from any difficulty that section might create. The Plaintiff on whom, admittedly, (apart from foreclosure) the equity of redemption would have devolved, and in whom it would now be vested, would prima facie be entitled to redeem. And so the question arises whether he has been deprived of that right by the decree in the foreclosure suit. The decree in that suit was in the Court of first instance against the widow and it may be that this decree, had there been no appeal, would have been binding as against the reversioner, even though the mortgage was created by the lady herself. That is a point on which I express no opinion at this stage, because I do not think it is necessary and I reserve my opinion until occasion arises for its decision. But whatever may have been the effect of that decree, had it stood by itself, it was superseded by the decree passed on appeal. The decree of the Court of first instance could not in the circumstances be pleaded as res judicata, and the effect of a decree on appeal was indicated in Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah (1), which professed to follow earlier decisions. It is there pointed out that where there is a decree on appeal which confirms the decree against which the appeal is made, it is the appellate decree to which regard must be had, and the appellate decree supersedes the original decree. I would pause here for a moment to draw attention to a possible source of error in decrees of Appellate Courts by reason of failure to observe the provisions of the Code, and in this connection I will refer to the Code of 1882, which contains an expression of the law that is still applicable. By sec. 551 it is provided that in the circumstances there indicated the Court may dismiss the appeal. But where the case goes to a hearing, then the powers of the Court are defined in sec. 577 which provides not that the appeal is to be dismissed but that "the judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree against which the appeal is made." It may be that when the appeal is incompetent as being out of time or as coming within the provisions of sec. 586, the proper course will be to dismiss it. Apart from that, it seems to me that ordinarily the proper course is, as provided in the section, to confirm, vary or reverse the decree against which the appeal is made. But to return to the facts of this case, what is the answer to the right to redeem vested in the present Plaintiff? It is said the decree in the foreclosure suit is a bar. But that must be the decree in appeal, and to that decree the present Plaintiff was not a party nor was there any one with any interest in the estate, who was a party to the litigation at that stage. The person against whom that decree was passed was one who did not represent the estate but represented only the widow's personal interest. Therefore, the decree on appeal cannot afford an answer to the Plaintiff's claim to redeem. Admittedly if the suit had been commenced against the widow's representative, it would have been insufficient and it seems to me that it is equally insufficient when the only effective decree is one passed against a Defendant who did not represent the estate. I, therefore, think the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxé must be set aside and the decree of the lower Appellate Court restored.

The costs in the High Court must be borne by the Respondent, the original mortgagee.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Sib Chandra Palit and Nanda Lal Banerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and M. Nuruddin Ahmed for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant in this case was granted letters of administration to the estate of one Maula Bux and executed a bond in favour of the District Judge under sec. 78 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, for the due administration of the estate. As apparently he did not administer it properly the bond was assigned under sec. 79 of the Act to Gyasuddin, a son of Maula Bux. Gyasuddin however came to terms with the Appellant and did not sue on the bond. The widow and the other children of Maula Bux then sought to have the bond assigned to them. This has been granted by the District Judge and hence this appeal.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. We think this contention must prevail. Sec. 86 of the Act enacts that every order of a District Judge under the Act shall be subject to appeal to the High Court under the rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals. One of those rules is to be found in sec. 105 of the Code which lays down that save as otherwise expressly provided no appeal shall lie from any order. There is certainly no express provision in the Code for an appeal from an order assigning a bond. This seems to be in accordance with the view taken in Brojo Nath Pal v. Dasmoni Dasi (1) and Abhiram Das v. Gopal Dass (2). It was not taken in Umachurn v. Muktakeshi (3), but in that case the effect of the words "under the rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure" seems not to have been considered.

We think however that the order of the District Judge is altogether without jurisdiction and that we can accordingly revise it. Under sec. 78 the bond enured for the benefit of the District Judge. Under sec. 79 he can assign it on conditions. But there is no provision in the law which authorises him to assign it again while the first assignment is still in force. If there had been a condition that the assignment should be void if the assignee failed to comply with certain requirements, in that case a re-assignment might perhaps be possible. But there is no such condition in the present assignment. All that is stipulated is that any money decreed should be deposited in Court, a condition that can hardly be said to have been broken. No doubt the Respondents can apply to have the letters revoked, if they can make out a case under sec. 50 of the Act; and can sue the administrator. They can also hold Gyasuddin responsible as a trustee for them under sec. 79 for all that he has recovered. But they cannot obtain an assignment of the bond from the District Judge when it is no longer his to assign.

Accordingly the appeal is dismissed but in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction we set aside the order of the District Judge assigning the bond to the Respondents. They will be at liberty, if so advised, to proceed with the application for revocation of the letters of administration which the District Judge has left undetermined. We make no order as to costs.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 384 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J.
CHAPMAN, J.

BASANTI LAL and anr.,
Appellants,
v.

1912,
19, April. CHEDDU SINGH and ors.,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 145—Security for production of imprisoned debtor—Failure of surety to produce debtor when called upon—Security money if may be forfeited to Government—Attaching creditor, if entitled to the security.

A debtor who had been arrested and imprisoned in a civil jail was released upon his filing a petition in insolvency and upon a person depositing cash security for his production. After the petition in insolvency was dismissed the surety failed, when called upon, to produce the debtor. The Court thereupon ordered the security money deposited to be forfeited to the Government and dismissed the attaching creditor's application to have the money paid to him.

Held—That there was no power in the Court to declare a forfeiture in favour of the Government and that the security money should be paid to the decree-holder.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of August 1910 against an order of Mr. S. C. Mullick, District Judge of Zillah Gaya, dated the 14th of June 1910.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows:—

The Appellants in this case had obtained a decree against one Cheddi Halwai and in execution of that decree Cheddi Halwai was imprisoned in civil jail. Thereupon Cheddi made an application in insolvency and was released from civil jail on one Cheddu Singh furnishing cash security for Rs. 500. The insolvency proceedings continued for some time and ultimately on the 18th May 1910 the District Judge rejected the insolvency application of Cheddi with costs. On all the dates including the last date Cheddi was duly produced before the Court. On the 23rd May 1910 Cheddu Singh applied to withdraw the money. On the 24th May the District Judge issued notices calling upon Cheddi Halwai to surrender and Cheddu Singh to produce Cheddi upon the application of the decree-holders Appellants. Cheddu Singh appeared and pleaded that he was under no liability to produce Cheddi as he stood surety for the production of Cheddi till final orders had been passed on the insolvency petition and he had produced Cheddi on all days till the date of the final order when the decree-holders omitted to take any proceedings against him. He therefore contended that on his having produced Cheddi on the date of the last order his liability was at an end and he was entitled to withdraw the security he had deposited.

The learned District Judge overruled the objections of the surety and gave him one day's time to produce the debtor. On his failure to produce the debtor on that day the learned District Judge on the 3rd June passed the following orders: "Cheddu Singh appears and says that as the judgment-debtor ran away last night he is not able to produce him. Cheddu Singh's security money Rs. 500 . . . is therefore forfeited."

On the 4th June the creditor-Appellants filed a petition praying for the payment of the deposited money to them under sec. 145, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned District Judge dismissed the claim and in the course of his order observed, "I do not think, the law quoted on behalf of Basanti Lal has any application to the present case. Cheddu Singh did not stand surety for the payment of any money but for the production of the judgment-debtor, Cheddi Halwai, whenever wanted by the Court. As Cheddu failed to produce the man the money is to be forfeited to the Government and not to the creditor."

Against this order the creditors appealed to the High Court on the grounds inter alia that the Court below had no jurisdiction to order that the money be forfeited to Government and that the creditors at whose instance the debtor was imprisoned were entitled to get the money.

Babu Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Mitter and Harihar Prosad Singh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This I think is a very clear case; money was deposited by the surety as a security for the benefit of the decree-holder whose rights were interfered with to enable the judgment-debtor to make an application in insolvency with a view to his protection from arrest. The insolvency application failed, and so it became incumbent upon the surety to produce the debtor before the Court. This he failed to do, and in the circumstances the Officiating District Judge has determined that the sum of Rs. 500 deposited by the surety is forfeited to the Government. The Secretary of State has been represented before us and the learned pleader tells us—I think most properly—that he leaves the matter in the hands of the Court. It is to my mind obvious that there was no power in the Court to declare a forfeiture in favour of the Government. The surety was anxious to suggest that his suretyship did not extend beyond the pendency of the insolvency proceedings. But he has not appealed from the order adjudicating upon this point adversely to him so that we could not give effect to it, even if we thought there was merit in the contention. We must set aside the order under appeal and direct that the sum of Rs. 500 be paid to the decree-holder.

We make no order as to costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), secs. 46, 47, 48, 50—Negotiable instrument if may be transferred by registered deed of gift—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 123—Mode in which transferee may enforce his rights—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92—Oral evidence to prove deed of gift to be donatio mortis causa.

When the holder of a Government Promissory note purported to transfer it to another by a registered deed of gift,

Held—That though there was no endorsement and delivery as contemplated by the Negotiable Instruments Act, there was a valid transfer of the document as a chattel, and the transferee was entitled to it and to the property referred to in it.

[How such a voluntary transferee is to enforce recognition of his title and payment of the note, not decided.]

Delivery of the property is not necessary where the gift is by a registered instrument.

Oral evidence is not admissible to prove that a document which in terms is an out-and-out gift was really meant to be a donatio mortis causa.

This was an appeal preferred on the 31st of August 1909 against the decree of Mr. F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 7th of July 1909, confirming the decree of Babu Anil Chandra Dutta, Munsif of Sealdah, dated the 31st of March 1909.

The Appellant was in possession of a Government promissory note standing in the name of one Soudamini Debi, who, he alleged had transferred the document to her before her death in 1884, by a registered deed of gift. He also alleged that the promissory note was handed over to him in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. In 1907, he applied for succession certificate in respect of the note. The Respondent thereupon also made a similar application and it was granted whilst Appellant's application was refused. The Respondent then sued for the recovery of the note upon the establishment of the Plaintiff's title by heirship or in the alternative for a decree for principal and interest due on the note amounting to Rs. 954-14. The suit was decreed by both the Courts below, the lower Appellate Court finding, that the gift was not complete as it appeared from the evidence of Appellant's ammuktear that Soudamini had stated at the time the deed was drawn up that if she should live the note should be given back to her, and that there was no proof of delivery of the note to the Appellant, his allegation that it was delivered before the Sub Registrar being disbelieved.

The Defendant preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case a Hindu widow shortly before her death, transferred a Government promissory note to the Defendant, her brother's son, by means of a registered deed of gift, and the finding is that she was competent to dispose of the note as it was part of her stridhan. The Plaintiffs, who are her heirs, have attacked the transfer as invalid and sought to recover the note or its value, with the interest accrued, from the Defendant. The Court of first instance held that, in the absence of endorsement and delivery, there was no valid transfer, and it decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court appears to have held that the note could have been validly transferred without indorsement by delivery of possession with intent to transfer; but it affirmed the decree on the ground that, although possession had been delivered at the time of registration, the lady did not intend to part with the property in the instrument.

The appeal to this Court raises two points of law. The first is as to whether a negotiable instrument such as this Government promissory note can be transferred at all save by indorsement and delivery of possession, as contemplated by the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. The answer to this question must, we think, be in the affirmative. No doubt, secs. 46 and 48 of the special Act referred to provide that a negotiable instrument payable to order may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, and it is clear that the privileges of a "holder" secured to the transferee by that Act can be obtained only in the way prescribed by it. But the Negotiable Instruments Act of 1881, like the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (15 and 46 Vict., c. 61) deals entirely with transfer by negotiation, that is to say, with transfer according to the Law Merchant; and, as pointed out in Chalmers on Bills of Exchange, 237 at p. 239, it leaves untouched the rules of the general law which regulate the transmission of negotiable instruments and their transfer as chattels. The transferee under the general law would, of course, not be in the privileged position of a "holder" under the special Act, but would be merely in the position of the transferee of any ordinary chattel and have no better title than his transferor. But he would have a good title to the property if his transferor had such a title, and this has been recognised in several cases in England. Thus it was held in In re Bassington and Barton (1), that the holder of a note payable to order might transfer his title to another by a separate writing assigning it to the latter; and in Veal v. Veal (2), it was decided that the holder of such a note could pass the title by giving it to another in contemplation of death. In the case of a transfer for value without indorsement, the transferee would in England, under sec. 30 (4) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, be able to require the transferor or his representative to complete the transfer by indorsement; and elsewhere a Court of Equity would doubtless compass the same end. In the case of a voluntary transfer it is difficult to say what the exact position of the transferee would be, and it is observed by Sir Mackenzie Chalmers—see p. 144 of the work cited already—that the law requires reconsideration. But with that problem we are not here concerned, and we think that we need not consider further how a voluntary transferee could, for practical purposes, enforce recognition of his title and payment of the note. But that he is entitled to the piece of paper and to the property referred to in it seems clear; and this is the view taken by the Madras High Court in Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar (3) and also, as it seems to us, in Whistler

(1) 2 Sch. & Lef. 112 (1804).

(3) L. L. R. 28 Mad. 544 (1905).

BENODE KISHORE GOSWAMI v. ASUTOSH MUKHOPADHYA.

v. Forster (4). We are disposed to hold then that, if the note in this case was transferred in accordance with provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, being moveable property within the purview of that Act, read with sec. 1 (5) of the General Clauses Act, 1868, the enactment in force in 1882, the Defendant was entitled to retain the note as against the Plaintiffs, and the latter's suit ought to have been dismissed.

As to the remaining question raised by the appeal, it is clear, on the findings of both the Courts below, that the deed of gift exhibited was executed in accordance with the requirements of sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. It appears to have been signed on behalf of the donor, Soudamini Debi; it bears the signatures of three witnesses; and it was duly registered. It has been faintly suggested that the learned District Judge, by referring, on appeal to the fact that the "lady was illiterate," meant to throw some doubt on the factum of execution by a purdanashin woman; but there is not a trace of any such suggestion in the pleadings or anywhere else, and we cannot listen to it now. The instrument is of the simplest character, and it is in evidence that it was read over to Soudamini before she caused it to be signed; while the judgment of the first Court shows that the learned Munsif was satisfied that she was well aware of what she was doing and acted with marked deliberation. We must take it, then, that the deed was properly executed.

The lower Appellate Court, however, has found that "there is no proof of any delivery of possession of the note to the Appellant with the intention of transferring title in the note from the indorsee to the Appellant," and that, "if there was any delivery of the note at all, that delivery was in bailment only, and not in transfer of title." This finding is, we think, open to criticism on two grounds. In the first place, it is based entirely on the statement of the lady's ammuktear that, at the time of execution of the deed, Soudamini made the verbal stipulation that, if she lived, it would be given back to her, and it is a question how far such a statement should have been admitted in evidence at all. In the second place, even if this additional verbal stipulation be taken into account, the fact remains that the lady did die, the stipulation has fallen to the ground, and nothing remains but the instrument itself, which is, on the face of it, an out-and-out deed of gift. And, lastly, the whole of the learned District Judge's enquiry into the matter of delivery is supererogatory; for no delivery was necessary to complete the transfer, since a gift of moveable property may, under sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, be effected either by registered instrument or by delivery. It has been suggested that the gift was a donatio mortis causa and that, therefore, the application of sec. 123 of the Act is barred by sec. 129: but there is nothing in this point. The deed is a gift, pure and simple, and the evidence as to Soudamini's verbal stipulation at the time of execution cannot be used to vary its terms and convert it into a gift in contemplation of death. At most, that evidence would be admissible only to show that there was an additional stipulation for a reconveyance in a certain event; but the gift was a complete gift in presenti.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decrees of both the Courts below discharged, and the Respondents' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

LALAN MALLIK and

v.

KING-EMPEROR.

Accomplice, corroboration of—Agreement between statement of approver and confessions of accused made at different times and places without collusion—Confession by an accused to a private person immediately after the occurrence before the arrival of the police, but retracted afterwards, value of, as corroboration of an approver as against the makers and against the co-accused—Approver's evidence credited by the Judge and assessors—Conviction on uncorroborated evidence of accomplices, legality of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 114, Illust. (b), 133.

A confession made to a private person, immediately after the occurrence and before the arrival of the police, which was repeated two days later to a first class Magistrate, but was retracted four months after—the story told at the retraction being disbelieved by the Court—was held sufficient corroboration of the approver as against the maker.

Under sec. 133 of the Evidence Act a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. To justify the High Court in setting aside the conviction it is necessary to show not only that there is no corroboration, but that the Judge, taking all the evidence together, was wrong in acting on it. Where, immediately after a dacoity and before the arrival of the police, one of the accused who had been caught made a confession to a private person, naming the other persons concerned in it except two, one of whom he named two days after in his confession to the Magistrate, which agreed with the evidence subsequently given by the informer, both the confessions being afterwards retracted, and another accused made a confession naming all the persons mentioned by the approver, the two accused and the latter having been arrested at different times and places, and there was evidence that some of the dacoits were seen in company together shortly before the dacoity and that they were absent from their homes shortly after it :

Held—That the confessions of the two accused and the other facts were sufficient corroboration of an approver, who had been believed by the Judge and assessor, as against the co-accused who had not made confessions.

This was an appeal against the order passed by Mr. A. R. Edwards, Officiating Sessions Judge of Faridpur, dated the 19th of June 1911.

The nine Appellants were tried by the Sessions Judge of Faridpur, with the aid of Assessors, under secs. 395 and 396 of the Penal Code, and convicted and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under each section. The sentences were directed to run concurrently, and were commuted to transportation for the same period. The Assessors found the Appellants, Lalan Mallik and Sajani, guilty, and acquitted the rest. They believed that Lalan was caught almost red-handed, that his confession on arrest was made to a private individual and recorded on the night of the dacoity and was voluntary, that the confession of Sajani was also voluntary, and that police oppression was not proved in either case. As to the approver, they thought that his evidence was true, but that it was doubtful whether he had given the names of the dacoits correctly.

It appeared that about midnight, on the 6th December 1910, a dacoity was committed in the house of one Bistoo in Mirgi Bazar, within the jurisdiction of the Pangsa Thana, by a body of men who were residents of villages some 12 miles distant within the jurisdiction of the Balia-kundi Thana. The men had their faces covered, and one of them carried a gun. One of the dacoits, Lalan Mallik, fell into a hole as he was running away, and was captured and taken to Bistoo's godown where he was interrogated by the villagers. He made a confession giving the names and villages of the present Appellants, except Pocha Mandal and Gunga Charan, and of eleven others as having been engaged on the dacoity. It was recorded at 1 A.M. by Buzlur Rahman, a resident of Mirgi. While it was being taken down a chowkidar was despatched to the thana to lay a first information which was recorded at 9 A.M. on the 7th, and which referred to the statement of Lalan and the fact of his having named the dacoits. The Sub-Inspector of Pangsa came on the spot at 4-30 P.M. on the 7th, when Buzlur made over the statement to him, and the Sub-Inspector of Balia-kundi came the next day. On the 9th Lalan made a detailed confession to a first class Magistrate giving an account of the dacoity and naming the persons concerned therein, including Pocha whom he had not mentioned previously. The police then searched for the persons named by Lalan but they were not found in their villages. Biswanath was arrested on the 16th December, Gouri Charan and Ganga Charan on the 18th, Pocha Mandal on the 29th, Sajani on the 3rd January 1911, Reajuddi on the 25th, Bepin Mandal on the 7th February, Jagadish on the 18th, and Nabadwip early in March. On the 20th February Jagadish, who was afterwards admitted as an approver, made a long and detailed confession to a Magistrate giving the names and villages of 19 persons, explaining in detail how eight of the dacoits met at his house and then proceeded to Mirgi, meeting eleven others on the way, narrating their doings on the way, and detailing his own movements between the 7th December 1910 and 18th February 1911. Sajani also made a confession on the 15th January 1911 giving the names of all the Appellants including Pocha and Gunga. Lalan retracted his confession on the 20th April 1911, and stated to the same Magistrate to whom he had previously made his confession that he had gone to a fair, and was seized by some persons unknown on his way back.

There was no direct evidence of identification of any of the dacoits, but Lalan, Reajuddi, Sajani, and two others not before the Court, were seen together by a witness Subdar Hossein just before the dacoity: while another witness deposed that he saw Lalan, Reajuddi, Sajani, Bepin, and three others, not accused in the present case, sitting close together just before dark on the day of the dacoity.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal for the Appellants.—Lalan was arrested by the chowkidar before he made his statement: the daffadar was also present. Hence Lalan was in police custody and his confession to the villagers is inadmissible. Apart from this the statement may have been concocted after the arrival of the Pangsa Sub-Inspector. The approver was under the influence of the Balia-kundi police at the time of his statement to the Magistrate. The case of Emperor v. Nani Gopal Gupta (1) summarizes the law as to accomplices' evidence, confessions and police verifications. There is no evidence of identification and no corroboration. The confessions are inadmissible, and police verification has been condemned: See Jamiruddi Masalli v. Emperor (2).

Mr. Arthur Caspersz for the Crown.—The case is governed by sec. 9 read with secs. 114, Illust. (b) and 133 of the Evidence Act. Lalan's statement made before the police arrived is relevant on the question of identity. If he and Jagadish had called each other by name while running away, and several persons had overheard them, their evidence would be admissible under sec. 9, Illust. (f). The names given to Buzlur were of persons resident many miles distant and not known in Mirgi Bazar. The evidence of the witnesses concerned in the recording of the statement corroborates the statement of the approver. It is noteworthy that the Assessors and the Judge both believed that Lalan's confession and the approver's story were true, and that there was no possibility of concert between these two or of police concoction in either case.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

HARINGTON, J.—In this case, the nine Appellants have been convicted under secs. 395 and 396 of the Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to ten years' transportation each. The Assessors agreed that Lalan and Sajani were guilty, but, while acquitting the remaining seven prisoners, they expressed the opinion that the deposition of the approver was true, but were doubtful as to whether he had given the names of the dacoits correctly. They also expressed an opinion that Lalan was caught red-handed, and that the confession which he made on the spot was made to a private person and was not obtained by force.

The learned Vakil who appears for the Appellants has taken us at very great length through the evidence of upwards of fifty witnesses who were heard in the course of the case. His object in doing so is not clear because it is conceded by the learned Vakil that it has been established, without any shadow of doubt, that the occurrence took place, and that the only question is whether the evidence of the approver has been sufficiently corroborated to make it safe to uphold the conviction.

The facts that were accepted by the Judge and the Assessors are that, on the night of the 6th—7th of December last year, a large gang of dacoits made an attack on Bistoo's house at Mirgi. Bistoo and another man were sleeping in a verandah. They were assaulted and the dacoits endeavoured with an axe to break into the house. Before they could effect their purpose, the neighbours came up and there was a fight and the dacoits were driven off; but they were not driven off until they had used a gun which was carried by one of them. Bistoo and several other persons received gun-shot wounds, a man named Mahadeo being so severely injured that he died of the effects a short time afterwards. One of the dacoits, a man named Lalan, fell into a hole near the bank of a khal as he was running away, and was captured by one Ahmed and two other persons and brought back to Bistoo's godown. There he gave the names of certain other members of the party of the dacoits. While he was doing this, a chowkidar was sent away to lay the first information. As a result of the information received from Lalan, efforts were made to arrest the persons whose names he had given; but, they were not to be found in their villages. Not till the 16th of December was Biswanath arrested, then on the 18th Gour Charan was brought by his father and Ganga Charan was caught, on the 29th Pocha Mandal was captured, on January 3rd Sajani, on January 25th Reajuddi, on February 7th Bepin, on February 18th Jagadish who afterwards turned informer, and, in the early part of March, the last prisoner Nabadwip was taken into custody.

A great deal of the evidence which was read dealt with the events that took place when the attack was made in Bistoo's house, but no single one of the dacoits was identified during the attack because they had taken the precaution of arranging their pugris so as to conceal their faces and it was on the capture of Lalan that it was possible to ascertain the names. With regard to Lalan it should be noticed that he appears to have disclosed no defence at all until April 20th, 1911, when before a first class Magistrate, he stated that he went to a fair and that he was seized by persons he did not know on his way back. He had already made to that same gentleman, on December 9th, 1910, a long detailed confession giving an account of the dacoity. I entirely disbelieve the story about his return from the mela. If there was any truth in it, it would have been stated at once, and Lalan would not have taken time from December to April to think out the story. I have no doubt it was an invention concocted as soon as he regretted having made the confession which he did as to his proceedings in the dacoity. This confession is ample evidence to corroborate the approver and his conviction must be affirmed.

Another of the Appellants, Sajani, has made a confession which has been accepted by the Assessors and it is ample evidence to corroborate Jagadish's evidence against him. The law as to an accomplice's evidence is clearly and explicitly laid down in sec. 133 of the Evidence Act which provides that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person and that a conviction shall not be illegal merely because the evidence of the accomplice is uncorroborated. In the present case, therefore, to justify the Appellants in asking us to set aside the conviction, they must shew not only that there is no corroboration but that the Judge taking all the evidence together, was wrong in acting on it. Now, the informer Jagadish was arrested on the 18th of February. He made his statement on the 20th. It is a very long and detailed statement and is one which it is extremely unlikely that he would be able to invent. When Jagadish went into the witness-box, he narrated his story in a way which commended itself to those who heard him giving the evidence. He gave the names of no fewer than 19 persons, some Hindus and some Mahomedans. They were inhabitants of different villages and although Reajuddi, Pocha Mandal and Bepin suggest that there was enmity between themselves and Jagadish, there appears to be no evidence to support the suggestion nor does there appear to be any reason whatever for Jagadish's desiring to implicate any one of the particular persons whose names he had given. He described how the 8 people, amongst whom were Sajani and Lalan, assembled in his bari and how they went on to Budhai Mandal's gulli, where 11 other persons were waiting, amongst whom were the other 7 out of the nine Appellants.

NOTICE.

The High Court, Appellate Side, will be closed, on Monday, the 3rd June, 1912, being the day fixed by the Government of India for the celebration of the Birthday of he King-Emperor.

HIGH COURT,
Appellate Side,
The 15th May, 1912. }

H. T. CULLIS,
Registrar.

THE HIGH COURT ON ALL ITS SIDES, WITH offices, will remain closed on the 3rd of June next for the celebration of the King-Emperor's birthday.

THE POLICE TORTURE CASE WHICH WAS CONCLUDED at the Sessions of the Calcutta High Court, on Wednesday last, reflects great credit on all who were concerned in this judicial enquiry of great public importance. The jury in this case of whom, with one exception, all were Europeans, deserve great credit for being singularly free from bias either in favour of or against the accused policemen or the European Inspector of Police who were under trial before them. Like good men and true, they did not allow any considerations to influence their mind except what was disclosed by the evidence at the trial. We have heard of the jury in other parts of India being at times influenced by racial or executive bias. But this cannot surely be said of the Calcutta jury, whether European or Indian, who have seldom allowed any consideration other than that of justice to influence them in their verdict. The present is a notable instance which jurymen all over India would do well to emulate.

POLICE TORTURE FOR EXTORTING INFORMATION or confession has formed the subject-matter of common complaint and discussion in the public press, in Council Chambers and in Parliament, notably of late, though the evil is not certainly of recent origin. There are those who believe it to be a universal practice amongst the Police in this country and there are others who allege that torture is by no means so common as it is often represented to be. These academic discussions have not carried us very far in putting any check on this pernicious practice, even assuming that it has existed only to a moderate extent. A single case like the one that has just been threshed out in open Court and in which justice has been meted out to the offenders would have a more deterrent effect than any departmental measures and action however severe or stringent. Such measures never see the light and affect only the person or persons concerned and do not serve as a warning or example to the Police as a body. The jury have always been the custodians of public liberty and the fact that they have by a majority of 8 to 1 given their verdict against torture or its abetment finding any place in the mode of police investigation is of far greater moment than many an assurance in Parliament and speeches in Council.

WE MUST ALSO CONGRATULATE THE POLICE Commissioner and the Presidency Magistrates for the attitude of detachment and strict impartiality with which they have carried on the investigations in this case. To give them the credit that is due to them we must briefly note how the case came before the Courts. On the 4th of March last a theft had taken place in the godowns of Jodhan Dhoie in the Fort William. On the 5th information was given to the Police. One Ananta who was residing in the Fort without a pass was arrested. On the 9th Jhinku Ojha and Nageswar Ojha who were also residing in the Fort, but with passes, were arrested. On the 12th Ananta and Nageswar were placed before Mr. Keays, the 2nd Presidency Magistrate, for trial but not Jhinku who was placed by the Police in the witness-box for deposing against the two accused. Jhinku, however, complained before the Magistrate from the witness-box that he knew nothing about the case and that he and Nageswar had been severely beaten and otherwise maltreated by the Police for extorting confession while in custody. Mr. Keays finding marks on the body of Nageswar reported the matter to the Police Commissioner and Sir Fredrick Halliday forwarded Mr. Keays' letter to Mr. Swinhoe, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, for judicial inquiry. Mr. Swinhoe thereupon asked Mr. Bagchi, the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, to investigate into the matter and report. Mr. Bagchi went to jail and obtained the statements of Nageswar and Jhinku and reported that there seemed to be truth in the allegations. The Chief Presidency Magistrate then took up the case, recorded evidence and committed Inspector Heelis, Writer Constable Narayan Chandra Das and Head Constables Amrita Chakravarti and Abdul Sattar Khan, to the Court of Sessions charging them with having tortured the complainants for obtaining confession and information and for the abetment of such torture

THE ATTITUDE OF THE POLICE AUTHORITIES throughout the case has, as is well-known, been one of non-interference. We have seen, however, how promptly Sir Fredrick Halliday forwarded the case for judicial enquiry before the Chief Presidency Magistrate. We are of opinion that he acted very properly in directing the Police not to interfere in the case in any way. For, if the prosecution had failed, it might have created a public impression that the failure was due to Police interference. We are glad to find that the public are at one with the learned Chief Justice in absolving the Police authorities in Calcutta of any sinister suggestions with regard to the matter. We ought, however, to mention that the charges at the trial as also some other facts disclosed in the case such as the interpolations in the Station Register and the Division Register have brought serious discredit on the methods of the Subordinate Police in Calcutta. We are sure that the lessons of this case will not be lost on them and that the superior authorities will make every endeavour to improve the morals and methods of the Police force in Calcutta. We have said that the jury have returned a verdict in this case to which no exception can be taken and we must say in conclusion that the sentences meted out to the offenders are quite deterrent without leaning on the side of severity. The trial and its result has, we are glad to note, produced an excellent impression in the country.

NOTWITHSTANDING THE THEORY OF RELIGIOUS efficacy there can be no question that even in orthodox Hindu minds the secular aspects of adoption, marriage, inheritance and succession ordinarily loom as large as in that of any other mortal. It may be that beyond the present material felicities that flow from them, a Hindu looks forward to some spiritual benefits that are likely to bless his soul in the next world, but that does not make these institutions any the less secular. That the religious aspects of such secular institutions linger more in theory than in actual intention may also be presumed from the fact that a sonless Hindu without property hardly ever thinks of making or authorising an adoption. Things might have been slightly different in 1867 when Raja Raghubar Singh, the deceased husband of Rani Dharam Kunwar, the Appellant in the Privy Council case reported in this issue (p. 675), died leaving authority to the Appellant to adopt "some boy" and, in case of his death, another. It is quite evident that the Raja though in some degree was solicitous for the benefit of his soul in the other world, was by no means less anxious for the preservation of the family name and prestige in this.

THE WIDOW WHO HAD SUCCESSIVELY ADOPTED four sons, having fallen out with the last and the only surviving adopted son, sought to set aside his adoption as not being within the terms of the authority left to her by her husband. The Courts in India without deciding this question dismissed her suit on the simple but sufficient ground that she was estopped from challenging the validity of an adoption which she herself had brought about by representing that she had the requisite authority, the adoption having materially affected the position of the adopted son.

BEFORE THEIR LORDSHIPS OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE, Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., for the widow raised what from the purely religious standpoint would seem to be a formidable objection to the decision of the Courts in India. This eminent counsel argued that a "son by estoppel would be no son under the Hindu law," and added, as a natural sequence to the spiritual theory, that it would be "terribly disappointing to the deceased if the law of estoppel were held to prevail in the next world." His apprehension on behalf of the deceased Raja's soul drew from Lord Robson a dictum which would leave the path of our future spiritual salvation unobstructed, since his Lordship declared that the law of estoppel would affect transactions in this world alone. It is indeed very reassuring for us all to find that the judgments of Courts here below will not work either as estoppel or res judicata against us in the next world and that we may, if we must, have a trial there de novo.

TURNING TO THE SECULAR SIDE OF THE CASE WE are glad that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have affirmed the decision of the Courts in India dismissing the Plaintiff's suit upon the merits as well as on the ground of estoppel. It is worthy of note also that their Lordships interpreted the desire of the deceased to adopt a son not in the narrow and literal sense of the words used but in a wider sense so as to give effect to his wishes as expressed to his wife for the perpetuation of his name and the prestige of his house as also for the performance of his shradh. A further commendable feature of the judgment is that the finding of their Lordships on the evidence closes the door to further litigation by persons other than the widow and claiming to be the reversionary heirs of the deceased Raja. It is always a satisfaction to us to find a Court of Appeal putting its seal of finality to a litigation. This is all the more so in this case because notwithstanding all the learned argument about spiritual benefit or religious merit advanced on behalf of the Rani we singularly miss any considerations of religion or morality in the initiation of this suit by her. Nor do we meet in her any qualms of conscience, religious or moral, in carrying it on to its bitter end, impelled by the common human failing of anger and spite. The Hindu spiritual theory sounds very fine in the abstract but the cases which are often sought to be propped up by it are mostly a bitter satire on it.

THE RISK OF HASTILY PASSING DECREES BY DEFAULT in undefended cases is well illustrated by the case of Rex v. Castiglione and Porteous, which recently came up before the Criminal Court of Appeal in England. Castiglione was a picture dealer and he devised a very ingenious means of selling out his stock of pictures by fabricating some fictitious legal proceedings. He saw the Defendant Porteous, a solicitor, and with his assistance instituted a suit in the High Court in the name of a fictitious Plaintiff against an imaginary Defendant. Porteous made an affidavit that the process was properly served on the Defendant and a judgment by default was passed in the suit. Execution was then taken out and some of the stock of this resourceful picture dealer was attached as belonging to the fictitious Defendant. They were then sold by the Sheriff with all the solemnity of a sale held under the order of the High Court and attracted a lot of customers. But the trick was afterwards discovered and Porteous was indicted for perjury for having sworn a false affidavit and Castiglione for aiding, abetting and suborning him to commit perjury. A very ingenious defence was raised before the Appeal Court. It was contended that as the charge was one of perjury in the course of judicial proceedings, the proceedings in this case being wholly fictitious and the Plaintiff and the Defendants being imaginary persons, the affidavit and allegations in the case were only imaginary and did not constitute or amount to perjury in the proper sense of the term. The Court of Appeal found both the accused guilty relying on the Perjury Act of 1911 which provides that whoever wilfully swears falsely in any oath or affidavit shall be guilty of perjury as if he sworn in judicial proceedings.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

Land Acquisition Act, sec. 32—Land dedicated to religious or charitable purposes—Disposal of compensation for.

Land dedicated for religious and charitable purposes is land which belongs to a person (the shebait) who has no power to alienate it and therefore when such land is acquired the compensation money should be invested under sec. 32, Land Acquisition Act. On the question whether any part of the invested funds may be available for necessary repairs to the rest of the debutter property, as the Legislature in sec. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act adopted the language of sec. 69, Land Clauses Consolidation Act, in pari materia English decisions on that Act prior to the Indian Act could be relied upon to understand the intention of the Legislature. The Court therefore considered the principles laid down by English decisions on the question as to how far the capital may be available for repairs and held that the position of the parties ought to be the same as if the land had never been converted into money and as the shebait was competent to alienate a portion of the land for the preservation of the buildings he should also be held entitled to withdraw the compensation money for such purpose.

The land acquisition Judge has power to deal with an application to have part of the invested funds for necessary repairs as under sec. 32 of the Act the fund is placed in the custody of that Court and the jurisdiction is by implication conferred on it to deal with all questions that may arise as to the application of the fund.—Mookerjee and Casperss, Jf.

KAMINI DEBI v. PRAMATHA NATH MOOKERJEE, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 33.

Easement—Right to light and air, extent of—Measure of nuisance.

The rules governing right to light and air in India must be ascertained by reference to the English law on the subject before 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 71. Sec. 26 of the Limitation Act only provides for the acquisition of the right and does not define its extent. The extent of the right is indicated by the fact that the remedy for interference with the right is not an action for trespass but one for nuisance.

What is or is not a nuisance must largely be determined by the facts of each case and before relief is granted it must be shown that there has been sensible privation of light sufficient to render occupation of the house uncomfortable and less fit for use. In determining this the character of the previous enjoyment must be taken into consideration but that is not the decisive measure of the injury which constitutes nuisance. In considering the question as to whether there has been a nuisance by the deprivation of light the other sources of light of the Plaintiff's dwelling which may prevent the obstruction from diminishing the quantity of light in such manner as to make it less fit for use may be taken into account, provided that the light from other sources has been acquired by prescription and is not liable to be cut off without remedy being left to the Plaintiff. Where therefore it was found that though there had been an abridgment of direct light from the east by the Defendants erecting a building, there remained a sufficiency of light for the ordinary purposes of the Plaintiff's house and there was not such material detraction from the value of the rooms as to materially affect the suitability of the premises for the purposes for which they might be reasonably regarded as available, the Court held that there was no nuisance.—Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J.

PAUL v. ROBSON, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 59.

Prohibitory order, Court if may issue on a debtor of judgment-debtor outside jurisdiction in execution of a decree.

In execution of a decree for money a Court has no jurisdiction to issue a prohibitory order under Or. 21, r. 46, C. P. C., on a debtor of the judgment-debtor residing outside the local jurisdiction of that Court in respect of property outside its jurisdiction. A Court has on a proper view of secs. 38 and 39 of the Code no jurisdiction to attach property outside its jurisdiction. The same principle is applicable to the attachment of a debt. The decree must be transferred to the Court having local jurisdiction to attach a debt in execution of it. Any loss for delay may be avoided by the procedure of attachment by precept under sec. 46, C. P. C.

There is no analogy between an attachment before judgment and an attachment in execution of a decree and the fact that there may be attachment out of jurisdiction before judgment is no argument for similar attachment in execution.

The mere fact that the garnishee did not object to a prohibitory order issued by the same Court, in a previous execution proceeding which proved infructuous is no bar to his urging any objection to a fresh attachment in a new proceeding.—Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES"]

SIR,—I should like to point out a mistake on page clxii of the issue of your valuable paper for 13th May, 1912. You have printed the communique of the Legislative Department thus: "the Viceroy in consultation with his constitutional advisers." In all the other copies of the communique I have seen, the last word was in the singular. There is a world of meaning in the use of the singular number to those who know what really happened.

EJECTMENTS UNDER THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT AND THE OLD RENT LAW. By Janaki Nath Mukherjee, Government Pleader, Alipur. Published by C. L. Chatterjee, Saraswati Press, 76, Amherst Street, Calcutta. 1912. Paper-bound 2-4; cloth-bound 2-8.

The law of ejectment (as that term is used in this country) embraces a variety of subjects. The author has taken up for treatment in this book the law of ejectment as affecting the relation of landlord and tenant in cases of what may be comprehensively (though not quite accurately) be described as the agricultural tenancies of Bengal. This would cover the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act bearing directly or indirectly on the subject and the case-law that has grown up around them and similar provisions of the old rent law. A particular provision of the Act is first set out and is then followed by a statement of the case-law. For convenience of reference each case-note is preceded by a brief abstract of the decision in bolder type. The author has had evidently to perform a considerable amount of spade-work for the purpose of this little book which in the result presents a fairly full digest of the law. As such it is bound to be useful. The get-up of the book is attractive.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CARNDUFF, JJ. RULE No. 5977 of 1911. HARI MANDAL and others, Petitioners v. KESHAB MANNA, Opposite Party. 12th April 1912.

Transfer of appeal—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195 (7)—Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), secs. 22, 23.

The Opposite Party applied for sanction to prosecute the Petitioners under secs. 182, 193 and 476 of the Indian Penal Code. The Munsif, before whom the application was made, granted the sanction.

Against the order of the Munsif, the Petitioners appealed to the District Judge who, however, transferred the appeal from his own file to that of the Subordinate Judge, for disposal. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal.

The Petitioners then moved the High Court.

Held—That the District Judge had no power to transfer the appeal; applications mentioned in sub-sec. (7) of sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not appeals within the meaning of sec. 22 or sec. 23 of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act.

LALAN MALLIK v. KING-EMPEROR.

He described their progress to Mirgi, mentioned their sitting down at a place for smoking and cutting a bamboo from a bamboo hedge, and the fact that they passed persons on the road with whom words were exchanged, and gave details of the attack on the house and his movements after the failure of the attack in detail, which bears on its face the impress of a true story. He said that he got a warning from Mofizuddin after the dacoity that Lalan had been captured and that he had given the names. Lalan's statement as to the persons who took part in the dacoity made in the godown gives the names of all the Appellants excepting Pocha Namasudra and Ganga Charan,—but the former's name is given in his statement made to the Magistrate. It has been argued by the learned Vakil for the Appellants that Lalan did not give the names when he was brought back to Bistoo's godown, but that his statement is the result of a later consultation between the police-officers. The only ground on which this suggestion is founded is that there is a discrepancy between the daffadar and the chowkidar as to the event of the evening. The chowkidar says that he was sent away to lay the first information while the witness Buzlur was writing down the information as to the names of the dacoits which he was obtaining from Lalan. The daffadar says that when he arrived he saw Lalan in custody of the chowkidar in Bistoo's godown, and that he at that time heard that a statement of Lalan's had been written down. Now, would that discrepancy justify the inference that the alleged statement by Lalan is a concoction? It is quite possible that the daffadar may have made a mistake as to the presence of the chowkidar when he arrived, but that the names were given directly after the dacoity by the captured dacoit is, I think, clear from the fact that when the chowkidar laid the first information he mentioned the fact that the captured dacoit had given the names of those who had come to commit the dacoity. Now, this chowkidar clearly started very shortly after the occurrence, and it is quite impossible to suppose that at that time there was a conspiracy between the Inspectors who had not yet arrived on the scene of the occurrence to make out a false list and say that Lalan had given it; and, moreover, though Lalan denied, on April 20th, that he had made any statement to Buzlur Munshi, yet he had made on January 9th to a Magistrate a confession implicating, with one exception, the same people whose names he is said to have given to Buzlur. To my mind the theory that the names might have been concocted by the Inspectors and made up afterwards entirely breaks down because from the first information which was laid long before the Inspectors came, it appears that Lalan did mention who the dacoits were. It has been contended that his statement is inadmissible on the ground that he was in the custody of the police when it was made: but I do not think that was the case. He had been captured by private persons and was in their charge in Bistoo's godown. I am inclined to think the argument for the Crown that the chowkidar was not allowed to know what names were given, so that there should be no ground for saying Lalan was in his custody when he made his statement, is well-founded. We have, therefore, the circumstance that directly after the occurrence the names of the dacoits were given by a man who was engaged with the party, and that those names and the statement made by Lalan with respect to the occurrence agree with the evidence subsequently given by the informer. Sajani's statement, also made on the 5th of January, while implicating himself gives not only the names given by Lalan but those of Pocha Mandal and Ganga Charan as well; though there is authority for saying that confession subsequently withdrawn are not evidence against any one except the persons who made them yet, they can be taken into consideration by the Court under sec. 30 of the Evidence Act; and it is impossible to disregard the fact that, immediately after the occurrence, the names of all the Appellants except Ganga Charan were given, and a story was told which agrees with the evidence of the accomplice. Then two of the confessions made before the Magistrate, that of Lalan implicates all the Appellants except Ganga Charan, and that of Sajani all the Appellants, and there is no evidence of any circumstance which would induce both Sajani and the informer to falsely accuse Ganga Charan. Besides these circumstances there is evidence that 5 out of the 19 persons named, namely, the Appellants Lalan, Reajuddi and Sajani with two other persons who are not before the Court were seen together by Subdar Hassain just before the dacoity; and another witness, Kadem Sikdar, also saw 7 out of the 19 whose names have been given sitting close together just before dark on the day of the dacoity and out of these seven Reajuddi, Bepin, Lalan and Sajani are amongst the Appellants on the record. No reason was alleged at first as to why either Lalan or Jagadish or Sajani should give the names of these particular individuals, for there was no evidence that there was any quarrel or ill-feeling between them. It is only late in the proceedings that there is a suggestion that they are named because of an ill-feeling against the Namasudras. There is a striking circumstance that Jagadish says that he got a letter from Mozuffudin stating that Lalan had been captured, and he had given the names of the dacoits. It was, therefore, known to one member of the gang at least that the names of the dacoits had been given. It is to be observed that it is not stated that the name of this or that particular person was given by Lalan, but merely that he gave the names of the persons who took part in the dacoity, and then there is a very significant fact that all the persons whose names were given at once disappeared from their houses. I think myself that all these circumstances sufficiently support the evidence which Jagadish has given. In all cases depending on the evidence of an informer the degree of support that the evidence requires must depend on the amount of credit in each particular case to be attached to the informer. I have pointed out circumstances in this case which leads me to think that the story that the informer is telling is a true one and that view is strengthened by the impression that was obviously made on the Assessors by the informer when he told his story. Then, on the case generally there has been no attempt to strengthen it by exaggeration or by procuring false witnesses. It would have been quite easy, I have no doubt, to get persons to come and give evidence as to seeing the members of the gang together or it might have been possible to adduce false evidence of identification in the village at the time of the attack and to improperly strengthen the case by methods which are not unknown in this country. There seems to me in this case to have been a studious avoidance of anything which savours of bolstering up the case. I have no doubt that the evidence given is perfectly true, and that the Appellants before the Court were a dangerous body of robbers.

With respect to the sentences, although the attack on the house failed and the dacoits were unable to appropriate any property, yet, nevertheless, the offence is a very serious one because fire-arms were carried by one, at least, of the robbers, and those fire-arms there was no hesitation in using. Several persons have been wounded, more or less seriously, and one man has been murdered. Under these circumstances I am quite unable to say that the Judge exercised his discretion wrongly in passing the sentences he did. The result is that the appeal is dismissed, and the convictions and sentences are affirmed.

BALWANT SINGH,

23, April.

Respondent.

Hindu Law—Adoption by widow—Authority to adopt, interpretation of—General authority to adopt one son on death of another, not limited to adoption of two only—Widow if may question validity of adoption—Estoppel.

R., a Hindu and the owner of a Raj, died leaving a widow (the Appellant) who was then enceinte. According to the widow's own admission, R. before his death gave her authority to adopt in the following terms: "If, God forbid, you give birth to a daughter or if a son be born but die after his birth I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me so that he might perform my shradh ceremony and yours and perpetuate my name and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate. If, God forbid, the son who might be adopted under this authority should die in your life-time you will have power to adopt another boy." A son was born but died shortly afterwards, and three boys adopted one after the death of the other having also died, she adopted a fourth boy, the Respondent, who was the son of a cultivator. Until her quarrel with the Respondent, the Appellant and her advisers invariably regarded the words ascribed by her, according to her recollection, to her husband as giving her a general authority to adopt not limited to or exhausted by two adoptions.

Held—That even assuming that she remembered the exact words used by her husband, they expressed a general intention that if one boy died another boy was to be adopted, and the widow had power under that authority to adopt the Respondent.

That so far as she herself was concerned she was, on the evidence, clearly estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption, and her suit to declare the adoption invalid failed on this ground as also on the ground that the adoption of the Respondent was in fact a valid adoption, being covered by the authority given to her by R.

This was an appeal from a judgment* and decree of the High Court at Allahabad, which confirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, in whose Court the Appellant, as Plaintiff, sued the Respondent to obtain a declaration that she had no power to adopt the Respondent, that in fact she never did adopt him, and that a document, called a deed of adoption, was null and void. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

The material facts of the case in addition to those appearing in their Lordships' judgment may be stated as follows :—

The Appellant is the widow of one Raja Raghubir Singh, who died on the 23rd of April 1868, leaving him surviving his mother, Rani Kamala Kuer, and the Appellant. The latter was about 14 years old, and was pregnant, at the time. She remained in a subordinate position in the household during the life-time of her mother-in-law, who died in 1897.

The two Ranis made a joint application for mutation of names in the Revenue Registers on the 4th of June 1868, and subsequently, on the 18th of September 1868, presented a petition to the Board of Revenue in which they said : " Besides, the above Rani Dharam Kunwar, the wife of the late Raja, is in the state of pregnancy, if she will give birth to a male child he will be the rightful heir to the estate, if a female, then in accordance with the permission of the late Raja, as he stated at the time of his death, to take adopted son ; under the above circumstances there is no need of placing the estate under the Court of Wards."

On the 16th of December Rani Dharam Kunwar, the Appellant, gave birth to a son, who was named Raja Jagat Perkash Singh and died in 1870, when he was about a year old.

The younger Rani, therefore, acting on the advice of her mother-in-law, adopted a boy on the 4th of March 1877, and on the death of the son so adopted, made a second adoption on the 20th of January 1883. The boy adopted on the latter date also died, and so did a third male child taken by the Rani for adoption. The three boys mentioned above all died in their infancy.

On the 2nd of June 1898 the Appellant, after the death of her mother-in-law, took over from one Ram Newaz, a Gujar of Jhandera, who was a cultivator by occupation and belonged to the same gotra, or tribe as the husband of the Appellant, his two sons, Balwant Singh, the Respondent, then represented to be 14 years old, and Tungal Singh, with the view of selecting, at a future time, the one who should prove to be the more eligible for formal adoption.

The Appellant brought the present suit on the 7th of January 1905, and, in her plaint, alleged that in consequence of information given to her by the manager of the estate, one Tauhawar Ali, that estates held by women would be taken possession of by the Court of Wards, she had directed that a jalsa (entertainment) should be held on the 13th of January 1899, to which European officials and respectable people should be invited and at which it should be proclaimed that she had selected the Respondent for adoption. The said manager, however, taking advantage of her position as an illiterate purdanashin lady had, on that day, caused a deed to be written out, attested, marked, and later on registered by her, without acquainting her with its contents, which falsely recited that she had actually adopted the Respondent with due ceremonies under authority from her husband, whereas she had not in fact adopted the Respondent, nor had she authority to do so. She further alleged that she came to know of the deception practised on her in July 1904 when the Defendants, in two ejectment suits brought by her, set up the title of Balwant Singh, the Respondent, as adopted son in answer to her claim. She therefore prayed that—

(1) It might be declared that she had no power to adopt Balwant Singh, Defendant, that she did not in fact make a ceremonial adoption and that the deed, dated 13th of January 1899, was void and ineffectual.

In reply to the plaint the Defendant pleaded (inter alia) that on the 13th of January 1899 he was adopted with due ceremonies, that the Appellant had affixed her mark to the deed of adoption prepared on that date with full knowledge of its contents, and that she was estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption.

The following issues were framed for trial by the Subordinate Judge.

(1) Whether the Plaintiff had knowledge of the contents of the deed of adoption when she executed it and got it registered or whether she had no knowledge of them?

(2) Was or was not the Defendant adopted by the Plaintiff?

(3) Had or had not the Plaintiff any authority from her husband to adopt the Defendant?

(4) If the first and second issues be decided against the Plaintiff how will it affect the claim?

Oral and documentary evidence was adduced on behalf of both parties.

On the 26th of February 1906, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and decree. With reference to the first and second issues he decided that the Appellant had duly adopted the Respondent and that she had executed the deed of adoption with knowledge of its contents. On the fourth issue he held that having adopted the Respondent the Appellant was estopped from pleading that she had no authority for making the adoption and that therefore it was invalid: He also held that in view of the above finding it was not necessary to decide the third issue.

The Appellant appealed to the High Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Her appeal was heard by two learned Judges (Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J.) of the Court who on the 4th August 1908 delivered their judgment* and decree by which they confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal with costs.

In the course of their judgment they said :—

"The question then is whether or not in view of these facts the Court below was right in holding that the Plaintiff is estopped from denying her authority to adopt the Defendant?"

We are not aware of any case and none has been cited to us in which a Plaintiff has successfully raised such a contention as has been laid before us by the Plaintiff's learned Advocate. In the most solemn way the Plaintiff represented that she had authority to adopt and allowed the adoption of the Defendant to be carried out with the utmost publicity and with great pomp and ceremony. Moreover she executed a document which should serve thereafter as evidence of the fact of the adoption. In the last paragraph of it we find the statement that "this document, which is a deed of adoption, has been executed by me and I have affixed my seal to it with my own hands in order that it may serve as evidence." After the adoption the Defendant lived with the Plaintiff as her adopted son, was married as such at her expense and, as we have said, performed the shraddhs of her husband.

It is contended on her behalf that this conduct of the Plaintiff does not operate as an estoppel; that in order to create an estoppel it must be shown that the person setting it up has suffered some loss or detriment and that in this case the Defendant could not show that he had suffered any loss or detriment; that both families belong to the same gotra, and that the Defendant can return to his father's house and obtain his share of his father's property; that the fact that he held the position of a Raja for some years was beneficial to him and in no way detrimental. We do not agree as to this. The experience of the Defendant as a Raja would entirely unfit him for the life of a cultivator. But if it were necessary to show pecuniary loss we find that the Defendant incurred heavy liabilities in defending his adoption in the suit brought by Baldeo Singh. In his evidence he deposed and he is not contradicted that Man Singh prosecuted this suit on his behalf and paid the expenses of it and that some of the money expended by him was still due, and further that Lala Niranjana Lal, an Honorary Magistrate, of Saharanpur, had lent him a sum of Rs. 23,000. If he had not been led to believe that he was the adopted son of Raja Raghubir Singh, he would not have incurred these liabilities. Large sums of money would undoubtedly not have been lent to him. So that if it were necessary to prove detriment or loss from the conduct of the Plaintiff on which the estoppel is based these facts are in our opinion sufficient for that purpose."

Then after referring to sec. 115 of the Evidence Act and the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (1), their Lordships continued as follows:—

"To allow the Plaintiff to repudiate the adoption would not only, we may observe in this case, be detrimental to the Defendant but to third parties such as the creditors of the Defendant who advanced money to him on the faith of his position as Raja. It is highly probable also that acting on the same assurance his wife's father gave her in marriage to him. We know of no authority and none has been cited to us in which a widow who had taken a boy in adoption to her husband was afterwards successful in a suit for a declaration that the adoption was invalid. Two cases in this High Court were cited to us in which a similar suit failed."

After referring in detail to these cases [Sukhbasi Lal v. Guman Singh (2) and Durga v. Khushalo (3)] and to Thakoor

Oomrao Singh v. Thakoorani Mehtab Koonwer (4) which was relied on by the Appellant, but which their Lordships held did not give much support to her contention, their Lordships observed:—

"Upon the whole we are of opinion that the Court below rightly held that the Plaintiff was estopped from setting up the alleged invalidity of the Plaintiff's adoption. Plaintiff represented that she had authority to adopt and this representation was acted on by the Defendant. The ceremony of adoption was carried out on the faith of this representation. The marriage of the Defendant was likewise on the strength of it celebrated and the Defendant performed the shraddh ceremonies of his adoptive father. In addition to this we have the fact that the Defendant resisted the suit of Baldeo Singh in which the validity of the adoption was impeached and was supported in his defence by the Plaintiff and incurred heavy liabilities in raising funds for the purposes of his defence. These matters appear to us to put it out of the power of the Plaintiff to maintain a suit for a declaration that her solemn act of adoption was without authority. We are supported in this view by the decisions in the following cases: Kannammal v. Virasami (5), Ravji Vinayakrav Jaggan Nath Shankarsett v. Lakshmi Bai (6), Santappayya v. Rangappayya (7). We might further say that the suit, in so far as it is a suit for a declaration that the Plaintiff had no power to adopt, is one in which it is discretionary with the Court to give or refuse relief. We should hesitate in the circumstances of this case before passing a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for such a declaration, in view of her conduct and of the false position in which the Defendant would be placed if her representation as to authority were held not to be binding on her."

The Plaintiff appealed to the Privy Council.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Ross, for the Appellant, submitted that she was not barred by estoppel from pleading that she had no authority to adopt the Respondent. She had no power to make more than two adoptions under the terms of her husband's will. An adoption without husband's authority was of no effect under the Benares school. The law of adoption was based on the Hindu religion, and the doctrine of estoppel was not applicable to such institutions. The object of adoption was the performance of shraddh and other ceremonies for the spiritual welfare of the deceased. Performance of the necessary ceremonies by a son by estoppel could not possibly be acceptable to the spirit of the deceased. On the contrary it would be terribly disappointing to the deceased if the law of estoppel were held to prevail in the next world. A son by estoppel would be no son under the Hindu Law.

[LORD ROBSON.—The law of estoppel will affect transactions in this world alone.]

The law ought not to be extended to adoption under the Hindu Law which was essentially religious.

The observations of Muthusami Ayyar, J., in Purvatibayya v. Ramakrishna Rau (8) support me. If the doctrine of estoppel were engrafted on the Hindu Law, that law as to an invalid adoption would be practically repealed.

[LORD ROBSON.—Is the Appellant not estopped by her deed from denying that she had her husband's authority?]

The law of estoppel by deed is peculiar to England and does not apply to India.

An estoppel cannot take the place of a religious act on which rests the belief of a Hindu, that a valid adoption generates filial relation and religious competency to perform shraddh, etc. It was submitted that the decision in Sukhbasi Lal v. Guman Singh (2) was erroneous. Reliance was placed on Thakoor Oomrao Singh v. Thakoorani Mehtab Koonwer (4), Rauji Vinayakrav v. Lakshmibai (6), Gurulinga-swami v. Ramalakshamma (9). Again, the rule of estoppel will bar the Appellant only. It will not operate against a reversioner who might sue in the future to set aside the adoption. The Courts below have not come to any finding as to the nature of the authority given by the husband. The point for decision on the present appeal is confined to the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel.

[Their Lordships intimated that in their opinion there were sufficient materials on the record to decide all questions arising in the suit.]

Counsel referred to the judgment delivered by another Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur in the suit instituted by Baldeo Singh and who had found that the authority did not extend to validate the fourth adoption or successive adoptions.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dabi, for the Respondent, were not called on. Their Lordships reserved judgment.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBSON.—The Appellant is the widow of one Raja Raghubir Singh, and she sued the Defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur to obtain a declaration that she had not adopted him as a son to her deceased husband, and that if, in fact, any ceremony of adoption had been performed, it was invalid, owing to the absence of authority on her part from her husband to make such adoption. She further prayed that a document purporting to be a deed of adoption, dated the 13th January 1899, should be declared void as being executed by her without such authority as aforesaid.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs and the High Court of Allahabad confirmed his decree.

Raja Raghubir Singh was the owner of the extensive Landhaura Estate or Raj in the District of Saharanpur, in the United Provinces. He died on the 23rd April 1868, at the age of 20 years, leaving the Appellant, the Rani, his widow and sole heir. She was then only 14 years old, and enceinte. Raghubir Singh was a religious man and was desirous of leaving behind him a son who should perform his shraddh ceremonies and transmit to future generations the name and prestige of the Raj. When, during his last illness, he became hopeless of recovery, recognising the possibility that the child about to be born to his wife might be a girl, or might not survive, he gave formal and emphatic directions to his wife in regard to the adoption of a son. The Rani herself has pledged her word as to the nature and scope of those directions on more than one public and important occasion. She did so particularly in the deed of the 13th January 1899 and in her defence to the action of one Baldeo Singh, which will be hereafter referred to. In the deed, which she undoubtedly executed with full appreciation of its contents, she says :—

"He made this will to me by way of precaution. If, God forbid, you give birth to a daughter, or if a son be born but die after his birth, I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me so that he might perform my shraddh ceremony and yours, and perpetuate my name, and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate. If (God forbid, the son who might be adopted under this authority should die in your life-time, you will have power to adopt another boy."

In her defence to Baldeo Singh's action she informed the Court that she had full oral authority from her husband, and that he had not limited her to one, two, three, or four sons.

The Rani gave birth to a son on the 16th December 1868. He died on the 31st August 1870 leaving the Rani owner of the Raj. In 1877 she adopted a boy named Tohfa Singh, declaring by deed that she did so in accordance with the will of her husband. Tohfa Singh died two years after and the Rani thereupon, in 1883, adopted a boy named Ram Sarup, still purporting to act in accordance with her husband's will. Ram Sarup died in 1885, and in 1893 the Rani made arrangements with a view to adopting a third boy. She executed an agreement in 1893 with one Lada Singh whereby he agreed to give her his son "to comply with the will of her husband," but before the adoption was formally carried out this boy unfortunately died in 1896.

These successive deaths seriously impressed the mind of the Rani, and she consulted her priests as to how the evil spirits might best be propitiated and appeased. Acting on priestly advice she went on pilgrimages to Gaya and other places, and after making religious sacrifices she proceeded to arrange for another adoption. On the 2nd June 1898 she entered into a written agreement with Ram Niwaz, the father of the Respondent, whereby he made over to her his two sons Balwant Singh (Respondent) aged 14 years, and Tungal Singh aged 12 years :—

"In order that she may adopt any one of them she pleases having regard to their capability and her choice. Now the sons of me, the executant, shall live under the protection and custody of the said Rani Sahiba, subject to the fulfilment of the further conditions necessary for the validity of the adoption, the enforcement of which depends upon a particular time which may be considered suitable according to the rules of astrology. I shall have no claim as to their protection and guardianship "

The Rani ultimately selected the Respondent, Balwant Singh, and preparations were made for his adoption on an imposing scale. The 13th January 1899 was appointed for the ceremony, and on that day a great entertainment was given by the Rani. The European and Indian officials of the district, together with hundreds of friends, relations, and caste-fellows, were present at the invitation of the Rani, and were hospitably regaled by her. The religious ceremonies proper to an adoption were all carried out and the newly adopted son was conducted to the gaddi, or throne, where he was formally installed.

The Rani next proceeded to bring about the marriage of the Respondent and that ceremony was celebrated at her expense and in a manner befitting his new rank. In fact the Respondent was thenceforth treated as a member of the Rani's family and cut off altogether from the family of his natural father.

In the following year Baldeo Singh, claiming as reversionary heir, instituted a suit against the Rani and the Respondent, in which he sought to have it declared that he was entitled to the property on the death of the Rani, and that the adoption of Balwant Singh was invalid. The Rani defended that suit, and, acting upon her instructions, her pleader made the statement as to her authority before mentioned, and she herself executed and filed a written statement alleging that she had in fact adopted the Respondent, and that the adoption was valid in every respect. Baldeo Singh failed in that suit on the ground that he was not a reversioner and had no locus standi to impeach the adoption in question, but the allegations of fact by the Rani in regard to the adoption are now very properly pressed against her.

The adopted son and the Rani have since quarrelled, and in this action she seeks to get rid of the adoption altogether.

At one time she stated that the seal affixed to the deed of adoption was not her seal, but she did not attempt to support this allegation by production of the seal regularly used by her, saying that she had mislaid it somewhere. However, documents admittedly executed by her and bearing seal impressions identical with that in dispute were produced and the genuineness of the seal on the deed of adoption was placed beyond doubt.

The learned Subordinate Judge stated the issues or questions arising in the case as follows:—

"1. Whether the Plaintiff had knowledge of the contents of the deed of adoption when she executed it and got it registered, or whether she had no knowledge of them ?

"2. Was or was not the Defendant adopted by the Plaintiff ?

"3. Had or had not the Plaintiff any authority from her husband to adopt the Defendant ?

"4. If the first and second issues be decided against the Plaintiff, how will it affect the claim ? "

With regard to the first of these questions, the Rani pleaded that she was a pardanashin lady, and had never understood the contents of the document, or had even known what it was ; but the learned Subordinate Judge formed the opinion that the long examinations to which she had, on different occasions, been subjected, and the extreme shrewdness which she displayed in dealing with the questions, showed that she was an acute and intelligent lady, and that her only difficulties arose from the impossibility of making her statements fit with undoubted facts. The deed was executed by her under circumstances of the greatest publicity, and with the assistance of competent and independent advice from many quarters. It was attested by no less than 28 witnesses. It was subsequently registered (on her own admission of execution) and was frequently and openly referred to by the Rani as a deed of adoption. The Trial Judge therefore found that she executed the deed with full knowledge and understanding of its contents, and the High Court agreed with him.

The Rani next denies that the adoption was in fact carried out. The great entertainment of the 13th January 1899 was, according to her, only an intimation to the public that she meant at some future time to carry the adoption into effect. On this point, except for the allegations of the Rani herself, the only evidence worth considering was practically all one way, and as to the Rani's testimony, the learned Judge says, in plain terms, that she had made so many untrue statements that it was impossible to believe her, while the evidence produced on her behalf was utterly unreliable and untrue. The High Court agree with this finding, as to the justice of which there can be no doubt.

The third question, viz., as to whether the Rani had authority from her husband to adopt the Defendant, gives rise to the point which has been argued before their Lordships. The Rani contends that the authority conferred upon her by her husband did not extend, according to its strict wording, beyond the adoption of a second boy, in case the first adopted son should die, and that such authority was therefore exhausted by the adoption of Ran. Sarup. Their Lordships are of opinion that this was not the true effect of the authority, in fact, conferred upon the Rani. She may not have remembered with precision the words used by her husband on his death-bed, but whatever the exact words may have been, undoubtedly the effect they then produced on her mind, and on the minds of those about her, was that which she set forth in her statement in Baldeo Singh's action, viz., "that her husband had not limited the authority to make such adoption to one, two, three, or four sons."

That is the meaning on which she has consistently acted until her quarrel with the Respondent, and the words ascribed to her husband, according to her recollection, in the deed of adoption, have always, until this litigation, been regarded by her, and her advisers, as intended to express a general authority. What the deceased Raja intended was that, if necessary, "some boy" should be adopted to him "so that he might perform my shraddh ceremony, and yours, and perpetuate my name, and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate," but in expressing this intention he saw that it might be defeated by death if construed in a restrictive sense as meaning some "one" boy, so he went on to deal with that contingency by directing, in substance, that effect was, in any event, to be given to the general intention, and if one boy died another boy was to be adopted. The Trial Judge did not expressly decide this question of fact. He found, as did the High Court, that in the circumstances of this case the Rani was estopped from alleging want of authority.

Their Lordships, in reviewing the facts of the case, are of opinion that the question may well be decided as one of fact on the Rani's own statements without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. In their view she was speaking the truth in Baldeo Singh's action when she was pleading as to her authority. Their Lordships, however, do not differ from the Courts below in the view they have taken as to the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel in this case. Of course, the estoppel pleaded against the Rani must be taken as purely personal. It does not bind anyone who claims by an independent title, but, in view of the decision now given, that the Respondent was, in fact, duly adopted, further litigation on the point may be taken as happily out of the question. So far as the Rani herself is concerned it would indeed be difficult to have a stronger case of estoppel. She has asserted her authority in the most solemn manner under her hand and seal, and her conduct both before and after that assertion has been of a like unequivocal character. She could not now be allowed to change her story without grave injustice ensuing to those who have acted in reliance upon her deliberate and repeated representations. The Respondent is now severed from his natural family; he has undergone a change of social status which may or may not be beneficial to him, but which has certainly so altered his mode of life as to make a relapse into his former condition a grievous hardship upon him. He and his friends have been driven to expenses in the maintenance of the privileges with which the Rani purported to endow him. He married on the faith of his adoptive mother's word, and no doubt has creditors who have sold him goods or lent him money in like reliance on her good faith.

Under these circumstances the Rani's argument that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply because the Defendant could show no loss or detriment, is without any substance whatever and she must be held to her word and to the results of her conduct.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

(CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.)APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 247 OF 1908.

HOLMWOOD, J.

MUNSHI KALI SANKAR SAHAI, and ors., Defendants,
Appellants,
v.
MAHARAJA PRATAP
UDAI NATH SAHI
DEO, Plaintiff,
Respondent.

Title, evidence of, direct proof when not available—Conduct and admissions of Defendant as proof of title—Mulki papers, evidentiary value of—Registers kept under Reg. VIII of 1800, entries in—Statements against proprietary interest—Statements in road-cess returns as to character of interest—Burden of proof, when shifted—Effect of erroneous statement as to nature of tenure by unauthorized person—Purchase at execution sale held under sec. 124, Act I (B. C.) of 1879 limited to interests actually sold.

When owing to lapse of time and other causes direct evidence of title, e.g., a sanad or grant, is not available, it is enough for the Plaintiff to establish a prima facie case, if the evidence on which it is based is corroborated by the conduct and admissions of the Defendant or his predecessors in interest, or unrebutted by any positive evidence which can be relied on.

MUNSHI KALI SANKAR SAHAI v. MAHARAJA PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

Mulki papers or returns filed by elakadars under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1800, para. 3, although not of the same evidentiary value as the Registers themselves, inasmuch as they require proof of origin and authentication, are nevertheless good evidence of title, if they contain statements made at a time when there was no dispute and against the proprietary interest of the maker.

Statements made in road-cess returns by khorposhdars or holders of a maintenance grant as to the character of their tenure are good evidence of title against a Defendant claiming under them, if not as admissions, certainly as positive evidence in support of Plaintiff's claim.

A Plaintiff may rely on the admissions of Defendant as to his title in proof of his claim just as much as on any other evidence, and if a Defendant goes into the witness box and admits his title there is no further onus upon him to prove it, at least as against such Defendant.

An erroneous statement made without knowledge in an affidavit filed as a matter of routine by a person whose authority to make it was not proved, could not bind a party to a proceeding, nor affect the character of a sale held in such proceeding under the provisions of sec. 124, Act I (B. C.) of 1879, so as to confer upon the auction-purchaser a right which he could not obtain by the sale itself.

JANARDAN SINGH v. MAHARAJA PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO (1) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th of June 1908 against the decree of Babu Ram Lal Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Ranchi, dated the 31st of January, 1908.

(1) R. A. No. 6 of 1880, Per Cunningham and Princep, JJ., 24th Nov. 1881).

The suit out of which it arose, was instituted by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur to resume a maintenance jaghir, or khorposh, granted by his father, the late Maharaja to three childless widows, on the death of their husbands, in accordance with the custom prevailing in that part of the country. The last Jagirdar, Deodhari Singh, who died in 1839, had been the holder of an ancient putra putradik jaghir comprising twelve villages, and Plaintiff alleged that on Deodhari's death without male issue the late Maharajah had resumed these villages, as he was entitled to do, and made a fresh grant of three of them to the three widows for their maintenance during their lives.

As evidence of a fresh grant, of which there was no direct proof, the Plaintiff relied mainly on certain mulki papers of the year 1842, which made mention of a sanad or grant for life of the three villages in question to the widows. He relied also on the custom of khorposh grants which was shown to prevail in his estate, and on a long series of admissions as to the character of their title by the said widows, and by the Defendant Kali Sankar himself. The Defendants on the other hand impugned the genuineness of the mulki papers and denied the efficacy of the alleged admissions.

It appeared from a statement in a road-cess return of the year 1889, made by the widows and the Defendant Kali Sankar, who was their nephew, jointly, that the widows had held the said villages free of rent though subject to the payment of road-cess, but only for the term of their natural lives.

On the 18th December 1867, the widows had executed a hinhayati mokaarari lease in favour of Kali Sankar's father, Mewa Lal, to endure during their life-time, for a consideration of Rs. 800 and an annual rental of Rs. 24. Mewa Lal having died in 1888 his son Kali Sankar came into possession of the villages as mokararidar.

In the year 1895, default having been made in the payment of road-cess, the right, title and interest of the surviving widows was sold under sec. 124, Act I (B. C.) of 1879 and purchased by the Defendant Kali Sankar on behalf of himself and his family for Rs. 570.

The sale was duly held under sec. 124, and was regarded as a sale of the right, title and interest only of the widows by the Collector who registered the transfer. The Defendant, however, claimed to have purchased a permanent jaghirdhari tenure on the strength of a misdescription in the affidavit filed on behalf of the Plaintiff in the execution proceedings by an unauthorized person who was admittedly not acquainted with the facts.

The Defendants relied mainly on this purchase and on a claim by adverse possession originating in the mokarari lease of 1867.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur for resumption of three villages Koinjara, Dodhra and Kudarkon, on the allegation that the villages were held as a maintenance jaghir for life in joint tenancy by three ladies Deokali Koer, Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer, of whom the last surviving Khetrani Koer died on the 19th

August 1901 ; that the Defendant No. 1 Kali Sankar Sahai, had been holding these mouzahs under a registered mokarari deed, dated 18th December 1867, from Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer and on the 19th November 1895 had purchased the right, title and interest of the ladies in a sale under sec. 124, Act I, B. C. of 1879, in the names of himself and his wife and sons, Defendants Nos. 2 to 6. Mesne profits from 1958 S. were also claimed. The defence was that the jaghir of the three villages was not a life jaghir for maintenance of the three ladies but was an absolute jaghir granted to the ancestors of their husbands which the ladies had been holding under the ordinary Hindu law, that even if the tenure was terminable on failure of male issue in the line of the original grantees, as the husbands of these ladies died much more than 12 years ago the Plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. It was also urged that the Plaintiff had in execution proceedings through his Karpardaj Basant Lal described the villages as ancestral jaghir of the ladies and is therefore estopped from asserting the contrary. It was also urged that the Plaintiff is not entitled to resume without sanction of Government, and that the suit is barred by limitation against the Defendants Nos. 4, 5, 7 and 8 who were made parties more than three years after the order under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, passed on the 10th February 1902. The Subordinate Judge held that the estate of the ladies was a life-tenure for maintenance carved out of a larger putra putradi grant of 12 villages given to their husband's ancestors and resumable at the death of the last male representative.

He further held that there was no estoppel in the execution proceedings, that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the ladies in their life-tenure, that that tenure came to an end at the death of Kherrani Koer and it was not necessary to set the auction-sale aside. On the point of limitation he held that there was no satisfactory evidence to show that the Maharaja had ever denied the ladies' life-interest or tried to oust them, but even if he had, the relationship of landlord and tenant had never ceased and the ladies had never asserted any adverse rights and had paid in the road-cess and filed road-cess returns which was the only act of tenancy they had to perform.

He also found that there was no special limitation in respect of the sec. 145 (Cr. P. C.) proceedings inasmuch as the minor Defendants were not parties to the sec. 145 (Cr. P. C.) proceedings and Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 were not parties to the auction-sale and Defendant No. 8 was made a party within 3 years of his birth. They were made parties at the request of Defendants on 25th February 1905, to avoid future litigation. He further held that the lands not being lakheraj the sanction of Government to the resumption was not necessary.

He therefore gave a decree to the Plaintiff for all the reliefs he claimed, i.e., for khas possession by ejecting the Defendants with mesne profits from 1958 S. to delivery of possession in execution of the decree, to be determined in execution, with costs and interest at 6 p. c. per annum.

The Defendants appeal and their main contention is that the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the principal question in this suit, viz. Is the Plaintiff entitled to resume and if so when did his right to resume accrue? The plaint is founded on a life-grant and we have to see if the evidence bears this out. If the life-tenancy is proved the Defendants are admittedly out of Court. No question of custom arises and none is alleged in the plaint.

It is strongly urged that the question of title must be positively proved by the Plaintiff, that he cannot avail himself of the Defendant's admissions. If no life-grant to the ladies is proved their possession becomes adverse as resumption ought to have been made on the death of Deodhari the last male incumbent in 1839. The appeal was in effect argued solely on these points, though great efforts were made to whittle away the effect of the admissions made by the ladies and the Defendant No. 1 himself.

One minor point was argued, viz., that the suit is barred by sec. 37 (5), Act I of 1879, because the lease or grant was liable to be cancelled. But we find no such point arises as there is no document on the record to be set aside and a grant made by sanad for life would lapse of its own force by the death of the life-tenants and with it any lease granted by the life-tenants. Besides sec. 37 has no application to a title suit of this nature. We have therefore to consider only two main questions. Firstly, whether the Plaintiff has prima facie established his title and the factum of a life-grant to the ladies? Secondly, what is the effect of the Defendant's admissions and those of the ladies as evidence bearing on the Plaintiff's case? It may be conceded at the outset that owing to lapse of time the Plaintiff's evidence as to the grant to the ladies is not very strong, but such as it is, it is un rebutted except by the affidavit of Basant Lal, Ex. H, p. 110A, and it is strongly corroborated by the conduct of the ladies themselves and by the admissions of the Defendant No. 1.

The principal evidence on the side of the Plaintiff is that of certain mulki papers of the year 1842 copies of which, Exs. 14 and 15, have been produced from the office of the Deputy Commissioner and Exs. 40-41, duplicates apparently from the office of the Commissioner. Now these documents appear to have been returns filed by the then Maharaja in respect of his zamindari in Chota Nagpur under orders of the Court, filed by the elakadars under Regulation VIII of 1800, para. III. They are not the registers prepared under that Regulation which would be authenticated by the Collector and have not therefore the very high evidential value placed upon them by the learned Subordinate Judge. They require proof of origin and authentication by the Maharaja and this is furnished by the signature of his Mukhtear Jubraj Lal and by a monogram forming the word "Sahi" which is identified by the record-keeper as being the authentic mark of the former Maharaja found upon all his papers filed in the Government Record Room.

Similar papers were admitted and used as evidence by the High Court in their judgment in R. A. 6 of 1880, dated the 24th November 1881, which will be found on page 15 of Paper Book C. It was held that it was a statement made on the requisition of a public officer regarding matters connected with the estate of the Maharaja which were well-known to him and long before any adverse claim had been set up, but still it was open to the objection that it is not necessarily the best evidence that was procurable and there is nothing to show the source of the information on which the history of the grant was supplied. Prinsep, J., therefore, said that if the Plaintiff's case depended on this evidence he should not be inclined to accept it as conclusive. Cunningham, J., the other learned Judge, appears to have placed a much higher evidentiary value upon it and to have treated it as a register under the Regulations.

It is strongly criticized here on the ground that in this case it appears that a dispute had already commenced as to the nature of the grant, and that the notes on the nature and history of the grant are in a different handwriting and ink in columns 7 and 13 to the rest of the return. Further it is stated as regards Kadarkan that a copy of the sanad was filed with the return and no such copy is produced though it is contended that such a copy must exist in the Maharaja's sanad register. Now it clearly appears from a judgment of the Personal Assistant to the Agent to the Governor-General, Lohardagga, dated 3rd May 1842, that one Panday Ganpat Rao who had charge of the Maharaja's papers as hereditary Panda had wrongfully detained them and he was put in the Civil Jail for a month in consequence and is said to have died there. The judgment further shows that the Maharaja had been unable to supply his mulki forms on the 2nd February 1842, owing to this man's conduct. From a petition Ex. 19 on page 44A, it appears that the papers had been ordered to be filed on the 9th December 1839 and that the Maharaja submitted a list⁽¹⁾ (frist), the very word used in the heading of Exs. 40 and 41 showing the names of the elakadars, the names of the villages and the amount of rent, but was unable to fill in the gross produce and the area of cultivated and uncultivated lands owing to the absence of the tenants. It was ordered that a copy of the forms be sent to the Maharaja on the 28th August 1840 to fill in the form in respect of his zamindari within one month under heavy penalties and if the Maharaja be ignorant of the particulars of the sanads of elakadars, the column in which the specifications of the sanads are to be given should be left blank, a remark being made in the Remark Column to the effect that particulars of the sanad are not known. Now this is what appears to have been done and is the explanation of the notes appearing in a different handwriting. We can have no doubt however that that handwriting is contemporary and of the same age as the rest of the document. There is no sign of subsequent interpolation and the other entries which are of a similar character throughout the books are not disputed. There is absolutely no reason to suppose that these entries were not made in 1842 and authenticated by the Maharaja.

The rubakari of the Commissioner on which a judgment of the Assistant Agent in 1843 is based that these papers are not rulings or documents in respect of civil suits and that they will be of no use in the case, is in no sense a declaration that they have no evidentiary value, for no such declaration could be made by the agent of the Governor-General who had executive charge of them, and in 1858 Col. Dalton, the Commissioner, ruled that there could be no objection to any party getting copies of them but that the meaning of the Agent in 1843 was that they were books to be bound and carefully preserved as estate records and the Agent could not allow the originals to be used as evidence in any Court. This order which in itself appears to be ultra vires is certainly nothing more than an assertion of privilege for the documents on the part of the Agent who held their custody, and adds to rather than detracts from their evidentiary value. This fully explains the rubakari, dated 29th January 1844. Ex. F. F., on which great stress has been laid by the Defendants, it being nothing more than a note handing on the orders of the Agent to Assistant Executive Officers for communication to Mukhtears who are forbidden to use these papers as documents in any matter. It is clear that there was not and could not be any objection to their contents being used as evidence, but the authorities objected to the originals being bandied about in the Courts so as to run the risk of being tampered with. The original order of the Agent states that they had not then been bound and asks for their immediate return for that purpose. All this goes to show that they were very carefully kept and it is not at all likely that any interpolations were made. We have seen that Colonel Dalton found them intact in 1858, and from 1862 onwards we have the sworn testimony of the old retired Record-keeper, Baikantha Nath Ray, that they were in his custody and he had them re-bound and labelled. It is sought to show that this witness was on bad terms with Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar, but that was at a later date than 1862, and both Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar had made admissions consistent with the entries in these papers and there is no suggestion nor on the face of the papers is there any possibility that the notes were added after 1862. They are, as we have said, clearly contemporaneous with the filling up of the forms in 1842.

Then as to the copy of sanad said to have been filed in regard to Kodarkon, there seems to be no reason why such a copy should not have been filed but the sanad book is shewn to have been removed by Ganpat Rao. The original sanad must have been with the ladies and the Plaintiff cannot be said on any evidence to be holding back any copy of the sanad now in his hands.

As regards the contention that the dispute about this tenure had already begun in 1842, there is not a particle of evidence to show that there was any dispute. The contention rests on an assumption that the ladies were holding on as Hindu widows after the death of Deodhari and claimed an absolute estate. There is nothing to show this and if the story of the sanad be true it was obviously granted before 1842.

We find the mulki papers of 1842 authentic, sufficiently proved, and to contain statements made by the Maharaja at a time when there was no dispute against his own proprietary interest. The Maharaja's case clearly is that the ladies' husbands had 12 villages in putra putradik tenure and it is proved that this is the customary form of tenure in the Raj and in the absence of any evidence whatever of a permanent grant the statement of the ladies themselves clearly made in 1889 must be accepted. Ex. 4 is a road-cess return filed by the Mukhtear of the ladies Ramdhari Pershad on the 9th November 1889. It recites the whole history of the taluk and is undoubtedly genuine. On p. 60 (Paper Book A), Musst. Badam Koer admitted the signatures on oath. She gives the usual lame explanation of blank papers being given. But to whom were they given? To the Defendant No. 1 himself who was her nephew, son of her brother and wakil and himself holding a mokarari of the villages under her which it would be to his interest to show was a mokarari of a permanent and not of a resumable tenure. The genuineness of the signature is clearly shown by the fact that Badam Koer swears to her signature on the vakalatnama given to Mewa Lal to file the road-cess return of 1882, Ex. 9; while the signatures of the ladies appearing on the document itself are obviously in the handwriting of a scribe and not of the ladies. We have satisfied ourselves that the signatures of Badam Koer on the vakalatnama of 1882, and on the road-cess return of 1889, Ex. 4, are of the same person and that person a lady of only moderate penmanship. That this Ex. 4 is the work of Kali Sankar, Defendant No. 1, himself is shown by the fact that Part I of the return of which Ex. 4 is Part III was filed by Kali Sankar himself, (Ex 22, p. 47A) as mokararidar of the ladies. When he intervened in the rent suits in 1891, he filed copies of these returns of 1882 and 1889 in Court, and he admits that he filed Part III of the return for 1899 himself as mokararidar. Against these papers it is contended that the history of the tenure set out in the preamble is surplusage and unnecessary. We find it is the universal practice in all road-cess returns filed in this case and as far as we can gather in all cases.

Then it is said that the admissions of the ladies cannot be used against the Defendant No. 1 as he is now claiming as auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of road-cess and not as their mokararidar. But the very fact that the ladies had to pay road-cess shows that they were still tenants of the Maharaja and not holding adversely to him and his own evidence shows that the statements made are his own statements entered, as Badam Koer says, on blank papers signed by her and given to him. The writing of the return Ex. 4 is proved by the writer Iswar Dayal W. P. 4 and he says he wrote at the request of the ladies. He proves that Ramdhari Pershad was the Mukhtear and he gave him the mukhtearnama signed by the ladies. The ladies were living in Kali Sankar's house and were then on good terms with him. He himself had been a servant of Kali Sankar Sahai. Ramdhari Pershad, the Mukhtear, himself proves the return Ex. 4 and the due execution of his mukhtearnama. He acted as Mukhtear for Defendant No. 1 and is P. W. 6.

If the statements are not admissions we think they are positive evidence of the Plaintiff's title coming from the ladies themselves and authenticated on oath. No better evidence for the Plaintiff could be imagined and it is futile to contend that the Plaintiff cannot use them as evidence of his title but only as admissions after he has proved his title affirmatively.

Both Ex. 4 and Ex. 9 were used by Kali Sankar in litigation for his own purposes and he is bound by them.

Accepting these documents as evidence, the Plaintiff's case is proved up to the hilt. But there are a long series of admissions by Kali Sankar himself. Among these we may mention Exs. 17, 16, 44, 46, 10, 11, 13 and 20.

Ex. 17 is a petition filed by Kali Sankar in the Maharaja's office on the 24th May 1890. It is dated 29th March 1890, but it is proved that it was filed on the later date by an entry made at the time in the Maharaja's petition register where it is numbered 2592 which number appears on the face of the document. In this he applies for registration in the landlord's sherista as mokararidar of the ladies, khorphoshdars as long as their right and title will be enforceable.

Madho Prakas, mohurrir of the Maharaja since 1889, proves the filing and entry in the petition register. He fixes the date but could not be said to establish affirmatively that Kali Sankar himself filed it. This however is established by Lal Iswar Nath Sah Deo, a respectable talukdar and a relative of the Maharaja, who was Naib Manager for him in 1890.

He is clear as to the presence of Kali Sankar and that the order on it was written by him and initialled by Mr. Peppe now deceased on the very same day. The initial is undoubtedly that of Mr. A. Peppe which cannot be mistaken. In addition to this Kali Sankar's own mohurrir who wrote the petition at his orders deposes to it though he says this is the only paper of Kali Sankar's that he knows of that does not bear his seal and signature. That Mr. Peppe or Lal Iswar Nath Sah Deo forged this document, as they must have done on 24th May 1890, there is no possible reason to imagine. Nothing then turned on it.

Ex. 16 is the mokarari pattah to Mewa Lal which both Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar acted upon. It clearly recites that the tenure is khorphoshi.

Defendant No. 1 now asserts that this was a colourable document as he discovered after his father's death, and was only given to enable Mewa Lal the better to manage the property for his sisters. But Kali Sankar's own conduct puts him out of Court on this point. It is true that Mewa Lal was always good to the ladies and appears never to have stinted them for money, but Kali Sankar acting on this pattah confined them strictly to the Rs. 24 rent due under it and used the property as his own. This is proved by his intervention in the rent suit brought by the ladies in 1891 against some tenants in which he claimed absolute mokarari right as vested in his father and himself and denied their right to collect rent. This is Ex. 10, dated 19th January 1891. Ex. 11 is a petition of objection, dated 17th March 1892, in pursuance of this intervention and may be read with it as emphasizing the previous petition. Ex. 20 is a petition by Mewa on behalf of his sisters, dated 13th June 1884, in which they clearly admit the khorphosh grant. The vakalatnama Ex. 21, dated 6th June 1884, to Mewa Lal by the ladies was admittedly signed by them.

It is urged that Mewa Lal was a servant and friend of the Maharaja and deliberately gave the ladies away in this transaction. When a Defendant has to make such criminal aspersions on the memory of his own father against whom nothing appears on the record, his case must be indeed a bad one.

Ex. 46 is a petition of Kali Sankar, dated 15th August 1893, which by comparison of handwriting clearly appears to be entirely in his hand and is proved to have been personally filed by him. The handwriting is proved by a pleader, Dinesh Prasad, P. W. 13, who was engaged in most of his cases and against whom nothing is shown. Also by Lal Iswar Nath Sahi Deo who knew his handwriting well. Kali Sankar denies this document on oath but he admits Ex. 44 which clearly shows his handwriting as well as other colourless documents referring to the same matters but not containing admissions. It is clear that Kali Sankar did make a petition on 15th August though in Ex. 44 he gives the date 14th August and Ex. 46 is that petition. It is said that the word "orally" is not in accordance with facts but there is nothing on the record to show this.

Exs. 12 and 13, dated 10th July 1889 and the 20th February 1892, respectively, clearly show that Kali Sankar filed copies of Exs. 4 and 9 in Court as documents in support of his case and got them returned. There are numerous other admissions but they were not of such importance. We confess that we are unable to understand the contention that these documents which are filed and proved by the Plaintiff and are part of his case are of no avail to him in discharging the onus of proof of title which lies upon him.

Surely if the Defendant goes into the witness-box and admits Plaintiff's title there is no further onus upon him to prove it as against such Defendant. The proved dealings of the Defendant No. 1 and his father with the property are as much positive evidence of Plaintiff's title as sworn testimony thereto would be.

In the lower Court the contention was that these admissions were used as secondary evidence of a restricted grant to the ladies without sufficient foundation for not producing primary evidence of the grant. The Subordinate Judge has fully dealt with this technical question which was not pressed before us. It is sufficient for us to say that if they were only to be treated as secondary evidence, it is clearly shown that the original sanad could not be with the Maharaja and that his sanad book had been stolen. The existence of a casual copy of one sanad in his office would not throw any further burden upon him especially as that copy is shown to have been filed in the Deputy Commissioner's office.

The documents are direct evidence of the nature of the ladies' tenure which is the point in issue and if, as is contended, the existence of a sanad is not proved they would be unanswerable evidence of Plaintiff's title. On the other hand, the Defendants have completely failed to adduce any evidence whatever of a permanent grant to the ancestors of the ladies' husbands and the Plaintiff's case stands un rebutted.

The only point they make is in regard to an affidavit of one Basant Lal in 1895 in execution proceedings stating that the villages were the putra putradik jaghir of Musstts. Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer. This was affirmed on the 8th July 1895.

But this witness had sworn on the 30th March 1895, Ex. P. P., that the ladies were jaghirdars and it is in this indefinite form that the decree and sale certificate are drawn up. The Maharaja did not go to sale on this specific allegation. He went to sale on the allegation that it was his milkiyat and gave the value of that milkiyat as the basis for the valuation in execution which was for arrears of Road-cess. What is important is what was sold and we do not think that this affidavit is any evidence of that.

If the sale was under sec. 124, Act I of 1879, B. C., what passed was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors. If it was not, the sale was either under the general law by virtue of sec. 129 of the Act or it was no sale at all and the Defendants acquired nothing. If it was under the general law the same right, title and interest would pass. We have never heard that an error of fact in an affidavit which was never acted upon and which could not affect the character of the property sold confers a right on the purchaser which he could not obtain by the actual sale. Basant Lal deposes that he filed the affidavit as a routine matter without personal knowledge, but the plaintiff in the suit signed by the manager described the property in suit as life-tenure for maintenance and the decree could not and did not go beyond the prayer in the plaintiff.

The decision in Mookhya Huruckraj Joshee v. Ram Lal Gomastha (2) with which we entirely agree does not touch this case. The authority of Basant Lal is not shown and we do not find the Maharaja bound by his statement. As regards the alleged attempts by the Maharaja to dispossess the ladies which are urged as a ground for holding that their possession was adverse we cannot find that the Maharaja was in any way responsible for the acts of Bhuka Singh or Kapil Nath Lal, while Mewa Lal's conduct as brother and pleader of the ladies certainly cannot be saddled on him. The non-production of the registers of leases granted by the Maharaja has been made much of. But the order-sheet though not so precise as it ought to be seems to show that the Maharaja made full disclosure of all papers he had in the office. See order 69, dated 6th January 1908. The Subordinate Judge was right not to issue further process on Bhuka Singh vide order No. 84, dated 10th January 1908. We have looked at the Road-cess papers filed in 1889 by the manager wherein an interpolation appears against the ladies' names "in wrongful possession" and we find that these papers are full of subsequent additions and interpolations, many being made in pencil.

The entry in question is obviously in different ink of a later date, and in the same hand as numerous other emendations apparently made by clerks in the Road-cess office. The returns in their present state are worthless as evidence of anything. On all other minor issues which are not pressed before us we agree with the Subordinate Judge. The Defendants have elected to stand or fall on the proved nature of the grant and we find that it was a maintenance life-grant to the ladies. On this footing no question of limitation arises. As regards the remarks of Jenkins, C. J., in Lakhamgavda v. Keshhav Annaji (3), we may say we fully agree with them but they have no bearing on this case in which the evidence appears to be ample and one-sided and in which there is no combination of circumstances to be proved but a simple fact which is in itself probable and consistent with the history of the tenure namely that the ladies held a life-grant.

We find that the decision of the lower Court is correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of June 1911 under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent against a decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 25th of May 1911, passed in Second Appeal No. 2416 of 1909 which had been preferred against a decree of Babu Umesh Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 9th of August 1909, reversing that of Babu Annoda Proshad Majumdar, Munsif at Munshigunge, dated the 20th of March 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment of COXE, J., which was as follows:—

COXE, J.—This was a suit for recovery of possession of an undivided half share of certain land, on the ground that this share was included within the taluk Ram Ram Sen of which the Plaintiff was a purchaser at a revenue sale.

The defence was that the land fell within a certain howla named Ram Mohan De, which was a protected interest.

The lower Appellate Court held, firstly, that it was incumbent on the Defendants to prove that the land in suit lay within their howla; and, secondly, that even if it did lie within the howla the Defendants had no title to it and could not successfully resist the Plaintiff's suit.

It appears to me that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained on either of these points.

It has been found that the howla Ram Mohan De is a protected interest and the only question that arose was, whether the land in suit fell within that howla or not. That being so, the burden of proof rested upon the Plaintiff in accordance with the law as explained in the case of Rajendro Kumar Bose v. Mohim Chunder Ghosh (1). No doubt, when the Defendants plead that they have a protected tenure and the question is whether they have or have not such a tenure within an estate, the burden of proof rests on them, but when it is found that they have such a tenure, and the only question is one of parcel or no parcel, the burden rests on the Plaintiff. It does not appear to me that the terms of sec. 37 of the Revenue Sale Act, 1859, make any difference so far as this question of the burden of proof is concerned, as the learned Vakil for the Respondents has argued.

(1) 3 C. W. N. 763 (1894).

RUTNESSUR SEN v. KALI KUMAR BIDYABHUSAN.

On the second point, the learned Subordinate Judge finds that the Defendants are not entitled to this land, because in his opinion, the howla Ram Mohan De was partitioned between two persons named Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam : and the lands which fell to Sadhu Ram were included within the taluk Ram Ram Sen, of which the Plaintiff is now owner, and the land attached to Ramuttam fell within the taluk Bisseswar Sen. The Defendants are the ultimate successors in interest of Ramuttam : and therefore they cannot, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, have any right or title to the lands included in the taluk of Ram Ram Sen, which fell on partition to Sadhu Ram. On the facts found, this argument appears to me to be perfectly logical ; and it would ordinarily dispose of the Defendants' case. But the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the fact that this theory of the partition of the lands of the howla between Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam is entirely opposed to the plaint. According to the plaint the lands are still joint and the Plaintiff sues only for an undivided half share. That being so, it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge to hold that, as a matter of fact, the lands had been partitioned and that separate land had been assigned to the two taluks, Ram Ram Sen and Bisseswar Sen.

It has been argued by the learned pleader for the Respondent that the Subordinate Judge did not intend to find that the howla had been partitioned, but merely that there had been so much of a division between Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam as amounted to a separate collection of rent from their joint tenants. But this view is not supported by a single word in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, and, in my opinion, is entirely opposed to the whole purport of that judgment. I may observe that the Subordinate Judge in coming to this decision in respect of partition, relies on the evidence of the witness, Kaly Prosanna Sarkar, which is to the effect that the lands were not only partitioned but separated. It appears to me, therefore, that on the first point the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in laying the burden of proof on the Defendants and that on the second point his decision is not secundum allegata.

I think, therefore, that the case must go back for rehearing. The learned Subordinate Judge will dispose of the case on decision of the point, whether the Plaintiff has succeeded in proving that these lands are not included within the howla Ram Mohan De. If he succeeds in proving this, he will, of course, be entitled to a decree : if not, the case must be dismissed as against the Appellants : and it will be for the learned Subordinate Judge to decide to what relief, if any, the Plaintiff may be entitled as against the Defendants who have not appealed. The materials before me at present are not sufficient to enable me to come to any decision on that point.

The costs will abide the result.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Gunoda Caran Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghosh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion we must set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The suit is one for the recovery of possession of an undivided half share of certain land, on the allegation that this share was included within a taluk Ram Ram Sen, of which the Plaintiff was a purchaser at a revenue sale. The defence of the Defendants was that as they were in possession they were entitled to retain that possession by virtue of a permanent tenure created by a certain howla. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the Defendants have failed to prove that the disputed land appertains to this particular howla. On appeal, however, Mr. Justice Coxe did not think that he was bound by that finding of fact, for it appeared to him that there had been an erroneous decision by the learned Judge as to the incidence of the onus of proof. He considered that it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff to show that the lands in dispute were not in the howla. The authority for this view is said to be found in Rajendro Kumar v. Mohim Chunder (1). That case does not profess to lay down any new law. The Judges make it clear that they only proposed to follow the decision of this Court in Rhidoy Kristo v. Nobin Chunder (2). An examination of that case makes it clear that all that the Court said or determined was that a Plaintiff must prove his allegations. In that case, the Plaintiff sued his tenant for khas possession. He admitted the tenants' holding but he alleged that the land in dispute was an encroachment beyond the proper boundaries of the holding and therefore it appeared to the Court that it was for the landlord to prove the encroachment. That was because the encroachment was the case made by the landlord in his plaint. That this is so is made abundantly clear by the contrast drawn in the judgment between these cases where the burden of proof lies upon the Defendant and where it lies upon the Plaintiff, in circumstances which have a superficial resemblance, one to the other, but which differ by reason of the particular allegations made by the Plaintiff in each case, and by reason of that which it is necessary for the Plaintiff to allege and prove. This is so apparent from the judgment itself that I need say no more than refer to the decision of Mr. Justice Banerjee in Sheodeni Roy v. Chatoorbhuj Roy (3) as giving the sanction of his high authority to this view. In my opinion, therefore, in the circumstances of this case there is a finding of fact by the Subordinate Judge vitiated by no error of law, and by that finding this case is concluded. I do not overlook the ingenious argument advanced by Mr. Jogendra Chandra Ghosh, based upon a reference to long possession, but I cannot find that adverse possession or even length of possession, as distinct from possession under the howla was ever the Defendant's case: and so far as limitation goes, it is apparent from the judgment of the Munsif that this was abandoned in the Court of first instance. Moreover, the judgment of Mr. Justice

Coxe as well as that of the Subordinate Judge, indicate in the clearest manner the lines within which this case proceeded. We cannot, therefore, give effect to this argument, and we must accordingly set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe, restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and direct that the Respondents do pay to the Appellant the costs incurred in the High Court.

An accused person who was being tried on a charge under sec. 457 for house-breaking with intent to commit theft, could not be convicted under sec. 456, I. P. C., without amendment of the original charge.

Although it is not necessary under sec. 456, I. P. C., to specify any particular offences intended to be committed, when a particular offence is specified under sec. 457, I. P. C., it is incompetent for the Court to convict the accused of house-breaking with some other intent.

Although in a summary trial the Magistrate need not frame a formal charge, still he must specify the offence charged in such a way as will give sufficient notice to the accused.

This was a Rule granted on the 19th of February 1912 against an order of Babu M. N. Mukerjee, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Uluberiah, dated the 17th of January 1912, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 456, I. P. C., and sentencing him to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment, an application for revision of which order was rejected by C. F. Payne, Esq., District Magistrate of Howrah, on the 23rd of January 1912.

The facts material to the report will appear from the following extract from the judgment of the lower Court :—

"The story of the theft is groundless as a perusal of the statement of the complainant and his daughter-in-law will at once show; but the story of the trespass has been proved satisfactorily. The accused got into the daughter-in-law's (P. W. No. 2) room through the opening between the thatch and the wall. She is a young childless woman and she was sleeping with her infant sister-in-law only. Her husband also was absent. He works in Calcutta in the press. All these facts go to show that the motive was not theft but something else which is not far to seek. The accused had apparently knowledge of these facts he having worked as a labourer for the complainant and had access into the zenana and was even on speaking terms with the complainant's wife (P. W. No. 3). It is absurd to assume that the complainant would bring a false case against the accused and take the risk of harassing his purdanashin women by dragging them into Court and lowering himself among his caste men. The motive for superadding the charge of theft is obvious. He did not like to let his neighbours know that the accused trespassed into the room of his daughter-in-law with an object other than that of theft. The accused pleads malice and ill-feeling against the

Rakusen v. Ellis Munday

and Clarke. Whether a firm of Solicitors which acted for the Plaintiff in a cause ought to be allowed to subsequently act for the Defendants in the same cause .. clxxxiv

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE VEXED AND SOMEWHAT DELICATE QUESTION of the right of solicitors to act for the antagonist of his original client in a later stage of the same case came up for the consideration of the Court of Appeal in Rakussen v. Ellis, Munday and Clarke, a note of which decision is published at page clxxxiv of this issue. In this case the Defendant firm of solicitors had in a previous stage of the case acted for the Plaintiff. At that time the case was in sole charge of Mr. Munday, one of the partners, while Mr. Clarke, the other partner, was away. At a later stage of the case the same firm was engaged by the Plaintiff's opponent and the Plaintiff sued for an injunction to restrain them from so acting. On behalf of the solicitors it was argued that the case was now in charge of Mr. Clarke who was a stranger to the case of the Plaintiff and that Mr. Munday would have nothing to do with it. The first Court had granted the injunction but the Court of Appeal set aside that decision.

THERE IS NO QUESTION THAT A CLIENT CAN claim that his solicitor, who has possession of confidential information which he could not be compelled to disclose in evidence, should not be a solicitor for the opposite party, because, as the Master of the Rolls observed in this case, "he could not clear his mind of information given to him confidentially." But in the circumstances of the case there could be no question of Mr. Clarke conveying confidential information to his new clients. The Plaintiff's case was therefore placed on the ground of a general principle that solicitors who had acted for the Plaintiff in a particular matter could not afterwards act for the opposite side in the same matter in any circumstances whatever.

NO DOUBT THE DECISION OF LORD ELDON in the leading case Cholemondeby v. Clinton, 19 Ves.

Jur. 261, lays down the law in somewhat broad terms in the case of a solicitor who had discharged himself from the case without deciding the case of a solicitor who had been discharged by the client. But Lord Eldon himself was disposed to take a somewhat qualified view of the case in Beer v. Wend, Jacob 77 and Bichams v. Thorp, Jacob 300, in which last case he looked into the facts of the case to consider whether in the circumstances of the case there was any reasonable apprehension of the Plaintiff being prejudiced on account of some confidential knowledge possessed by the Defendant solicitor and as it was not clear that he had such knowledge injunction was refused. No doubt in that case the Defendant had never been a solicitor for the Plaintiff but had been a clerk of the Plaintiff's solicitor. But even in the case of solicitors the same principle has since then been generally acted upon. In Little v. Kingswood Collieries Co., 20 Ch. D. 733, Hall V. C. laid down the general proposition that a solicitor might be restrained from acting for the opponent of his former client in the same case or in any transaction which flows out of or is connected with that in which the solicitor was formerly engaged. But the decision was disapproved by the Court of Appeal and by consent the injunction was withdrawn on the solicitor undertaking not to communicate any confidential information to his new client. This would show that in the opinion of the Court of Appeal a solicitor might act for his client's opponents unless in the special facts of the case there was anything making it unjust to the Plaintiff. The present decision would in this view seem to be in accordance with the inclination of the Court of Appeal in that case.

THE COURT IN SUCH CASES HAS A DELICATE DUTY to perform. As Lord Eldon pointed out in Bricheno v. Thorp, the Court had to take care that a solicitor was not unduly restrained from taking up a work. It is a question of balancing the interests of litigants against the reasonable liberty of the solicitor to act in any case. And the question is always a very delicate one and solicitors and other classes of lawyers would surely be on the safe side not to change sides. The enquiry into the actual state of the solicitor's knowledge is bound to be more or less futile; for the facts can never be fully discussed in open Court as that would be precipitating the anticipated evil. And it may be presumed that the Courts would look upon such cases with considerable jealousy and except in very clear cases would be slow to permit any class of lawyers to change sides. There is no question in this view that the Master of the Rolls in this case lays down the correct principles according to which these cases should be decided. The decision therefore has some interest for the profession here where cases of this character, though happily rare, are not altogether unknown.

THE DECISION OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR India in Council to retain the Board of Revenue for Bengal as also for Behar, each being placed under the charge of a single member, is indeed a very wise one. That the previous decision of Lord Morley to abolish the Board did not arouse much opposition, was because there was a widespread belief in the reconstitution of the Province and until this was done people did not care much about the changes in details of administration. It was also well-known that even if the Board was abolished, it would be so only in name, the duties of the members of the Board being transferred to a member of the Executive Council. But we entertained serious doubts whether such a delegation of the Board's duties to a member of the Executive Council would have improved matters in any way. A member of the Executive Council has to attend to various administrative questions and has to exercise a considerable amount of thought and deliberation over them. The duties of the member of the Board are quasi-judicial. So it would hardly have been either practicable or desirable to combine in one member both these executive and judicial functions. In Madras where these are combined the decision of the member has sometimes elicited severe comment from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. (See Fischer v. Secretary of State, 3 C. W. N. 161). We are therefore of opinion that Lord Crewe has been very well advised in bringing about this modification in the scheme of his predecessor.

THE BOARD OF REVENUE, IT MUST BE REMEMBERED, is a fairly ancient institution, and its origin can be traced back almost to the time when Lord Clive secured the grant of the Dewani to the East India Company. When in 1771, the Court of Directors sent out instructions "to stand forth as Dewan and by the agency of the Company's servants to take upon themselves the entire care and management of the revenues," and the Naib Dewans at Patna and Murshidabad were in consequence removed, a Board of Revenue consisting of the Governor and Members of Council and an Accountant-General with assistants was constituted to supervise the work of the "Collectors." The Board as so constituted however could do nothing as the Collectorships were not properly constituted until 1786, when an inquisitorial body, styled the Committee of Revenue, was instructed to divide the huzuri mahals into Collectorships in such manner that no one Collectorship should exceed in jam the sum of eight lakhs of rupees. In the result as many as 24 Collectorships were constituted, and a Board of Revenue was thereupon on the 21st June of the same year formally constituted and substituted for the "Committee of Revenue." One of the members of Government was made the President of the Board and by rules framed in 1788, the Board was vested with the general functions of "deliberation, superintendence and control" and was charged with the duty to take care that the officers under its authority should perform their assigned duties with regularity, integrity and assiduity. The rules were subsequently embodied in statutory form in Reg. II of 1793, the essential portions of which are still in force. (See Field's Introduction to the Regulations, p. 91).

SINCE THE DATE OF THIS REGULATION CHANGES have taken place in the constitution of the Board, and whilst its position as defined above, viz., as the supreme provincial authority exercising "supervision and control" over Collectors, Commissioners and other revenue officers, has been preserved, it has acquired very large judicial and quasi-judicial powers under statutes passed in the main by the Provincial Legislature. A glance at these statutes would at once show how jealous the Government has been to preserve the power of supervision and control of the Board, for even where rights of appeal have been conferred on the parties, and it is laid down that that right is to be availed of within a particular period of time, the power of the Board to interfere suo motu in revision and irrespective of the periods of limitation is very often retained.

THE JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS AS EXERCISED BY THE Board are thus largely tempered by equitable powers of a discretionary nature, and although there are manuals issued under its authority laying down rules of procedure with a minuteness unknown even to the codes framed for the guidance of our Civil Courts, in practice the "foot" of the member for the time being often furnishes the measure of justice dealt out to the parties. The members of the Board have up to now been recruited exclusively from the executive line. There can be no doubt that one who has served as a Collector in the districts and held the position of a Divisional Commissioner is very well posted in revenue matters. But it would be a distinct advantage if future members of the Board combined also some judicial experience acquired at some part of their career.

ALTHOUGH IT HAS NOW BEEN FINALLY DECIDED TO maintain the Board, still we believe it is in the contemplation of Government to distribute some of its functions amongst the Divisional Commissioners. If we were not apprehensive that the process of decentralisation favoured by the Government at the present moment has a general tendency to instal the Collector as a local autocrat (a position which he never held at any stage of British occupation except in the imagination of a particular class of political writers), we would concede that there are directions in which the Board's power may without prejudice be transferred to Commissioners. But what power may be so delegated would require very careful consideration. The revenue legislation of the province furnishes to litigants too many opportunities of review and revision, and this even where the decision of the Revenue authorities must be inconclusive and the final settlement must rest with the Civil Courts. Land Registration cases furnish an apt illustration. The various Revenue manuals, though they are edited with a care which is hardly ever bestowed on private compilations, are a real terror to lawyers practising in Civil Courts who may at short notice be called upon to advise a client, owing to the complicated maze of statutory provisions and rules, and instructions, and circular orders, and rulings of the Hon'ble Board which it presents to those not familiarised with the details by extended use and practice. We shall certainly welcome the appointment by Government of a small committee of Government officials and pleaders possessing Mofussil experience to examine the whole matter and formulate possible modes of simplification, which we are sure can be found so as not to affect the Board's authority, before any important steps are taken for the distribution of the Board's powers amongst Commissioners and Collectors.

THE TRANSFER OF OCCUPANCY HOLDING—WHETHER VOID OR VOIDABLE.

II

Confining attention solely to the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act and without referring to the case law on the subject, one is led to the conclusion that there is no statutory provisions concerning the transfer of occupancy holdings by act of parties and that such transfers are regulated only by custom. It seems further that the Bengal Tenancy Act creates no presumption either in favour of its transferability or of its non-transferability. The fact that there is no provision in Ch. V, such as we find in the two preceding chapters relating to tenures and ryoti holdings at fixed rates, declaring occupancy holding to be transferable, might at first sight lead one to suppose that the Legislature by this omission intended to make occupancy holdings non-transferable in law. But a careful study of sec. 183, specially its illustration (a), would seem to militate against the imputing of such intention to the Legislature. That illustration says "A usage under which a ryot is entitled to sell his holding without the consent of the landlord is not inconsistent with, and is not expressly or by necessary implication modified or abolished by, the provisions of this Act. That usage, accordingly wherever it may exist will not be affected by this Act." If the omission by necessary implication indicates that occupancy holdings are non transferable in law, evidence of custom of transferability, would be inadmissible inasmuch as no custom can override the express or implied provisions of the law unless the law itself expressly saves such custom. In this connection it is to be borne in mind that sec. 183 saves only those customs which are not inconsistent with or not expressly or by necessary implication modified or abolished by its provisions. Thus the omission amounts to mere silence only. If there could be still any doubt as to the intention of the framers of the Act, it is set at rest by the actually recorded expression of these intentions in the report of the Select Committee. It is stated there, "Turning now to the incidence attached to the right of occupancy it will be seen that we have made a most important change (i.e., in the 2nd Bill which proposed to legalise the transfer of occupancy holdings) in regard to one of these incidents—transferability. Instead of legalising it and regulating it by law, we have left it everywhere to custom" (S. C. R. III).

So there is no statutory law on the subject and the whole thing is to be regulated by custom. Now the custom may conceivably be different in different localities. For instance, there may be a custom of transfer of occupancy holding without the consent of the landlord. In such a case the transfer is valid and quite binding even on the landlord who must recognise the transferee in the place of the original tenant. Secondly, there may be a custom of transfer of occupancy holding with the consent of the landlord. In such a case the transfer by the original tenant to the purchaser should be interpreted having regard to the principle referred to by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the Full Bench case Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtunia (11 C. W. N. 1011) as a voidable transaction, i.e., quite binding as between the vendor and the vendee but voidable at the option of the landlord. Thirdly, there may exist a custom under which occupancy holdings are not transferable at all and the transfer if made is void ab initio so that the purchaser acquires no title by purchase. If he is allowed to retain possession of the holding an entirely new tenancy is created. Where such custom prevails the tenant can successfully raise the objection of the non-transferability of his holding upon a sale of the holding in execution of an ordinary money decree against him. Lastly, there may be a custom under which the transfer of the holding of an occupancy ryot would pass to the purchaser the holding alone (i.e., minus the right of occupancy). In the case of a Girish Chandra Choudhury v. Kedar Nath Roy, 4 C. W. N. 569, their Lordships Macpherson and Stevens, JJ., said "It does not seem possible on any principle to hold that in the case of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the holding can be sold without the right of occupancy so as to give the transferee a right to retain possession of it." But supposing that such a custom actually exists somewhere, does the Bengal Tenancy Act interfere with or abolish such a custom? It is not contended that all these customs actually exist in some place or other but arguing on probabilities only we cannot say that the transaction is either valid, void or voidable without referring to the particular custom of the locality in which the holding is situated.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Rakusen v. Ellis, Munday and Clarke. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 19th March, 1911.

Solicitors—Whether a firm of solicitors which acted for the Plaintiff in a cause ought to be allowed to subsequently act for the Defendants in the same cause.

This was an appeal from a decision of Warrington, J. The Defendants were a firm of solicitors. The Plaintiff was formerly in the employ of a company which gave him a notice of dismissal. The Plaintiff then consulted the firm of solicitors (i.e., Defendants) but afterwards gave them up, and engaged other solicitors to conduct the action of wrongful dismissal. The action was referred to arbitration, but meanwhile the company which was sued by the Plaintiff engaged the Defendants, solicitors, to act for them. To this the Plaintiff objected as he said he had given to his former solicitors some confidential information, and moved for an injunction to restrain the Defendants from acting as solicitors for the company. The Defendants pleaded that their partner Mr. Munday alone attended to the Plaintiff's business; and that another partner would be conducting the company's case. The Court below granted the injunction holding that it was not proper to allow a firm of solicitors which had acted for a Plaintiff in a particular cause to act subsequently for the Defendants. The judgment was reversed on appeal. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said:—

It was of vast importance that no doubt should exist as to the position of solicitors or as to the jurisdiction of the Courts over solicitors. Solicitors enjoyed great privileges and were subject to corresponding liabilities. Of these privileges no better example could be given than the absolute privilege which existed with regard to communications between solicitor and client. The Court expected and exacted from solicitors a higher standard of conduct than it ever could exact from those who were not officers of the Court. Solicitors could be restrained from disclosing any secrets of a confidential nature, and in that respect their position did not very much differ from the position of other persons, standing in a confidential relation to their employers. But it was said that, in addition to this obligation not to disclose secrets, there existed a general principle laying down that solicitors who had acted for a Plaintiff in a particular matter could not afterwards act for the opposite side in the same matter under any circumstances whatever; and that this was so much a general rule that the Court ought not to have regard to the special circumstances of the case.

He did not doubt for a moment that there might be cases where the circumstances were such that a solicitor ought not to be allowed to act for the other side because he could not clear his mind of information given to him confidentially by his former client; but the Court ought to treat each of these cases as a matter of substance on the particular facts and consider, before applying this special jurisdiction, whether there was real mischief and prejudice.

His Lordship said that if this had been a case where Mr. Munday, having obtained confidential information from the Plaintiff, then sought to act for the Defendants, he should have said it was a case in which the solicitor could not discharge his duty to the Defendants without availing himself of the information of the Plaintiff. But what were the facts here? The communications were all made by the Plaintiff to Mr. Munday at a time when Mr. Clarke, the other partner, was away for his vacation, and Mr. Clarke knew nothing about the matter. Before his return the firm ceased to act for the Plaintiff, and in these circumstances was there any reason why Mr. Clarke should not be allowed to act in the arbitration for the company? There could be no resulting prejudice or mischief, and, having regard to the undertaking given by the Appellants that the name of the solicitors on the record should be changed from the firm name to that of Clarke alone, there was no ground whatever for granting an injunction.

complainant but the plea has hardly been proved by the uncorroborated and vague statement of Sariatullah (defence witness No. 1). It is also in evidence that he absconded after the occurrence. In these circumstances I find a charge under sec. 456, P. C., has been brought home against the accused."

Mr. Donogh and Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Howrah to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner should not be set aside on the ground that before convicting under sec. 456 the charge under secs. 457 and 380, I. P. C., should have been amended.

We think that there can be no doubt on the authorities that the charge under sec. 456 of entering the house with an object not specified but which is presumed to be criminal cannot be sustained when the person is being tried for the specific charge of theft in a dwelling-house and house-breaking with intent to commit theft. It is obvious that he must be seriously prejudiced by not knowing what really is the charge against him. Although it is not necessary under sec. 456 to specify any particular offence, when such particular offence is specified under sec. 457 it is incompetent in our opinion to convict of house-breaking with some other intent.

The question then arises whether there should be a retrial in this case considering that the Magistrate in the lower Court thought that the case was one that he was competent to try summarily and therefore must have regarded it as a petty case and that the accused has already been one month eight days in jail. We do not think it necessary to order a retrial.

We would remark with reference to the explanation of the learned Magistrate that he is wholly in error in supposing that because the case is tried summarily that a charge under the Penal Code is not necessary. No formal charge need be drawn up but the accused must be called upon to answer to the particulars of the offence charged, whether the proceedings be summary or otherwise. Sec. 263 says that the Magistrates need not frame a formal charge but they must specify the offence complained of and that must be in our opinion sufficient to give the accused notice of what is charged against him. It cannot be said that in a summary trial misjoinder of charges can be made without remedy. The same rules of law as apply to charges in warrant cases must apply to the particulars set out in sec. 263 in a summary record.

The Rule is made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the Petitioner will be released of his bail, unless he is liable to be detained for any other matter.

Plaintiff and Defendant, who were partners in a business of exporting and selling tea grown upon certain estates belonging to the Defendant, in 1895 dissolved their partnership by a deed in which it was stipulated inter alia that for 10 years after the 30th July 1896, when the Plaintiff took over the whole business, the Defendant should sell the whole or any part of the crops grown on the said estates to the Plaintiff at a valuation so long as the Plaintiff should pay to the Defendant yearly a sum of £75 for the use of the names of the Defendant's estates and should express his intention of purchasing the whole or any part of the crops, and that "if the Defendant should fail or neglect or refuse to sell the whole or any part of the crops of the Defendant's estates as above provided Defendant should pay to the Plaintiff the sum of £500 as liquidated damages and not as a penalty." The Defendant having in the first half of the year 1906 sold to other persons five parcels of tea amounting in the aggregate to 53,315 lbs. without offering the Plaintiff the option of buying the same the Plaintiff sued the Defendant for £500 as liquidated damages in respect of this breach. The Defendant having contended that the stipulation was by way of penalty, Held—That whatever the expression used in the contract in describing such a payment, the question must always be whether the construction contended for renders the agreement unconscionable and extravagant when made and one which no Court ought to allow to be enforced.

That, in this case, it was impossible for the parties when making the contract to foresee the extent of the injury which might be sustained by the Plaintiff on breach, that it was obvious that sales in breach of the contract would seriously affect his business, and that having regard to the very uncertainty of the loss likely to arise and to the fact that damages of this kind, though very real, might be difficult of proof and that the proof might entail considerable expense, it was most reasonable for the parties to agree beforehand as to what the damages should be.

THE CLYDEBANK ENGINEERING COMPANY, LIMITED v. DON JOSE CASTANEDA (1) followed.

That the payment stipulated was by way of liquidated damages fixing once for all the sum to be paid and not merely a penalty covering the damages though not assessing the same; and the Plaintiff, under the circumstances, could not be called upon to adduce evidence of damage actually sustained by him.

That the parties to the agreement were merchants using language in the sense in which it is used in their trade, and the expression "part of the crop" did not mean parcels which might be sold over a grocer's counter but parcels such as were in fact sold in the present case. Nor was it intended that if successive parcels forming parts of the same crop were sold a right to claim £500 in respect of each sale would accrue.

This was an Appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Ceylon, dated the 21st of December 1909, reversing a judgment of the District Court of Colombo, dated the 1st March 1909.

The facts of the case in so far as they are material will appear from the judgment.

ROWLAND VALENTINE WEBSTER v. WILLIAM DAVID BOSANQUET.

Messrs. A. Grant, K. C., and Thompson for the Appellant.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., and Corbett for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MERSEY.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Ceylon, dated the 21st December 1909, reversing a judgment of the District Court of Colombo, dated the 1st March 1909. The question raised by the appeal is whether a payment stipulated by deed to be made by the Defendant to the Plaintiff is to be regarded as a payment by way of liquidated damages or merely as a penalty.

The Court of first instance held that the stipulation was for a payment by way of liquidated damages; the Supreme Court took a different view and held that the stipulation was for a penalty only.

There is no dispute about the facts of the case, and they are as follows :—

In 1891 the Plaintiff and the Defendant entered into partnership for the purpose of exporting and selling Ceylon tea, and particularly tea grown upon certain estates in the island belonging to the Defendant and known as the Palamcottah and Marawilla estates. The part of the Plaintiff in connection with the enterprise was to travel for the purpose of pushing the sale of the tea, and this he did so successfully that by the year 1895 he had established a valuable trade. In that year the partnership was dissolved, the Plaintiff buying the Defendant's interest in the goodwill for a sum of 3,500*l.* and taking over the assets at a valuation. The dissolution was effected by a deed, dated the 14th February 1895, which contained among other things a provision that the Defendant should for a period of ten years after the 30th July 1896, sell the whole or any part of the crops of the Marawilla and Palamcottah estates to the Plaintiff at a valuation so long as the Plaintiff should pay to the Defendant yearly a sum of 75*l.* for the use of the names of the two estates, and should express his intention of purchasing the whole or any part of the said crops. The deed then provided as follows :—

"And the said Bosanquet shall not be at liberty to sell during the period aforesaid the whole or any part of the tea crops of the Marawilla and/or Palamcottah estates to any person other than the said Webster without first offering to the said Webster the option of buying the same, so long as Webster shall pay to Bosanquet the yearly payment of 75*l.*; and if the said Bosanquet shall fail, neglect, or refuse to sell the whole or any part of the crop of the Marawilla and/or Palamcottah estates as hereinbefore provided to the said Webster, he shall pay to Webster the sum of 500*l.* as liquidated damages and not as a penalty."

The Plaintiff duly performed his part of this agreement, but in the first half of the year 1906, the Defendant, in breach of the agreement, sold to persons other than the Plaintiff five different parcels of tea of the Palamcottah crop, amounting in the aggregate to 53,315 lbs., without offering to the Plaintiff the option of buying the same. In February 1908, the Plaintiff issued his writ in the present action, claiming the sum of 500*l.* as liquidated damages in respect of the said breach. It was alleged (and found as a fact at the trial) that the sales had been made by the Defendant under a mistake of fact as to the date on which the obligation to give the option of purchase to the Plaintiff terminated, but the learned Judge held this to be immaterial, and being of opinion that the stipulation for the payment of the 500*l.* meant what it said, namely, that it should be by way of liquidated damages, gave judgment for the amount claimed. The Supreme

ROWLAND VALENTINE WEBSTER v. WILLIAM DAVID BOSANQUET.

Court overruled this decision and sent the case back to the Court of first instance to ascertain the actual damage sustained by the Plaintiff by reason of the breach. On the rehearing the Plaintiff offered no evidence as to damages, and the Court awarded the Plaintiff by way of nominal damages the sum of 10*l.*, which amount the Defendant had brought into Court in satisfaction of the Plaintiff's claim. The question is which view of the contract is right.

The cases in which the Courts have had to consider whether a stipulated payment in respect of the breach of a contract should be regarded as liquidated damages fixing once for all the sum to be paid or merely as a penalty covering the damages though not assessing them, are innumerable and perhaps difficult to reconcile. But it is unnecessary to examine them for their effect is sufficiently and very clearly stated in the case of The Clydebank Engineering Company, Limited v. Don Jose Castaneda (1). From that case it appears that whatever be the expression used in the contract in describing the payment, the question must always be whether the construction contended for renders the agreement unconscionable and extravagant and one which no Court ought to allow to be enforced. After stating this principle Lord Halsbury proceeded as follows :—

"It is impossible to lay down any abstract rule as to what it may or may not be extravagant or unconscionable to insist upon, without reference to the particular facts and circumstances which are established in the individual case."

And Lord Davey, in delivering his opinion, says :—

"You are to consider whether it is extravagant, exorbitant, or unconscionable at the time when the stipulation is made—that is to say, in regard to any possible amount of damages which may be conceived to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract."

Applying the principle to be found in these judgments to the facts of the present case the proper construction to be put upon the contract appears to their Lordships to be plain. When making the contract it was impossible to foresee the extent of the injury which might be sustained by the Plaintiff if sales of the tea were made to third parties without his consent. That such sales might seriously affect his business was obvious, and the very uncertainty of the loss likely to arise made it most reasonable for the parties to agree beforehand as to what the damages should be. And, furthermore, it is well known that damages of this kind, though very real, may be difficult of proof, and that the proof may entail considerable expense. This consideration also afforded a reason for fixing the amount beforehand. It was suggested in the course of the argument that to treat the 500*l.* as liquidated damages might involve such extravagant consequences as to render the agreement absurd, for the sum might be claimed in respect of every pound of tea sold in breach of the stipulation. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the stipulation is not capable of such an interpretation. The parties to the agreement were merchants using language in the sense in which it is used in their trade. When they speak of a "part of a crop" they are not contemplating packets which might be sold over a grocer's counter, but parcels such as were in fact sold in the present case. Moreover, the breach consists of the selling to third parties. It matters not whether the sale is of the whole or of part of a crop, nor whether it is made in one lot or in many. The agreement neither says nor means that, if successive parcels forming parts of the same crop be sold, a right to claim 500*l.* in respect of each sale shall accrue; all such parts put together cannot amount to more than the whole crop, and the penalty for the sale of the whole is limited to the 500*l.*

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the contract stipulates for what in words it says, namely, for a payment of money by way of liquidated damages and not by way of penalty.

They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the judgment of the Supreme Court should be set aside, and the original judgment of the District Court restored. The Respondent must pay all the costs in the Courts below and also the costs of this appeal.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 521 OF 1910.

NILAMBAR SAHA,

BRETT, J.

Appellant,

SHARFUDDIN, J. |

v.

1912,

KUMAR SATYAPRIYA

18, April.

GHOSAL BAHADUR,

Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 65—Co-sharer landlords—Separate decrees for rent for the same period—Sale of the tenure in satisfaction of one of the decrees—Subsequent sale of the same tenure in execution of the other decree, if permissible—Charge, first—Priority.

Where two co-sharer landlords obtained separate decrees for rent for the same period

(each making in his own suit his co-sharer a party) and the tenure was sold in satisfaction of the decree obtained by one of them:

Held—That the other co-sharer landlord could not execute his decree by sale of the same tenure after it passed into the hands of the auction purchaser and all that he was entitled to was to recover the sum due to him which from being a first charge on the tenure itself had, on the sale of the tenure, passed as a first charge on the surplus sale-proceeds.

When two persons have charges on a property of equal priority, the first who takes out execution is entitled to satisfy his decree by sale of the property and the other person loses his right to proceed against that property.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910 against an order of Mr. P. E. Cammiade, District Judge of Zillah Backergunge, dated the 31st of July 1910 reversing that of Babu Kunja Behary Roy Munsif at Backergunge, dated the 21st of March 1910.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—

The Respondent who was a co-sharer landlord brought a suit for rent No. 821 of 1906 on the 17th April 1906 for arrears of rent for 1309 to 1312 making his co-sharers parties Defendants to the suit. A similar suit for rent was brought for the same period by his co-sharers, Satya Bhusan Ghosal and others, on the same day in the same Court (Suit No. 752 of 1906) making their co-sharer a party Defendant to the suit.

The appeal arises out of proceedings taken by the Respondent for execution of the decree, to which the Appellants, who had meanwhile purchased the tenure in execution of the decree of the Respondent's co-sharers, objected on the ground that the property purchased by him could not be sold again, and that the Respondent's remedy was to proceed against the surplus sale-proceeds.

The dates and the other facts material to this report will appear from the following portion of the judgment of the first Court.

"Both the suits were in respect of the same tenure in question. Suit No. 821 was decreed on the 21st July 1906 while the other suit was decreed on the 17th August 1906. Neither the tenant Defendants nor the co-sharer Defendants appeared in any of the cases and consequently they were decreed ex parte for the Plaintiff's share of the rent. It was alleged in the plaint in Suit No. 752 that the co-sharer Defendant refused to join as his share of rent was realised by him and the Plaintiff prayed that in case the latter's share of rent be found also due, a decree might be passed for that amount too. The Plaintiff in the other suit alleged that the co-sharers refused to join in the plaint and hence were made parties Defendants with a similar prayer as in Suit No. 752. In execution of the decree passed in Suit No. 752 the whole tenure was sold in execution and purchased by the applicant Nilambar Saha for Rs. 1,200 on the 15th March 1909 and the sale was confirmed on 7th May 1909. The applicant then obtained the sale certificate and took possession of the tenure through Court in August 1909. This tenure is the property No. 1 in the present execution case."

The first Court allowed the objection of the Appellant, Nilambar Saha, and remarked as follows :—

"The question is whether the decree in Suit No. 752 was a rent decree or a money decree. Both the decrees were virtually of the same nature and if they were money decrees, the objector has no better right to put up the property for sale than that of the decree-holder in the said suit. Both the decrees were passed before the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy (Amendment) Act came into operation. If they were not rent decrees, the whole tenure passed to the auction-purchaser and the objector has no right to put it up again for sale. Considering the nature in which the plaint in Suit No 752 was framed I think that the decree passed therein was a rent decree. The proceedings in execution of that decree appear to have been started under the provisions of the Tenancy Act (vide sale certificate, Ex. 3). The sale also took place under these provisions. The objector did not raise any objection to the same at that time."

The Respondent thereupon preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court and the said appeal was allowed and the learned Judge remarked as follows :—

"The suit instituted by the Appellant was certainly a rent suit and I very much doubt if that instituted by his co-sharer was one. The plaint filed by the Appellant is practically the facsimile of the plaint, the effect of which was discussed in Pergash Lal v. Akhowri Balgovind Sahoy (1). The plaint was therefore framed in conformity with the provisions of the Tenancy Act; and the suit must be treated as a suit for the entire rent of the tenure with an alternative prayer for the Plaintiff's share of the rent, in case the share of the co-sharer had already been realised. There is nothing before me to show that the Appellant at any stage of his suit was aware that the share of the rent due to his co-sharer was unpaid. I find that the Appellant's suit was a suit for the entire rent of the tenure and that the decree obtained by him was a rent decree. The fact that the co-sharer's suit was registered before the Appellant's does not in my opinion affect the Appellant's right to proceed against the tenure. The Appellant's decree was granted before his co-sharer's; and that decree created a legal charge on the property which the decree subsequently obtained by the co-sharer could not in any way affect. This charge was subsisting at the time the property was purchased by the Respondent and it could not be avoided by a notice under sec. 165.

(1) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 735 (1890).

NILAMBAR SAHA v. KUMAR SATYAPRIYA GHOSAL BAHADUR.

"In these circumstances I find that the Respondent has no right to object to the sale of the tenure in execution of the Appellant's decree, even if, which I doubt, there is any provision in the law for such an application as the Respondent.

"I accordingly set aside the orders of the lower Court and order that the execution be proceeded with."

Nilambar Saha then preferred the present appeal.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The present appeal is against an order in certain execution proceedings taken by the Respondent for realisation of a decree for rent which he obtained against his tenant.

It appears that the Respondent is a co-sharer landlord and he brought a suit (No. 821 of 1906) to recover his share of the rent from 1309 to 1312 making the other co-sharer landlord a party Defendant. On the same day, the other co-sharer landlord brought a suit (No. 752 of 1906) to recover his share of the rent making his co-sharer, namely, the present Respondent, a Defendant in that suit. The claim of the present Respondent was decreed on the 21st July 1906 and that of his co-sharers was decreed on the 17th August 1906. The other co-sharer landlord, however, took out execution of his decree first, put up the tenure to sale and, on the 15th March 1909, it was purchased by the present Appellant for Rs. 1,200. The sale was confirmed on the 7th May 1909 and possession was given in August 1909. The decree under which the tenure was sold was for recovery of Rs. 665 due as rent. After all these proceedings, the present Respondent took out execution of the decree which he had obtained and an objection was then put in by the present Appellant, the auction-purchaser, that the same property could not be sold again, as the right of the tenant in the property had been lost and that the only remedy open to the present Respondent was by proceeding against the surplus sale-proceeds obtained in execution of the other co-sharers' decree.

The Court of first instance allowed the objection but the lower Appellate Court has disallowed it and has directed that execution should proceed of the decree obtained by the present Respondent by sale over again of the tenure.

The auction-purchaser has appealed to this Court and the question which we have to determine is whether, when two co-sharer landlords have obtained separate decrees for rent for the same period and when the tenure has been sold in satisfaction of the decree obtained by one of them, the other co-sharer landlord can come forward and claim to execute his decree by sale of the same property after it has passed into the hands of the auction-purchaser. The lower Appellate Court has been influenced by the fact that rent is a first charge on the tenure. But in the present instance, the charges of both the co-sharers were equal in priority and strength and the learned pleader who appears on behalf of the Defendant has not been able to indicate to us any provision of the law which provides that, in such a case, either of the decrees shall have priority over the other. The only principle which it seems possible to apply in a case like the present where two persons have decrees equal in priority is that the first who takes out execution is the first who is entitled to satisfy his decree by sale of the property and that the other person who delays to take out his execution loses his right to proceed against the property itself. The learned pleader for the Respondent has argued that as the charge under the Respondent's decree was a first charge on the tenure and, as such, bound the tenure, therefore, when the property was sold in satisfaction of the other decree, it must be taken to have been sold subject to the charge existing on it by reason of the decree obtained by the Respondent. We are unable to find any authority for this contention and, in our opinion, the only possible view to take in a case like the present is that, where each of two persons has an equal charge on a property, the person who is the first in time to apply for execution of his decree is entitled to satisfy his decree by sale of the property and the person who comes later and applies for execution after the tenure has been sold is not entitled to sell the tenure again as the tenure has then ceased to be a tenure of the tenant and has passed into the possession of the auction-purchaser. All that he is entitled to is to recover the sum due to him which from being a first charge on the tenure itself has, on the sale of the tenure, passed as a first charge on the surplus sale-proceeds. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is wrong and that the appeal must be decreed and the application of the Respondent, so far as it seeks to execute his decree by resale of the tenure, must be disallowed and it must be left to him to execute his decree otherwise against the property of his debtor. The Appellant is entitled to recover his costs from the Respondent in this Court and in both the lower Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

Nos. 58, 49, 57 AND 59, OF 1910.

Judgment,		Respondent.
11, July.

Execution sale—Joint decree—Application to set aside sale by some of judgment-debtors, if whole sale can be set aside—Sale proclamation, gross understatement of value by decree-holder, if by itself vitiates sale—Waiver by judgment-debtor of fresh sale proclamation, if amounts to waiver of other irregularities.

Where a decree was obtained jointly against several persons and their respective liabilities were not ascertained therein, and the decree-holder proceeding against them jointly had their property sold in execution, held, that upon good cause shown the whole sale should be set aside although only some of the judgment-debtors applied within time to set aside the sale.

The application of the other judgment-debtors though made out of time could very well be treated as applications to be added as parties to the previous application of their co-judgment-debtors having regard to the fact that all the applications were tried together and were thus virtually consolidated.

Where on the date fixed for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor applied for a postponement and agreed that if the decree was not paid up by the adjourned date the sale might be held without the issue of fresh proclamation, and the decree not having been paid up the sale took place on the adjourned date,

Held—That in the absence of evidence to show that they were aware of the contents of the sale proclamation it could not be said that the judgment-debtor had waived any irregularities in the sale proclamation which contained a gross understatement of the value of the attached properties.

GIRIDHARI SINGH v. HURDEO NARAIN (2), ARUNACHELAM v. ARUNACHELAM (6) distinguished.

*Where with the object of seizing a very valuable property for the smallest possible price, the decree-holder grossly understated its value in the sale proclamation with the consequence that he was able to purchase the property without competition at a fraction of its real price, **

Held—That the deliberate misstatement of value in the sale proclamation was by itself a sufficient ground for vacating the sale.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No. 58 of 1910.

This appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has dismissed an application for reversal of the sale of a Putni Taluk held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The putni was created on the 11th July 1882, by two instruments, under each of which the annual rent was fixed at Rs. 3,400 and a bonus of Rs. 6,800 was paid to the zemindar. It appears that the tenants committed default in the payment of rent, with the result that, on the 2nd July 1908, the landlord obtained a decree for rent against seven Defendants, for a sum of Rs. 7,000. Of these Defendants, the first three were interested to the extent of a five-twelfths share in the tenancy right; the next two, to the extent of a three-eighths share, and the remaining two, to the extent of a five-twenty-fourths share. The landlord, however, had not recognised this distribution of shares, and he was entitled, under his decree, to bring the entire putni to sale. On the 2nd December 1908, the decree-holder applied for execution, and for realisation of the judgment-debt, which at that time exceeded Rs. 7,735. At the instance of the landlord decree-holder, the value of the property was stated in the sale proclamation as Rs. 4,000. The Court directed the simultaneous issue of attachment and sale proclamation; returns of services of the writs were filed on the 21st December and the sale was fixed for the 3rd February 1909. On that date, an application was made on behalf of the judgment-debtors for adjournment of the execution proceedings for one month to enable them to pay the decretal amount. In this application it was stated that if they failed to pay on the 1st March 1909, the sale might be held without the issue of a fresh proclamation to which the Petitioners would not raise any objection on the ground of irregularities etc. The Court thereupon recorded the following order:—"Judgment-debtors' petition to stay sale put in; but as it is not consented to by the decree-holder, the petition is rejected; on 4th February 1909, (that is, the day following) for orders and sale." On the next day, the judgment-debtors renewed their application. It was stated that the application made on the previous day had been rejected, because it had not been made on behalf of all the judgment-debtors. The second application was therefore made on the strength of a power-of-attorney purporting to have been signed by all the judgment-debtors, and it was prayed, as before, that the sale might be postponed till the 1st March 1909; it was stated that, if meanwhile the decree was not satisfied, the sale might be held without the issue of a fresh proclamation, to which the Petitioners would not take objection on the ground of irregularity. The decree-holder assented to this application, and the Court thereupon recorded the following order:—"Judgment-debtors' petition consented to by the decree-holder, the sale is stayed till noon of the 1st March 1909 for sale. Fresh sale notice waived by judgment-debtors." The money was not paid and, on the 1st March 1909, the Court directed the property to be sold on the day following. On the 2nd March the properties were sold for Rs. 20,000 and purchased by the decree-holder who was the sole bidder present. On the 1st April 1909, the fourth and fifth Defendants applied for reversal of the sale, and two similar applications were subsequently made by the first three judgment-debtors on the 22nd April and by the 6th and 7th judgment-debtors on the 24th April. On the 29th April a fourth application of a similar character was made by one Janak Kishori who claimed to be interested to the extent of an one-eighth share out of the three-eighth share of the fourth and fifth Defendants. The Subordinate Judge has held, upon the evidence, that there have been grave irregularities in connection with the proceedings antecedent to the sale. He has held, first, that the decree could be executed only as a money decree and, consequently, the writs of attachment and proclamation of sale could not be simultaneously published; secondly, that the writs were not published at the proper thana and Mal Katchari; thirdly, that the processes were not published at the Katchari of the zemindar according to law ; and, fourthly, that there was a gross understatement of the value of the property in the sale proclamation. The Subordinate Judge has further held that there was great inadequacy in the price fetched at the sale, because the real value of the property is at least twice as much as the sum paid by the decree-holder. The Subordinate Judge, however, has negatived the contention that the conduct of the decree-holder was fraudulent. He has finally dismissed the application on the ground, that the judgment-debtors had waived all objections to irregularities in connexion with the execution proceedings, and that the applications of all the judgment-debtors except the fourth and fifth were barred by limitation. As regards these two judgment-debtors the Subordinate Judge has held that their application was obviously in time. As regards Janak Kishori the Subordinate Judge has held that there was no waiver of irregularities on her part, but that although she did not become aware of the sale or of the execution proceedings before the 7th April 1909 and her petition was made on the 29th April, it was nevertheless barred by limitation as she had not brought her case within sec. 18 of the Limitation Act. In this view the Subordinate Judge has dismissed all the applications and confirmed the sale. The judgment-debtors have preferred separate appeals against this order, and we shall first consider the appeal of the fourth and fifth judgment-debtors. In so far as they are concerned their application is not barred by limitation and the only ground on which it has been dismissed is that they waived all objections on the ground of irregularity in the execution proceedings. This view has been assailed on their behalf on the ground they waived a fresh sale notice but did not waive any objections which might legitimately be taken in respect of the first sale proclamation. In our opinion this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Dhanukdhari Singh v. Nathuni Sahu (1) that whether there has been a waiver or not of the rights of the judgment-debtors and if so to what extent depends upon the circumstances of each case ; the existence of an intent to waive is a question of fact, and the best evidence of intention is to be found in the language and conduct of the parties ; the Courts cannot lay down any stereotyped and inelastic rule by which all cases of waiver must be governed. Now, in the case before us, when the judgment-debtors applied on the 4th February 1909 for adjournment of the sale for one month, it became obligatory upon the Court, if the application was granted, to issue a fresh sale proclamation under the provisions of the Code. R. 69, sub-r. (2) of Or. XXI provides that where a sale is adjourned under sub-r. (1), that is, in the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court and for a longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation under r. 67 shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it. It is clear, therefore, that, if a sale is adjourned for one month, the decree-holder must either obtain a waiver from the judgment-debtor or cause a fresh proclamation to be issued. The only reasonable interpretation which can be placed upon the application of the 4th February 1909, read with the order of the Court recorded on the same date, is that the judgment-debtors consented to waive merely a fresh proclamation of sale. Indeed the order of the Court placed the matter beyond the region of controversy. The contention of the decree-holder that the judgment-debtors waived not merely the issue of a fresh proclamation but also all irregularities that might have taken place in connection with the writs of attachment and proclamation of sale previously issued cannot be supported. Much reliance was placed upon the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Giridhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain (2). That case, in our opinion, is clearly distinguishable. There the judgment-debtor had agreed that, if a postponement of one month was granted, the attachment and the notification of sale would be maintained. The sale was postponed on this condition and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that as the judgment-debtor had agreed that the attachment and notification of sale should be maintained he could not subsequently take objection to the notification by stating that there was an error in it. The petition amounted to an admission on his part, that the notification was correct, or that, at any rate, there was no such mistake or irregularity as would be likely to mislead. On this ground it was ruled that the judgment-debtor could not impeach the validity of the sale proclamation on the allegation that the amount of the revenue payable for the property sold had been incorrectly stated therein. Similarly, in the case of Raja Thakur Barham v. Anantaram Marwari (3), the judgment-debtor in his petition for adjournment of the sale, had agreed not to urge any irregularity in the service of the sale proclamation. It was consequently held that he had waived all irregularities in the service of the sale proclamation previously issued. The cases of Noorul Hossain v. Oomatoool Fatima (4) and Taran Singh v. Girija Kripa (5) are distinguishable on a similar ground. The decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Arunachelam v. Arunachelam (6) is of no assistance to the decree-holder purchaser, because there the judgment-debtor, though aware of the misdescription of the property in the sale proclamation on which he relied in support of his application for reversal of the sale, had intentionally kept silent; under such circumstances it was ruled that it would be very difficult to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property if the judgment-debtor could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached and about to be sold which he knew well but of which the execution creditor or decree-holder might be perfectly ignorant. In the case before us, we are clearly of opinion that the judgment-debtors waived the issue of a fresh proclamation of sale, they did not waive any objection in respect of the proclamation previously issued, nor, indeed, is there any evidence that they were aware of the contents of such proclamation. The ground, therefore, upon which the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the application for reversal of the sale cannot be upheld.

The question next arises, whether the sale can be supported. As already explained the Subordinate Judge has found that the value of the property exposed for sale was grossly understated in the sale proclamation. The decree-holder landlord deliberately stated the value to be Rs. 4,000. A bonus of Rs. 13,600 had been paid at the creation of the putni and deducting the rent reserved the annual profit was between Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 5,000. To value a property of this description for which a substantial premium had been paid at one year's purchase, was obviously inexcusable. There were no bidders present and the decree-holder who had valued the property at Rs. 4,000 offered a first bid of Rs. 20,000 and purchased it for that sum. The Subordinate Judge has held that the value is at least Rs. 40,000; according to the Appellants the value ought to be taken to be a lac of rupees at twenty years' purchase upon the net annual income. The case, therefore, falls within the principle recognized by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (7), because unquestionably there was a deliberate and gross misstatement of the value of the property calculated to mislead intending purchasers. Our attention, however, was invited to the decision of this Court in Abdul Kashem v. Benode Lal (8) in which a contrary view appears to have been maintained. But the learned Judges there overlooked the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and the view taken is consequently not binding upon this Court. [See Basanta Kumari v. Ram Kanai (9), Nanda Kumar v. Gobinda Mohan (10) and Sivadurga v. Rajmohan (11)]. In our opinion, it is plain that the object of the decree-holder was to seize a very valuable property for the smallest possible price; that it was with this object in view that he deliberately misstated the value, and that, in the sale which followed, he secured for Rs. 20,000 without any competition what is worth at least twice if not four or five times the sum he paid. Apart from the question, therefore, whether or not there were other irregularities in connexion with the sale the judgment-debtors are entitled to have the sale vacated on the one ground mentioned.

The question finally arises, whether upon the application of two of the judgment-debtors the sale should be set aside in its entirety. The sale was, as we have already stated, of the entire putni; the landlord decree-holder was not bound to recognise and did not as a matter of fact recognise any distribution of shares amongst the tenants. Under these circumstances in our opinion the sale ought to be set aside in its entirety. It was ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Unnada v. Erskine (12) that in a suit brought by a sharer in a putni to set aside the sale thereof held under the Putni Regulation, the suit ought to be so framed as to seek the reversal of the sale of the entire property. This principle was also applied in the cases of Ram Churan v. Drobomoyee (13), Suresh v. Akkori (14), Gangadhar Sarkar v. Khaja Abdul Aziz (15) and Bideshar v. Sriksissen (16). No doubt, it may be urged that the other judgment-debtors have not been joined as opposite parties to the application now before us. But there is no force in this contention. The other judgment-debtors as we have explained, preferred separate applications and as the applications were heard together and tried as if they constituted one proceeding, they may, in substance, be taken to have been consolidated. In this view, there can be no room for controversy that the sale should be set aside in its entirety.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged. The application of the fourth and fifth judgment-debtors is granted and the sale is set aside. The Appellants are entitled to their costs from the decree-holder both in this Court and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at ten gold mohurs.

Nos. 49, 57 and 59 of 1910.

These appeals are directed against orders of the Subordinate Judge by which he has dismissed the applications of two sets of judgment-debtors and of the representative-in-interest of another set of judgment-debtors for reversal of the sale which we have just set aside. As regards these applications the objection was taken in the Court below that they were barred by limitation, as they were made more than thirty days after the date of the sale. The judgment-debtors sought to bring their case within sec. 18 of the Limitation Act. That section provides for an extension of time only when it is established that the applicant has been kept by means of fraud from the knowledge of his right or of the title on which it is founded. In view of the decision of this Court in the case of Kailash Chandra Halder v. Bissonath Paramanic (17), it is difficult to hold that the applicants have brought themselves within the scope of sec. 18, and in this view their applications cannot be maintained. But as we have already explained, the proper way to consider all these applications is to treat them as consolidated, the first in point of time, that by the fourth and fifth judgment-debtors, as the principal application and the subsequent ones by the other judgment-debtors, as applications by them to be made parties to the proceeding then pending before the Court. From this point of view the applications by these judgment-debtors may be treated as in support of the application by the fourth and fifth judgment-debtors and, as that application has been successful, no other question arises for consideration. These appeals, therefore, must also be allowed, and the orders of the Court below discharged. The sale will stand reversed in its entirety. In these appeals, however, the parties will pay their own costs both here and in the Court below.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), sec. 15, Rules under—Commissioners, election of, qualification for—Person 'authorised' to vote for corporation if eligible for election.

Any one possessing qualifications set out in Rule 2 of the Rules framed under sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act and duly registered as a voter as provided by Rules 4 to 12 of the said Rules is eligible under those Rules for election as a Commissioner ; and the fact that such a person is registered as voter under Rule 8 as a representative of a corporation instead of being registered in his own capacity does not disqualify him for election.

RASH BEHARI GHOSHAL v. J. C. STALKART.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 2nd of September 1911 against the decree of Babu Ambika Charan Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah Hughly, dated the 9th of August 1911, affirming the decree of Babu Baroda Kinker Mukherjee, Munsif, 3rd Court of Howrah, dated the 19th of April 1910.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by J. C. Stalkart for a declaration that the Plaintiff was a qualified voter and as such entitled to stand as a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner for Ward No. 1 in the town of Howrah and for a perpetual injunction restraining Rash Behari Ghosal and Kanai Lal Sadhukhan (Defendants Nos. 2 and 3) from considering themselves as duly elected and from acting as Municipal Commissioners of the town of Howrah. The Plaintiff further prayed in the suit for another perpetual injunction restraining the Chairman of the Howrah Municipality (Defendant No. 1) from allowing Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to act as Commissioners.

The Plaintiff was a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner and sent in two nomination papers (Exs. 5 and 7) in favour of himself as representing Harton & Co. The Vice-Chairman rejected these nomination papers on the ground that the fact of Mr. J. C. Stalkart being authorised to vote did not under the Election Rules make him qualified to stand for election as Commissioner. Mr. Stalkart however further claimed that even in his personal capacity he was qualified for election as he paid the requisite amount of rates and that he was no other than the person entered as C. Stalkart in the voters' list as a qualified voter.

The Vice-Chairman disallowed both these claims of the Plaintiff and rejected the nomination papers. His decision was confirmed by the Chairman.

The Plaintiff's case in this suit was that C. Stalkart who was shown in the voters' list as a qualified voter was no other than the Plaintiff and that his nomination papers (Exs. 5 and 7) both of which were in favour of J. C. Stalkart as representing Harton & Co. and which complied with the Election Rules ought not to have been rejected by the Vice-Chairman of the Municipality.

The Munsif who tried the suit found (i) that the Plaintiff, J. C. Stalkart and C. Stalkart, in the Voters' list was one and the same person, (ii) that the Vice-Chairman should have known this, (iii) that as representative of Messrs. Harton & Co., the Plaintiff was qualified to be elected a Commissioner, although the Plaintiff's case as made in his plaint was that he was entitled to stand for election in his own capacity, and (iv) that of the two exhibits relied upon by him (the others having been admitted by his counsel as invalid), one, Ex. 5, in favour of J. C. Stalkart as representing Harton & Co., fulfilled the requirements of the Election Rules but the other own Ex. 7 was time-barred. On these findings, the Munsif declared that the Plaintiff was a qualified voter and as such was entitled to stand for election, and that the election of Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was illegal and ultra vires, and also issued an injunction on Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 restraining them from acting as Municipal Commissioners.

RASH BEHARI GHOSHAL v. J. C. STALKART.

The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance and also granted an injunction on Defendant No. 1 as prayed for by the Plaintiff.

Reliance was placed on both sides on the following rules framed under sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

R. 2. "Every male person shall be eligible to vote who has attained the age of 21 years, has been resident within the limits of the Municipality for not less than 12 months, immediately preceding the election, has been duly registered as provided in rr. 4 to 12 inclusive, and who. . . .

R. 8. "The Chairman shall not less than 30 days before the date of election, send a letter to every incorporated Company entitled to vote, requesting it to fill in a form, which shall accompany such letter with the name of the person authorised to vote on behalf of such corporation and to return the same within seven days. Upon receipt of the form the Chairman shall cause the name stated therein to be entered in the register revised under r. 9, and the person whose name is thus entered shall be deemed to be duly authorised to vote on behalf of the said corporation."

"R. 13. "Any person qualified to vote under these rules, and not disqualified under sec. 57 of the Act, shall be qualified to be elected a Commissioner."

Babu Muhendra Nath Roy (with him Babus Purnush Chandra Mitra and Manmatha Nath Roy).—Having regard to the statutory provisions of sec. 15 reproduced in r. 2, viz., that a male person alone is entitled to vote, and that the rules must be consistent with the provisions of the Act, r. 8 is ultra vires. Assuming that an incorporated Company has a power to vote, Plaintiff was not qualified to stand for election. According to r. 13, only such persons as were qualified to vote under these rules could stand for election; the Plaintiff was not eligible to vote under r. 2, he was only authorised to vote under r. 8. The Plaintiff ought not to have been allowed to make a new case. In the plaint he relied on his own capacity; he could not afterwards come in as representative of Messrs. Harton & Co., and succeed on the strength of Ex. 5 which described him as representing "W. H. Harton & Co., Ratepayers."

Mr. K. B. Dutt (with him Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee).—J. C. Stalkart being duly authorised could of course stand. Refers to r. 11 of the Election Rules:

R. 11. "The register thus prepared and amended shall be the final register of persons entitled to vote whether at a general election or at any bye-election &c." The name of J. C. Stalkart having been entered in the register, he was entitled to vote, and therefore was qualified to be elected a Commissioner under r. 13. R. 8 is not ultra vires.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy in reply.—Although according to r. 11, the Plaintiff was entitled to vote, it did not entitle him to vote in his own capacity, but only authorised him to vote as a representative. R. 13 refers to a case where a person is qualified to vote in his own capacity.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiff-Respondent in this appeal, Mr. J. C. Stalkart, was a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner in Ward No. 1 of the Howrah Municipality in 1909 and in compliance with Rule 14 of the Election Rules framed by the Local Government under secs. 15 and 69 of the Bengal Municipal Act III of 1884 as amended by Act IV of 1894 and Act II of 1896 submitted 5 nomination forms to the Chairman in form B. These were numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 and of these all but No. 5 were rejected as failing to comply with the provisions of the law. The nomination form No. 5 was in due course placed before the returning officer. In column 2 of the forms the name of the candidate was entered as J. C. Stalkart and in column 4 in which the particulars of qualification as a voter have to be stated the entry was "representing W. H. Harton & Co., ratepayers." This information was required as Rule 13 of the Rules provides that "any person qualified to vote under these Rules and not disqualified under sec. 57 of the Act shall be qualified to be elected as a Commissioner." The returning officer held that Mr. J. C. Stalkart was not qualified for election as a Commissioner because the ground on which he claimed to be entitled to a vote was that under Rule 8 of the Rules he had been authorised to vote on behalf of a corporation, i.e., the firm of Messrs. W. H. Harton & Co. The returning officer held that a person authorised to vote under Rule 8 was not a qualified voter as required by Rule 2 and Rule 13.

RASH BEHARI GHOSHAL v. J. C. STALKART.

Rule 2 provides, every male person shall be eligible to vote who has attained the age of 21 years, has been resident within the limits of the Municipality for not less than 12 months immediately preceding the election, has been duly registered as provided in Rules 4 to 12 inclusive and has paid rates and taxes up to a certain amount during the year preceding the election. Mr. J. C. Stalkart represented that he was the same person who was entered in the ratepayers' roll as

Mr. C. Stalkart, that he had paid rates and taxes aggregating some thousands of rupees and was fully qualified under Rule 2 of the Rules. The returning officer in his order recorded that he was not satisfied that Mr. J. C. Stalkart was the same person as Mr. C. Stalkart and being of opinion that on that account Mr. Stalkart was not qualified in his personal capacity as a voter he held that he was not entitled to stand as a candidate for election as a Commissioner of the Howrah Municipality. Mr. Stalkart applied against this order under Rule 29 of Rules to the Chairman of the Municipality who was also the District Magistrate. The Chairman upheld the order of the returning officer on two main grounds, first, that a person authorised under Rule 8 to vote for a corporation could not be considered on that account a qualified voter, and, secondly, that from the Vice-Chairman's report it was clear that he had ample grounds for his belief that C. Stalkart was not a mere clerical error for J. C. Stalkart but that the names referred to different persons. The Chairman went on to say that in his opinion the Vice-Chairman's action in the matter was perfectly regular and that he had acted throughout in good faith. He therefore rejected the application. It is to be noticed that in dealing with the question under Rule 8 read with Rule 2 the Chairman appears to have questioned the legality of the Rules passed by the Local Government and in dealing with the second question he expressed no opinion at all of his own on Mr. Stalkart's representation.

Mr. Stalkart having been rejected as a candidate for election the election was duly held with regard to the other candidates who were held to be qualified for election and Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the present suit were duly elected as Commissioners for Ward No. I.

Mr. Stalkart then instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Howrah against the Chairman of the Howrah Municipality as Defendant No. 1 and the two elected Commissioners as Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, to have it declared that he was a qualified voter in the Municipality of Howrah and as such entitled to stand for election as a Municipal Commissioner for Ward No. I of the Municipality, and to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining Defendant No. 1, the Chairman of the Municipality, from declaring Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to be duly elected as Commissioners under Rule 16 of the Election Rules and allowing them to act as Commissioners of the Municipality of Howrah, and also to obtain a perpetual injunction against Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 restraining them from acting as duly elected Commissioners of the Municipality of Howrah.

The Munsif found that the Plaintiff, Mr. J. C. Stalkart, was the same person as Mr. C. Stalkart who was entered in the register of ratepayers, and that in fact from the records in the Municipal office there could not be a shadow of doubt that he was so. He further held that the Vice-Chairman who was acting as returning officer at the election must have known that Mr. J. C. Stalkart and Mr. Stalkart were the same person, and he further found that Mr. Stalkart was a qualified voter in his personal capacity, as he fulfilled all the requirements of Rule 2 of the Election Rules. He held accordingly that the Vice-Chairman was not justified in rejecting the nomination form put in by Mr. Stalkart. He held that the Chairman of the Municipality had before him the same information as the returning officer and that he was not justified in rejecting the application made to him by Mr. Stalkart under Rule 29 of the Election Rules. He further held that the construction put on Rule 8 by the Chairman was not correct. He held that Rules 2 and 8 must be read together and that Mr. Stalkart was a qualified voter and therefore eligible for election as a Commissioner under Rule 13 and gave him a declaratory decree to that effect. He further held that no injunction could issue against Defendant No. 1, the Chairman of the Municipality, as prayed for, but he granted an injunction against Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 restraining them from acting as Commissioners of the Municipality.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appealed, and a cross-appeal was preferred by the Plaintiff against the judgment and decree of the Munsif so far as he refused to grant an injunction against the Chairman of the Howrah Municipality. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the judgment and decree of the Munsif granting Mr. Stalkart a declaratory decree that he was a qualified voter of the Municipality and so eligible for election as a Commissioner and granting an injunction against Defendants Nos. 2 and 3. He decreed the cross-appeal, set aside the decision refusing to grant an injunction against the Chairman of the Municipality and granted the injunction prayed for by the Plaintiff.
